All of this is a sort of a book review. I'm in the process of reading Teaching as a Subversive Activity by Neil Postman & Charles Weingartner ($5.95, Delacorte Press, NYC.) They have one of the most exciting proposals for revolutionary changes in education that I have ever heard. The excitement is largely subjective--they have thought out and written down objections and proposals which have been rolling around in a totally disorganized fashion in my own head for some time. But to find a well-thought-out rationale for abolishing grades, syllabi, "courses" as we know them, to see reasoned arguments for teaching being made a true profession by making the teachers the employees (in a sense) of their students in the way a psychiatrist is an employee of his or her client...This is built-in excitement. Add to this the central theme that the focus of teaching is not the subject but the learner-- what a revolutionary concept!--and the walls of academe must indeed tremble before the encroachment of relevance. Read the book. It has to turn your head on.

In the coming weeks, CULTURNATIVES will deal with many different aspects of cultural alternatives. If you're into it and want to rap, or if you want Mother Earth News, stop by the Draft Counseling Office in 418E SU 2nd floor. You'll have to take your chances because draft counseling comes first, but if we're free we'd enjoy sharing ideas.

Discover 'Who Moved The Stone' Tonight

"College Life" is tonight at 8 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

Larry Showalter, Campus Crusade for Christ Staff member, will be the speaker. His talk "Who Moved the Stone?" will present evedences of the resurrection of Jesus of Nazareth.

Folk singing and refreshments well be part of the evening.

Last week at "College Life," Wayne Harvey and Co. from Brattleboro performed and shared through music and word the relevance Christ has had in their lives. They helped found "The House," a place in Brattleboro where drug addicts can hear about the love of Jesus.

Wayne formerly sang with the rock groip "The Trophies." He recently gave a concert at Springfield College much like Wednesday night's. His songs told of how his life has changed through Jesus and how others can experience the same.

IM Wrestling Finals Completed

By MICHAEL FOX
MDC Staff

The tenth annual intramural wrestling championships were held in Boyden Auxiliary Gymnasium on Monday night. Wrestling has always been one of the most popular intramural sports, and was demonstrated by the large enthusiastic crowd on hand.

Phi Mu Delta Fraternity had accumulated an insurmountable number of points, even before the finals, to be named team champions. They were the second team to have won the championship for the third time. Kappa Sigma was the first team to accomplish this.

The first event of the night was in the 128 pound class, with Leffler going against Parent. Neither wrestler has over-powering strength as they both relied on technique to subdue the other. Parent performed the best to win a decision, 4-1.

In the 137 pound class, Rice jumped out into a quick 3-0 lead over Choiunard. Choiunard could only come backwith one point on an escape, as Rice got the decision, 3-1.

The 147 pound class produced the first pin of the night. Dalquist, already ahead in points, 2-0, gained the pin over Daly at 1:11.

The 157 pound class was the most exciting of the night. Both Plunkett and Schneid showed great strength on defense. Neither was able to score on the other in regulation time. However, Plunkett scored a take down in the first period of the overtime to win, 2-0.

The 167 pound class between Kantor and Souza also went into overtime. Kantor junped into a 2-0 lead, but Souza came back to tie at two before regulation time ended. Kantor persisted, though, and scored a take down in overtime to win 4-2.

In the 177 pound category Keith, the only defending champion from last year, was looking to repeat over Castricone. Both fought scorelessly for most of the match with Castricone possibly having the advantage in riding time. But in the last 20 seconds Keith was able to score one point to remain class champion.

The 187 pound catagory produced the best wrestler of the night. Pikkaranian gave away five inches in height and several inches reach to McDowell. However, Pikkaranian had the strength, quickness and skill to defeat McDowell. With an amazingly quick shoot to the legs Pikkaranian scored the first take down to go ahead 2-0. An excape added another point to the score. McDowell came back with a fine take down of his own to close to within one point. But it was not enough as Pikkaranian held on for the victory, 3-2.

The 197 pound class pit Brown's technique against Kleiber's strength. As should be the case in wrestling, Brown won by a decision, 4-0.

In the unlimited catagory Marchando at 245 pounds went against Hale at 220 pounds. Marchando came out quick to go ahead on a take down, 2-0.

Baseballers In Training

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

With only a couple of weeks left in the winter sports season it's now time to focus a little on the sports that will be covering the sports pages in the spring.

Today's focus is on the Redman baseball team which is coming off a 15-11 season last year and is looking forward to the up and coming season with real optimism and enthusiasm.

On the 20th of this month the team heads south for a seven day trip that will see the Redmen playing six games, two with Wake Forest, two tith Virginia, two with Maryland and one with Franklin and Marshall of Pennsylvania.

With limited facilities to practice in the team will be using this trip as preparation for the tough northern schedule that it will face opening on the 10th of April at A.I.C.

Currently in its fifth week of practice the diamond men have had a tough early season with the weather and with the gymnastics tourney this weekend they will have only three days for hitting before heading south next week.

This season's team will be a young unit with only three seniors on the squad. There will be a total of eight freshman making the southern trip. Tri-Captains for the Redmen are pitcher Jach Bernardo, a senior, third-baseman Jack Conroy, also a senior and junior outfielder Brian Martin.

On paper the pitching staff would appear to be the strongest part of the team. With possibly the biggest and strongest group of hurlers in the nation coach Bergquist is looking for them to get the competative edge they will need for the northern games on the southern trip.

The infield and outfield have depth at all positions and both units should be strong in the defensive departments. With the limited hitting in pre-season this southern swing will be of use to sharpen the hitting eyes.

Catching is four deep with all the candidates having a good shot at starting.

For the season ahead, the Yankee Conference has expanded to a 15 game schedule. The Conference should once again be the strongest in New England with the Redmen, UConn, Rhode Island and Maine the top contenders.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Libra individuals are ultra-sensitive. The early part of their lives may not be exactly happy. But, in later years, Libra thrives. Many persons, who previously took Libra for granted, begin to show appreciation as the years create a mellowing effect.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Some who would not see your side in past, now begin to take new notice. You don't get things exactly your own way, but there is marked improvement. Keep watch on health, work methods.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A child who is too demanding may need mild discipline. Be strong enough to do what you feel is best. Giving in will not accomplish objective. Improve safety measures at home.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Work quietly. Utilize material at hand. Avoid radical procedures. Check insurance. Be positive you can fulfill commitments. Hold off on long range plans.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Finish what you start. Spread influence. Communicate through publishing, advertising, written messages. Take nothing for granted. Money is involved. Some try false flattery.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Finish what you start. Spread influence. Communicate through publishing, advertising, written messages. Take nothing for granted. Money is involved. Some try false flattery.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Look into matter which could affect security. Obtain hint from Leo message. Take initiative. Make up your own mind. One who proposes get rich quick scheme is covering lack of knowledge.

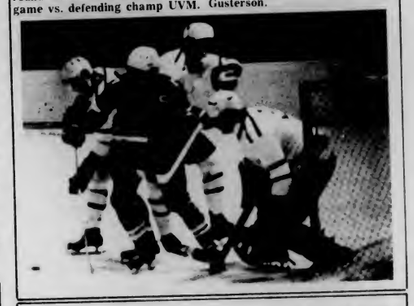
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Element of surprise is important. Don't telegraph moves. Know when to be discreet. An Aquarian individual plays prominent role. Accent on anticipating moods of others.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Stress versatility. Don't feel tied to only one procedure, method. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Ask questions; obtain answers. Avoid the superficial. Social life accelerates.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may be trying to do too much at once. One you try to impress wants results rather than flashy promise. Know this and act accordingly. Be conservative in claims, demands.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be flexible. Being stubborn now can prove costly. Make way for progress. Emphasis on willingness to make necessary changes. News from a distance is featured. Be analytical.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Some friends act in eccentric manner. Don't attempt to mix business with pleasure. Stakes are apt to be high. Sales talk from associate may be filled with empty phrases. Respond accordingly.



PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your judgement, intuitive qualities are apt to be off-center. Know this and let mate, partner, close associate set pace. Co-operate in community project. Be a good listener, observer.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are sensitive, dynamic, have original ideas and possess natural qualities of creative leadership. Key is to avoid those who take advantage of you. You are sympathetic and, too often, fall for sob story. Start being a bit more selfish. Think of your own basic needs. By October, you will be in a better position emotionally and financially.

Pucksters In Playoff Action At UVM

By DAN KAMAL
MDC Staff

It's the start of a "new" season and possibly of an era. Tonight at the University of Vermont, the UMass hockey team faces the Catamounts in Division II playoff action with faceoff set at 7:30. It marks the first time ever that a Redmen hockey team has competed in the post-season run for the top spot in Division II.

The Redmen are currently playing their best hockey of the season. In winning five of its last six games, the team has scored 51 goals while giving up only 17. This indicates very definitely that the pucksters have recovered the sharpness which they obviously lost after the 45 day layoff between semesters.

The team is much stronger than the one that dropped a 5-3 decision to these same Catamounts at Vermont last month. Despite the fact that the lines which are working so well together now were not permanently set at the time, and also the fact that the lines had to be reshuffled when Pat Keenan was hit with a 10-minute misconduct penalty, the Redmen stayed close throughout that game.

As far as Vermont's style, they play a close-checking, tight game and rely heavily on all American goalie Dave Reece. When I asked Coach Jack Canniff which Catamount he expects the most trouble from he quickly and emphatically replied, "Reece. When he's on, they're awfully tough".

A big factor in this crucial contest may be the site. Gutterson Field House is sure to be packed with 4000 partisan Vermont fans. This crowd is much in the style of the Curry Hicks Cage basketball fans. However, both Canniff and defenseman Don Lowe, while acknowledging that these fans might be beneficial to the home team, felt that they had no adverse effect on the visitors. Said Lowe, "They're very knowledgeable fans and they're not wild, so although they may edge Vermont on a bit, I don't really think they will affect us."

The Catamounts are coming off a stunning loss to Norwich University. However, Canniff feels that they suffered a "down" after big victories over Bowdoin College and Army. He doesn't expect this to carry over into tonight's fray.

One of the major factors in the Redmen solid play of late, is the performance of Eric Scrafield. Since Canniff put him on the line centering Bob Shea and Don Riley, the "Red Baron" has responded with a rash of goals. In praising the junior forward, Canniff labeled his play as "fantastic."

A must for tonight's game is a good performance from P. J. Flaherty. The junior goaltender has been on fire of late with particularly good outings against Hamilton College and Merrimack College, and since games against Vermont are inevitably low-scoring affairs, it is imperative that Flaherty continue his hot hand.

There's a lot on the line tonight. Anything can happen in single-loss elimination tourneys, but as Canniff concluded, "We have the personnel. The kids have worked hard this year, and this is a big opportunity."

REDMEN ATTACK-Shown here in action against Merrimack last Saturday in a game UMass won, 10-1, the Redmen pucksters will be out to defeat the University of Vermont tonight at Burlington. Trackmen Complete Season In IC4A's

By ROBERT MEDEIROS
MDC Staff

The UMass track team concluded its indoor track season last weekend in the IC4A Indoor Track and Field Championships which were held at Princeton University. Villanova, the track power of the East, won its fifth consecutive IC4A team title.

The meet was a letdown for the Redmen as they failed to match their earlier championship performances. Dave Evans, competing in the 880, was the only Redmen to quality for the finals, but was forced to drop out of the race. Dave easily qualified for the finals with times in the trial heats of 1:57.5 and 1:56.2. Evans, running in the finals, was involved in a pile up at the start of the race which caused the race to be called back.

Evans fell down in the mix up and was shaken up. The race was restarted three minutes later as Evans was again involved in a mix up at the first curve in which he was cut off. Dave still managed to make a challenge in the race as he found himself in sixth place with only a third of the race remaining. It was at this time that an injury that Dave received in the first pile up forced him to retire from the race.

The hurdle team of Jim Graves and Gerry Spellman both qualified for the quarterfinals with third place finishes in the trials. Spellman was eliminated from further competition as he finished fourth in his quarterfinal. Graves was also eliminated from further competition as he finished fourth in his quarterfinal, even though posting a fast 7.5 clocking.

Ron Wayne and Larry Paulson competed in the trials of the mile. Wayne finished fourth in his heat, while Paulson finished fifth in his trial heat. Steve Levine was eliminated from further competition in the 600 with a third place finish in the trials. Eddie Arcaro competed in the 35-pound weight and the shotput, and turned in his usual fine performance.

The IC4A's marks the end of another successful indoor track season. The season opened with a tri-meet early in December against Yale and UConn. UConn edged out Yale by two points as UMass finished a far-off third. The next meet was against Brown, at Brown as UMass came together for the first time as a team. With only the mile relay remaining the Redmen trailed Brown by only a point. Brown went on to win the relay as UMass lost the meet 58 to 52. The team's performance in this meet was a great improvement over the previous meet as the team prepared for exams and Dartmouth.

The UMass track team traveled to Dartmouth after the semester break to start off the second half of the indoor season. Dartmouth was just coming off a ten point victory over UConn and appeared to be the stronger of the two teams. For the Redmen the Dartmouth meet was the day that everyone would put it all together. The UMass team completely outclassed the Dartmouth team as they ran to a stunning 73 to 31 victory. Ron Wayne continued to lead the way as he won his third straight double in dual meet competition with impressive wins in the mile and 2 mile.

The Redmen then traveled to Northeastern for what appeared on paper as a close meet as Northeastern had defeated Dartmouth by the same margin of points as the Redmen. The meet did not go right for UMass as they lost points early in the meet and were never able to make a serious attempt at victory. The Redmen lost 73 to 31, but the meet was just not indicative of the teams involved.

The first championship of the year was the Yankee Conference Championships held at UConn which saw UConn regain the title with UMass finishing in second place. This meet was marked by the fact that UMass had to outscore Rhode Island 19 to 3 in the last three events to overtake Rhose Island for second place. The seniors again did the job for the Redmen as Ron Wayne led the way with a ten point effort which included a first in the mile and a second in the 2 mile. Senior Dave Evans was the Yankee Conference champion in the 1000 as Eddie Arcaro was the Champion in the shotput.

The following week the Redmen traveled to UConn for the New England Championships. UMass finished fifth in the meet as BU upset the pre-meet favorites Northeastern and UConn. The strongest event of the day for UMass was the high hurdles as Jim Graves and Gerry Spellman finished second and third, respectively. Ron Wayne gave another strong performance as he placed second in the 2 mile. Eddie Arcaro finished second in the shot while Dave Evans finished third in the 1000.

The distance events were the strongest events for the Redmen this season. Ron Wayne is the leader of the distance men as he is the leading scorer on the team with 55 points compared to Ed Arcaro who finished second with 27 points. Coach O'Brien always counted on Ron for ten points, and it seemed that Ron always delivered. Tom Jasmin was Wayne's back up man in the 2 mile, and was most impressive with his third place finish in the Yankee Conference Championships. Larry Paulson backs up Wayne in the mile, and turned in his best performance of his career with his best double in the New Englands.

The sprints and hurdles were the next strongest events for the Redmen as the hurdle team of Jim Graves and Gerry Spellman represented the best "one-two punch" in New England. The dash trio of Walter Davo, Ron Harris, and Tony Pendleton also represents one of the strongest groups in the East.

The jumping events were also some of UMass's strongest events. Ed Shaughnessy performed in both the high jump and the long jump, and was the team's fourth leading scorer. Cal Carpenter also performed in the high jump, and had a third place finish in the Yankee Conference championship. Rip Dyer was UMass's most consistent performer in the long jump.

The middle distance events were the team's weaker events in the beginning of the year. By the end of the season UMass was scoring their share of points in these events. This season seen the emergence of Steve Levine as an outstanding runner in the 600. Al Mangan continued to show good form in the 600 and the relays.

Dave Evans came back from an injury to establish himself as one of the best 1000 yard men in the East. Arnie Morse backed up Evans in the 1000, and continued to show great improvement in his running. John Maloney showed himself to be one of the finest freshman in New England, off his fourth place finish in the Yankee Conference Championships.

Eddie Arcaro continued to carry the bulk of the throwing events. Arcaro won the Yankee Conference Shotput Championship, and the following week placed second in the New Englands. Eddie also holds the school record for the shotput.

YOU BETTER WATCH OUT—University police have set up radar traps at a few places on campus, trying to bag anybody who goes over the speed limit. Someone else thought that 20 mph was a bit unrealistic so he introduced a bill into the Student Senate to raise the limit to 35 mph. See the story on page three for all the details. Senate Gives $4400 To Harambe

By BETH GOODELL
Senate Reporter

Last night's Student Senate meeting was taken up largely in the consideration of the budgets of a number of student organizations. The most hotly disputed debate was over the request of Harambe, a campus 'Third World' organization, to be funded $4400 for the rest of the current semester.

The other budgets considered were requests for funds for next year for the following organizations: A Better Chance, Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs, Committee on Poverty, Action Lab, Rugby Club, and Black Mass Communications Project. Debate on the Communications Project and other groups continued after the writing of this article.

There were a few matters other than budgets considered last evening. The Chief Justice of the General Court of Justice on campus was present to subpoena the Senate to send a representative to its upcoming hearings concerning the payment of salaries to Senate officers which was defeated by popular referendum Tuesday. The Court has been petitioned to review the retroactive clause of the salaries bill, which stands in spite of the referendum. It has also been petitioned to declare vacant the chair of the Presidency of the Senate and to examine the section of the Senate constitution which allows a non-student to be a Senate officer.

It was announced that a special meeting of the Senate has been called for Sunday, March 14, at 7 p.m. The regular agenda of the Senate will be followed at that meeting. Items on this agenda have been accumulating while the Senate devotes its regular meetings to budgetary matters.

Harambe came to the Senate requesting $4400 and was given $4000 of it, following an hour of extensive debate. Spokesmen of the group defined their organization as a 'Third World' organization on campus which serves as a cultural and social agent for the non-white population of Chinese, Japanese, Arabian, and African students. They plan to hold social affairs for a projected membership of 1500, to run a national conference for 'Third World' people, and to become linked with a national organization. The bulk of the funds allocated are to be spent on the conference to be held on campus.

Debate centered around the issues of how worthy the organization and its cause are, and how much the Senate could afford to spend this year. Senators asked the Harambe spokesmen many questions concerning their goals and rationalizations for existence. A general consensus seemed to develop in the Senate that the group does serve a worthy cause. After this, the basic question was just how much the Senate could afford.

Attempts were made to cut minor categories and succeeded in shaving $400 from the budget. The Senators affirmed their belief in the general goals of the organization, however, by defeating a measure which would have eliminated all of the categories which are largely to pay for the national conference. This would have been a $2400 cut.

Several Senators expressed fears that the Senate could not afford to spend the $4000 because that would leave the Senate with approximately $5500 in the three funds from which to make its expenditures for the rest of the semester. Senators spoke up to urge that the appropriation be made, citing the 'Third World' cause as one that should be of high priority. The Senate then voted 34-21-5 in favor of budgeting Harambe for the remainder of the semester.

Next year's budgets for four groups in the Community Action Foundation were then considered. Amendments were offered by individual Senators in three of the groups: A Better Chance (ABC) the Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs, and Action Lab.

The ABC budget request was for $4500. A reduction of $1575 was requested by a Senator and will be considered by the Senate Budgets Committee in its final recommendation to the Senate of the budget later in March.

The Committee on Nutrition's budget, as recommended by the Budgets Committee, was for $1770.

An amendment to decrease the budget by $200 was requested by a Senator and will be considered by the Budgets Committee.

Action Lab requested a budget of $2700 for its work in prison reform and the education of inmates next year. A Senator requested a decrease of $525 in the budget. The amendment to this budget will be considered, along with those made in the budgets of ABC and the Committee on Nutrition, at a hearing tomorrow evening of the Budgets Committee.

The Committee on Poverty's budget recommendation of $1530 was also presented to the Senate but consideration was postponed for one week.

A $600 budget request was made on the Senate floor for the Rugby Club following defeat of a motion to strike the budget. There has been some confusion over the Rugby account last year, but Ways and Means cleared it up and found the account to be in excellent order. This had been one of the reasons for the strike motion earlier. The $600 request will be heard by the Budgets Committee.

More complete details of the meeting will be included in tomorrow's Collegian.

Gluckstern Grilled At Provost's Roast

By JEFF THOMPSON
MDC Staff

Thirty-five members of the local chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) participated in the annual "Provost's Roast" last night in the Campus Center. Newly appointed Vice-Chancellor Robert Gluckstern gave a speech on the rewards to faculty which was followed by a question and answer session.

Gluckstern explained UMass policies on tenure, promotion, and system of merit raises and was challenged on the policies for the rest of the meeting.

"Tenure is a lifetime contract of a sizable fraction of a million dollars," declared Gluckstern to the professors, "and you must consider the recommendation as wishing this person for the next thirty or forty years to be a senior policy maker of the department."

He said that the Board of Trustees requires a vote in every department of whether a personnel committee of that department should exist. The Trustees encourage that the committee exist and its job is to determine which faculty members deserve tenure or a promotion.

The faculty members must be informed that he is being considered so that he may supplement additional information, explained Gluckstern, while the personnel committee considers the candidate's strengths in the three areas of teaching, scholarship (research and publication) and service.

From there, said Gluckstern, the recommendation goes to the college personnel committee where the proposal is restudied and, if approved, sent further to the Provost's office. Then it is referred by steps to the Chancellor, the President, and finally to the Board of Trustees.

Gluckstern revealed that merit raise recommendations rely heavily on departmental evaluation with minor adjustments' being made by the college Dean to compensate for over agressive department heads.

Gluckstern then said that the only readjustment of the recommendation would be the addition of credentials of "activities not in the mold of departmental evaluation. This could be information of the candidate's work in Residential Colleges, the Honor's program, the International Committee, or as the member of a committee or subcommittee of the Faculty Senate, which does take a lot of time." Effective use of Student questionnaires, and encouraging interdisciplinary courses will be two of Gluckstern's goals.

The question and answers started then with, "Seven years ago, Oswald Tippo consented to make a faculty handbook with policies helpful to both new and old staff, and every time we ask him about it, he still says that it is being worked on."

Gluckstern's answer: "I have not personally seen any work being done on one (handbook), but I hear that one is coming along." This provoked a bit of laughter. Gluckstern continued by saying that he knew there is one in the assembly.

Discussion of AAUP standards with respect to the Board of Trustees followed.

Discussion of salaries then started with twenty-two year Mathematics dept. member Professor Mary Jones' exclaiming that she has seen numerous examples over twenty two years of people performing routine administration work requiring no major policy decision and receiving salaries that were far too high.

She said, "I know a faculty member who worked hard at teaching for years and never got a raise, and then one year joined a committee, spent less time on his teaching and received a merit raise. Another left teaching to do some very routing administration work and received a huge disproportionate raise."

Gluckstern replied that some administrators get an administrative assistant, and then when the assistant threatens returning to a faculty position if he doesn't receive a raise, the administrator will realize that he, himself, will have the work of two to do. Consequently, he decides he had better give the raise, he concluded.

"There is some dishonesty with administrators," Gluckstern admitted.

In regard to a question on budgeting interdisciplinary courses, Gluckstern felt that "the departments have more autonomy than is healthy" because department heads tend to shun interdisciplinary courses in order to allocate the funds for their own department.

Free Play Suspension Explained

By JIM MITCHELL
MDC Staff

Free play time in Boyden has been suspended according to Paul Graham, Assistant Director of Intramural Activities. He said that basically, the problem has been created by the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastic League who will be occupying the cage this week.

Graham went on to say that not only has free play time been disrupted but also the Varsity basketball and baseball teams have had to suspend practice there until the tournament is over and will be temporarily using Boyden. The gym will be in the cage from March 11-13, and another week or so will be spent to remove the floor.

A far greater problem that faces the whole Physical Education Department is a general lack of space, said Graham. When Boyden was completed in 1964, its size was ideal for 9,000 students.

Graham feels that in order to alleviate overcrowding, and to provide the excellent hocky team with a rink, the much talked about Athletic Convocation center should be built. Not only will this ensure adequate athletic space in the future, but it could be used for concerts, he added.

Sickle Cell Research Fund Drive Begins

A student drive to collect funds for research about sickle cell anemia is in progress on the UMass campus.

According to a statement issued by the Committee Against Sickle Anemia: "There has been little awareness of and attention to the problem of the disease at either the state or national level, we feel that it is time for the community to act. Because Sickle Cell Anemia effects a lot of people, we as Black students feel that we must take the initiative to bring this problem of the campus community at large."

Plans have been drawn up to invite representatives from Howard University and consultants from neighboring communities and in the Hartford area.

The student committee against sickle cell anemia is presently attempting to formulate plans for programs to raise funds and stimulat awareness. Miss Ernestine Jewell and a small planning committee met in Dr. Glenn's office with program consultant Dr. Cass Turner on Feb. 8 and drew up proposed plans for the drive.

They are also attempting to get students who are interested to work toward these ends. Individuals interested in planning and/or working on the project should call Ernestine Jewell at 546-8589 or Sylvia Gladden at 546-8591.

Donations can be made at the office of Dr. Randolph W. Bromery, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs in the Whitmore Building, a spokesman for the committee said.

The students enrolled in the CCEBS program have announced their support of the drive, also, according to a spokesman for CCEBS.

Prospective Afro-Am Members Coming

Over the next few weeks the Department of Afro-American Studies will be presenting to the student body several candidates for fall of 1971. These prospective faculty members will be prsented to the community either in formal lectures following which questions and answers will be entertained or informal rap sessions at the Black Cultural Center's Coffee Shop.

The members of the department as well as the Black Studies Majors are very interested in having as much student participation as possible in these interviews for several reasons:

1. It gives the students the opportunity to hear the candidate's political and intellectual views.
2. It gives the students an opportunity to voice to the Department of Afro-American Studies their approval or disapproval of the person in queston.
3. It gives the candidate some idea as to where we as students are coming from. Very few serious minded revolutionaries are interested in coming to a campus of bourgeois, bullshit students.

The next scheduled visit is on Thursday, March 11th when Professor Acklyn Lynch presently of Washington, D.C. will be speaking in Mahar Auditorium (SBA) at 8 p.m. He is a sociologist primarily interested in political science and will be speaking on "Pan Africanism: Political Developments in the Black World Since World War II".

Please note: The visit of Julius Lester previously scheduled for Monday, March 15th has been temporarily postponed.

Students Arrested On Drug Charges

Two off-campus arests occured last night at approximately 7 p.m. at the Rolling Green Apartments. State Police reported that UMass students were arrested on drug charges.

David D. O'Conner of 105 Brattle St., Worcester, was charged with possession of marijuana and being present where an illegal drug was used. Charles A. Ginsburg of 28 Underhill St., Winthrop, was charged with possession of marijuana and intent to sell harmful drug amphetamine.

USCC Presents Reasons For Tuition Opposition

Since several bills have been filed in the Legislature petitioning for a substantial tuition increase for all state colleges and universities in Massachusetts, University and State Communications Council, members of the Student Senate, and students from other schools have been working feverishly to educate their parents, legislators and other students about the adverse affects a tuition increase would have on students.

Below is a rationale, written by members of USCC detailing the reasons why there should be no increase in tuition fees.

1. "Tuition charges are unsound because they are based on an erroneous principle: that higher education is a luxury and a privilege, not a service and a necessity" - Henry Steele Commanger.
2. When discussing the question of a tuition increase no significant emphasis has been placed on the total cost of education at the University - tuition plus required fees, room and board.
3. Raising the tuition fee will destroy the diversity in American higher education. For low tuition attempts to equalize the educational opportunities between the poor and the rich.
4. Our present educational system recognizes the need and provides for free educational opportunity through high school. Now this opportunity should be extended through college; for no longer is higher education a luxury for the rich, but a necessity for all.
5. The argument that tuition should be levied on students bases on their ability to pay should be defeated on the basis that the families of the more affluent students are already paying taxes at a much higher rate in support of education.
6. There has been little attention given to the higher economic and tax benefits that a college student will in his lifetime return to the state.
7. Whereas, the point is made that if tuition is increased scholarship aid must also increase, yet present and past appropriations for scholarships have been inadequate.
8. One of the goals of public higher education is to equalize the opportunities for the rich and the poor. A larger loan program will defeat this purpose; for the poor student, after graduation, will be struggling again to meet all his financial obligations.

MOBE Plans Bus For Vets Rally

By LISA CHERNICK
MDC Staff

The Student Mobilization Committee announced at a meeting last night that it will sponsor a bus to the March thirteenth Veteran's Demonstration at Westover Air Force Base.

The chartered bus will leave UMass from the north side of the Campus Center parking lot at 10:00 a.m. Saturday. It will cost 50¢ round trip.

The High School Committee reported that it will leaflet secondary schools in the area, including Amherst Regional, Northhampton, and South Hadley High Schools to draw support for the April 24 anti-war demonstrations in Washington, D.C. and San Francisco. Also, it will set up tables at the schools to discuss the anti-war work of the MOBE.

Also announced by the MOBE is a demonstration against Vice-President Spiro Agnew March 18 at 6:30 at Joyce Square in Boston. This is to protest Agnew's alleged role as perpetrator of the war in Southeast Asia.

The Veteran's For Peace, sponsors of the March thirteenth demonstration at Westover, is a newly established anti-war group comprised of veterans of military service, according to Bernie Lougee, an SMC member.

Its purpose, said Lougee, is to make clear to Massachusetts residents that the anti-war movement is comprised of diverse elements-not solely students. Also, according to Lougee, the Veteran's For Peace expresses solidarity with active duty G.I.'s who labor under military "disapproval" in expressing their political opinions.

The Women's Committee is working on plans for teach-ins to help build the Nationwide Women's Contingent, a special woman's anti-war group.

The next SMC meeting will be at 8:00 Wednesday in the Campus Center.

Peace Rally Planned at Westover

Westover Air Force Base will be the destination for what looks like a "favorable demonstration" according to Bernie Lougee, who led the meeting of the Veterans for Peace recently in the Campus Center.

At the meeting new officers were appointed because of their need in the R.S.O. group, and also discussed were the need for new committees to better organize the march. These committees consisted of Publicity, which had already been established, Campus Organizing, Community Organizing, G.I. group, and a Speaker's group.

The march will be less than half a mile and will begin at 11 a.m., March 13th in Westover. The Student Mobilization Committee will also attend the demonstration in support of the Veterans for Peace. Transportation will be provided to Westover, Lougee said.

Also discussed at the meeting was the adoption of a fact sheet which will tell of various experiences that veterans on this campus have had in the military. Because veterans have credibility along with the respect of the community, the use of such a sheet will help to change many perspectives concerning the war, Lougee explained.

On April 24th the Vets will take part in a demonstration that will be held in Washington, D.C., and a petition will be circulated demanding a halt to U.S. involvement in Viet Nam.

The next meeting will be held on Thursday, March 18th at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center.

ASA Chief Outlines Aims

By ETHEL HARRIS
MDC Staff

Speaking on the aims of the newly formed American Student Association (ASA), Harold Koltin, originator of the group, addressed approximately ten persons attending the organizational meeting last night in the Student Union Ballroom.

Koltin claimed that due to widespread student apathy, many students in a position of power at the University were not truly representative of student opinion. The ASA would serve to open channels of communication in three areas--him the university itself, among various universities across the nation, and between the university and outside community. Two issues within the university he cited were the recent Senate pay issue and the lack of student activities taking place within the new Campus Center.

An unidentified MOBE member presentd to the group a proposal to organize a campus-wide referendum on a joint United States-North Vietnam treaty. However, ASA did not formally endorse the treaty.

Koltin plans to continue meetings of the ASA on a weekly basis, most likely on Wednesday evenings.

Radar Devices Set Up To Eliminate Speeding

By IRWIN LEFMAN
MDC Staff

At various strategic points on campus the University police have set up speed traps. They consist of radar devices set up on tripods, or in the trunks of police cars.

If a person exceeds the legal speed limit of 20 miles per hour in a school zone, he may be trapped by this radar device.

According to Richard Staples who, proposed a bill concerning this matter to the Student Senate, "it seems a bit contradictory that manpower is wasted on this project, when the police admit that they have a shortage of manpower." The proposal submitted to the Student Senate called for a change of the 20 mile per hour speed limit on Massachusetts Avenue to a speed limit of 35, as well as an abolition of this fund-wasting police activity.

However, the police feel that this "service" is beneficial to the students and community. They claim that the use of radar has reduced the number of accidents as well as the number of high speed chases.

Although the number of speeding tickets has gone up, there still remains the deficiency of manpower in the police department to serve the more important needs of the students.

Plans Begun For Senior Day

By DEBORAH I. STERN
MDC Staff

Eight Seniors out of the entire Senior Class met to discuss the plans for the upcoming Senior Day on May 29 and to handle all the necessary Committees.

Dick Palomba and Rennie Cullman are the co-chairmans for Senior Day. Dick said, "the budget for this year is $10,000. The food and beer budget is $4,000 and the entertainment budget is $3,000."

Although only eight people showed up for the meeting, there are approximaetly fifteen or twenty who volumteered to help out on the various committees. "The committees which are involved," said Dick, "will be food, beer, publicity, sales, operational set up, mugs, clean up, and entertainment." Special attention will be given to the mug, operational set-up, and beer committees since bids must be approved. The clean up committee will possible consist of an interested group on campus who need money for their organization.

Dick mentioned, "Usually Senior Day falls into place. It's a time for eating, drinking, and listening to the entertainment." Again the location will be in the Quad where there is plenty of room to move around. "This year," said Dick, "identifications will be checked more thoroughly than last year." Tickets will go on sale as usual, but might be stopped a week before the event.

Other suggestions were mentioned about a banquet or some sort of get together in the campus center strictly for the Seniors.

Since prices are higher than last year more consideration will go to the food and beer committees. Possibly the entertainment might be supplied by people on the campus who would volunteer.

More details will be discussed and put into effect after vacation. Maybe this Senior Day might be just a little different than previous ones.

Senate Lowers Age In State Elections

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate gave swift, 94-0 approval Wednesday to a proposed constitutional amendment to lower the voting age to 18 in state and local as well as federal elections.

Approval by the House is expected next week or shortly thereafter, and then the amendment will be submitted to the states for ratification. Thirty-eight of them must ratify to make the amendment effective.

Congress attempted last year by legislation to lower the voting age to 18 in all elections, but the Supreme Court held the law is constitutional only with respect to elections for federal officials.

Adoption of the proposed constitutional amendment would do away with the dual-age voting system resulting from the Court's decision.

Sponsors hope ratification can be completed in time for elections in 1972, opening all ballot boxes to about 11 million Americans between the ages of 18 and 21.

They noted that the 19th amendment, extending the franchise to women, was ratified by the states in less than 15 months.

Approval of the 18-year-old vote amendment followed the Senate's rejection of another proposed constitutional amendment by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., to give the District of Columbia full voting representation in Congress just like a state.

Kennedy offerred his amendment as a rider to the other amendment, but on the motion of Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., it was tabled and thus killed by a 68-32 vote.

Mansfield said he feared the 18-year-old vote amendment would be endangered if the two proposals were hooked together.

China Warns On Attack

TOKYO (AP)—Peking is promising all-out help to North Vietnam, even "the greatest national sacrifices", if the United States permits South Vietnam to invade the North or draws the war close to Red China.

The promise is in a joint Hanoi-Peking communique published Wednesday, emphasizing statements made earlier this week in broadcasts. The communique sounded tough, but the document as a whole carried the suggestion that North Vietnam remained able at this juncture to face up by itself, with material support from China, to the Americans and South Vietnamese.

The communique was published following a weekend visit to Hanoi by Premier Chou Enlai. He was accompanied by Chinese military men, including an expert on logistics who would have much to do with the dispatch of new military aid to the North Vietnamese.

The talks, said the communique, concerned the current Indochina situation and "how to deal with possible military adventures by U.S. imperialism." This was an obvious reference to the hints from Saigon's government that it was thinking in terms of an invasion of the North.

The statement said the invasion of Laos had produced a "new and extremely grave war escalation", directly menacing the security of North Vietnam and of Red China and causing a threat to Asian and world peace.

But it also said the situation, on the Communist side in all three Indochina theaters-Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos- was excellent." This could be a hint that Red China wants to avoid giving the impression that she is ready to leap into the fray with Chinese forces.

The statement was, in effect, a warning to the United States to keep the hostilities in Indochina within tolerable bounds.

That was contined in this passage:

"The Chinese side declares that it is the firm and unshakeable principle of the Chinese Communist party and the Chinese government, as well as the unshirkable internationalist duty of the Chinese people to give support and assistance to the Vietnamese people and all three peoples of Indochina in their war against U.S. aggression and for national salvation.

"The Chinese people will never allow U.S. imperialism to run amok and do whatever it pleases in Indochina. Should U.S. imperialism go down the road of expanding its war of aggression in Indochina, the Chinese people are determined to take all necessary measures, not flinching even from the greatest national sacrifices, to give all-out support and assistance to the Vietnamese and other Indochinese peoples for the thorough defeat of the U.S. agressors."

In Washington, a State Department spokesman said: "We do not have under consideration any action that would pose a threat to the People's Republic of China."

Nixon Earmarks Rural Revenue

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon served a reluctant Congress another slice of his revenue-sharing program Wednesday, saying this one would move rural Americans a giant step toward a full share in the nation's prosperity.

The proposal would earmark some $1.1 billion next year for efforts by the states to brighten economic life on farms and in small towns, however they see fit.

At the same time, however, it would dissolve $921 million owrth of federally controlled programs already aimed toward that end. Moreover, it would eliminate requirements that states put up matching money to qualify for the assistance.

Nonetheless, Nixon said, the plan adds up to "better living for rural Americans and brighter futures for rural communitites" through better planning and more local spending freedom.

Nixon said that unless rural life is enhanced "the increase of population in and around our great metropolitan centers will continue and the programs of urgan management will be further aggravated."

Nixon asked in his message that Congress "rethink America's rural development needs and rededicate itself to providing the resources and the creative leadership those needs demand."

The proposal is one of ten separate measures which combine to form an over-all revenue-sharing pattern of more than $16 billion. The largest chunk would be $5 billion for states to spend for any purpose, with others, such as those for urban development and manpower training, marked for specific goals.

The rural aid, Nixon noted, would be allocated by use of a formula involving a state's rural population, rural per-capita income and its rate of out-migration-the shift from farm to city.

Kentucky and West Virginia would receive the greatest amounts, more than $65 million each, with Delaware getting the least at $14 million.

A chief casualty would be $279 million in annual federal contributions for the Appalachian Regional Commission, a coalition of 13 states which has poured upwards of $2 billion of Federal-State funds into the rural poverty belt extending from New York to Mississippi.

Governors of all those states have protested, as have several congressional leaders.

Medina Denies 'Waste' Order

FT. BENNING, Ga. (AP)—Capt. Ernest Medina testified Wednesday that Lt. William L. Calley Jr.'s platoon ignored Medina's pre-assault order that women and children be spared at My Lai three years ago.

Medina also denied that he ordered civilians killed. Calley, on trial on charges of premeditated murder of 102 Vietnamese men, women and children at My Lai on March 16, 1968, had testified earlier at his court-martial that Medina ordered every living thing in My Lai destroyed.

Medina said that two days after the sweep by his Charlie Company through My Lai he asked Calley, at the directions of superiors, if he was "aware of any atrocities that had been committed."

"Lt. Calley made a comment as to, 'my God, I can still hear the screaming,'" Medina added.

This brought the chief civilian defense lawyer, George Latimer, to his feet to object: "If this is intended to be a confession of some kind extracted from this man, it would be inadmissible."

But the remark stood for more than three hours. After a dinner recess, however, the court-martial judge, Col. Reid Kennedy, ordered it stricken.

Subsequently, Medina testified: "Lt. Calley never stated to me that he killed anybody."

Asked by Latimer on defense cross-examination why he did not report to superior officers if his troops were running wild at My Lai, Medina replied:

"I realized exactly the disgrace that was being brought upon the Army uniform that I am very proud to wear. Number two, I also realized the repercussions that it would have against the United States of America. Three, my family. And number four, lastly, myself, sir."

The first night session of the four-month-old court-martial ended shortly after 8 p.m. EST. Earlier, on direct examination, Kennedy asked Medina;

"Did you at any time order or direct Lt. Calley to kill or waste any Vietnamese people?"

"No, sir," replied Medina, 34.

"I felt the people of Charlie Company were good soldiers," Medina said of the period before My Lai. But as it dawned on him in the hours immediately after the assault that noncombatant civilians had died by the score, Medina recalled thinking: "Oh my God, what happened."

But despite My Lai, Medina signed an Officer's Efficiency Report on Calley afterwards, in which he wrote: "His display of knowledge and tactical experience has enabled him to carry out his mission. His overall performance was very satisfactory."

During the infantry advance through My Lai, Medina said he twice radioed ceasefire orders-"by cease-fire I mean to make sure no innocent civilians will be killed."

The witness said Calley's 1st platoon continued to fire its automatic rifles and Medina said he got the radio-telephone to the platoon, adding: "I said, 'Dammit, what's going on up there: I want all this firing stopped....I want to make sure no innocent civilians are being killed.'"

Medina said that in briefing Charlie Company before the My Lai assault he relayed instructions from his superiors to "burn hootches, kill livestock, close wells and destroy all foodstock."

Scheduled RR Strike Thwarted

WASHINGTON (AP)-A federal judge Wednesday temporarily blocked the United Transportation Union from a threatened strike against two railroads to bring pressure on the entire industry in a wage dispute.

"A whipsaw strike for such a purpose violates the railway labor act," said U.S. District Judge John H. Pratt.

The union, representing some 150,000 trainmen, had scheduled a strike for 2:00 p.m. Thursday against the Burlington and Northern and the Atlantic Coast Line Railroads.

By TOM DERDERIAN
MDC Staff

When I used to go to the barber shop it was different. There was noise. Henry would stop cutting hair frequently and yell at The Game on the T.V....there was no T.V. at the Campus Center Barber Shop, only an endless mirror which made the shop seem to echo.

I asked first how the barbering business was going.

"It's not a red-hot thing, right now," one of the barbers told me.

I thought that maybe it was because there was no barber pole outside or maybe a student freak on the endless mirror, but I asked the barbers, instead of speculating, why only three of the ten chairs were full and no one was waiting.

James Farnham, third chair on the right, said there really should be a pole. He said in 1962 there were seven fulltime barbers in the old shop with seven chairs; now, there are only four and one part time. Farnham said the growth of the University is what holds the barbers.

I asked if anything unusual happened recently, Farnham said he gave two crew cuts in a row wast week....that's unusual. Henry used to give all crew cuts.

Ed Kelley, third chair on the left and part time told me something about new trends in barbering. He explained why many students don't like to have a barber cut their hair. He said don't quit school and go to barber college.

"The trend is away from long hair towards full hair cuts; that is, hair just over the ears, short on top but full on the sides," Ed Kelley said.

He continued, "Customers can't get the kinds of hair cuts they want from their home town barbers.

He stopped talking while he vacuumed hair off his customer's neck. (Henry used a brush).

"They get lip service and their hair all hacked up," Ed explained. The old school method is to start at the sides and shave up to the top of the head leaving the longest hair on the top of the head. Customers find that too much hair is taken off so they don't come back. That customer is then lost, not only to that barber but to every other barber."

"The new thing is razor cutting," Ed Kelley told me. Henry, never heard of that. Razor cutting takes longer because the hair has to be washed and set. It takes too long. "You just can't do it for 2 bucks." "A usual razor cut cost seven dollars."

"The new thing is razor cutting," Ed Kelley told me. Henry, never heard of that. Razor cutting takes longer because the hair has to be washed and set. It takes, too long. "You just can't do it for 2 bucks," said Ed. "A usual razor cut cost seven dollars."

There was only one other barber there, James Yacuzzo. Ernest Paulin and the boss, Nelson Major, were not in.

Things at the Campus Center Barber Shop are not like at Henry's in 1962. There even was an ad recently in this paper offering free parking in the Garage for Barber Shop patrons. Business is down, seven empty chairs, no ball game, but as Ed Kelley said, "If barbers would give the kind of hair styling that the customers want and enjoyable conversation, a hair cut wouldn't be such a bad thing to have."

By now, you've probably heard about the Supreme Court decision saying that there can be no "selective" conscientious objectors. This does not in any way change previous policies with regard to the I-0 and I-A-0 classifications. The case in question was seeking to expand the working definition of conscientious objection, and the court simply (but unfortunately) refused to accept that someone can be morally opposed to a particular war without being opposed to participation in all wars.

In essence, anybody who was a CO before this ruling still qualifies. To reassure those of you who were considering applying for a CO, let me briefly explain the qualifications for the classification.

A Conscientious Objector is defined by law as a man who is opposed to participation in war in any form by reason of sincerely held religious beliefs and training. Some definitions are in order here.

The Supreme Court ruled last summer in the Welsh decision that the terms "religious training and belief" include moral, ethical, and philosophical beliefs, so long as they are not purely personal, and providing the beliefs have come about as a result of training similar in rigor to traditional religious training, and that they occupy a place in the person's life similar to that of traditional religious beliefs.

Training may be formal education, such as that you receive from parents, or experimential, such as that you get from reading, movies which may have influenced you, or significant things you have seen or done.

A belief is sincerely held if it operates as a major guiding factor in your life. In other words, if you believe that you should do unto others as you would have them do unto you, and try to live your life in this manner, then that is a sincerely held belief which could easily form the basis for a successful CO claim. Obviously, only you can decide what operates as a major guiding force in your life. If you don't know, isn't it time you thought about it? If you apply for a CO, you will almost inevitably have to confront this issue in yourself. It can be more constructive than a sensitivity group.

"Participation" is a key word. The law does not require that you be opposed to wars;it says that you must be opposed to participation in wars. That means that your beliefs require that you do not join in the fun and frolic of killing your fellow human beings or destroying land or killing trees or whatever it is that you are opposed to that makes you a CO.

Another tricky phrase is "war in any form". This means any war of which you can conceive. The board cannot require you to say what you would do in a hypothetical or historical situation. World War II can never happen again, so it is irrelevant to speculate on what you might have done in that war. You can never know what you would have done for sure, and you don't have to. If you cannot seriously conceive of the U.S. being invaded, you do not have to speculate on what you would do if such a situation occurs. You need object only to wars with which you feel you might be confronted.

If you either know or think that you are a CO, consult a draft counselor before you notify your board. The counselor will advise you of the best ways to proceed to seek the I-0 or I-A-0 classification.

The Greatest Challenge

The "Future University Committee" has offered the University community the greatest challenge of the decade; to testify about what the University of Massachusetts will become in the next ten year.

The committee, in no uncertain terms, is asking questions which will cut through to the core of this University. Issues surrounding everything from "academic reform" to "the traditional four year lock step of college" will be explored and debated. If President Wood is sincere about the work of this committee, as his choice of members would indicate, one can assume that this whole University is now declared "OFFICIALLY OPEN TO CHANGE".

The scope and quality of the University's future will be decided by the scope and quality of the testimony and data given by people involved with the University. We would urge members of the University community and Amherst community to start thinking about what the University should become.

We also feel that the committee members should try not to be overly swayed by simplistic arguments of the variety which have governed the course of education in the past.

If there is one thing to be learned from the past, there is no one best way to run a University, to educate an individual.

When contemplating the future take care not to underestimate the scope of your task; providing for everyone from minority student breaking the iron grip of man's past institutions to the guy who has worked a good part of his life and could be enriched by the facilities and resources of a great University. Ultimately, you must resolve for the time until another "Future University Committee", what the individual will be able to add to the general society.

Each member of the committee should keep a glorious utopian vision for man tucked into the sub-consious, because what you are studying and deciding is the future of one segment of human society.

We hope that the meetings will be fruitful and that the University really will be able to make itself responsive to needs of the future. All depends upon you, the people, and you, the committee.

Strawberry Fields Forever

Once a week there's a big meeting someplace on campus where the upper echelon UMass radicals plot the week's activities. We found out where it was held last week and sent a spy.

Now it may seem unbelievable that different factions of UMass radicals get along well enough to go to the same meeting. On the surface this is so, but only because they have an image to keep polished. Otherwise they'll lose what little credibility they have. But secretly, they are all good friends working towards the same goal. Right on.

The meetings are announced by fake cards on the ride board outside the Hatch. We can't reveal the code because we think UMass radicals could use some theraputic help and the meetings provide this.

We disguised one our more unobtrusive reporters as a sort of myopic Army-Navy store reject with moderately long hair, wire-rim glasses, $35 dollar boots, and a high school ring. We instructed him to go to the meeting after conspicuously cashing a check from his parents at the SU lobby counter.

The idiot was late. He had to do his weekend shopping and got hung up in Louis' looking for UFW lettuce. There was a guard at the door who demanded identification from the spy. Our spy produced a Filene's charge card, a set of keys to his father's car and a picture of his girl-friend at high school graduation. They let him in.

The meeting was in full swing. Everyone was arguing vehemently with his neighbor, trying to impress upon the people in the room how smart he was but at the same time paying no attention to anyone else. The spy timidly poked his head in and was greeted by a low, mocking cheer. Undaunted, he walked in and sat down. Everyone turned to him and asked him if he would like to smoke a joint. We train our people better than that. Real intellectual UMass radicals make a clear-cut distinction between work and play and the weekly meetings are definitely considered work.

So the spy refused the joint and the radicals accepted him as a brother. They let him into their circle and he was privy to some astounding talk.

One wavy-haired guy sprawled on a couch in the corner suggested that since protests have pretty much flopped this year, why not blow up a building and rouse some controversy.

Someone else said he didn't think that was such a good idea since they might get into trouble and it could hurt their futures if they got a police record.

The wavy-haired guy agreed and that was that with the building bombing.

All of a sudden a guy wearing a Brillo pad on his head stood up and shouted, "C'mon, you guys! Let's be serious about this. This is important."

He began to pace around the floor grumbling and cursing to himself. Finally, when he could contain himself no longer, he turned to the gathering with tears in his eyes.

"What's wrong with you people? Don't you believe in what you're doing! I mean, here we are trying to decide the future direction of the United States and you people are making jokes like it was funny. Don't you realize how serious this is?"

Everyone began to laugh. A few people exchanged knowing little glances, snirked, and looked back at Brillo pad who was now busy wiping his eyes with a dirty handkerchief.

"I don't know," he blubbered, "I thought you guys were serious. Why didn't you tell me before that you were just playing silly games to while away the hours?"

The guy with the wavy hair went up to the Brillo pad and put his arm around the shoulder.

"There now, it isn't all that bad. I'll tell what we were going to do this week. We are planning to close down the dining commons' by trashing the dishwashing machines. That would force the University to shut down and then we could sneak back under the cover of darkness and destroy the University's war research files."

Our reporter roused himself out of his tupor. "Hey, that's a lot of crap. The University doesn't do any war research. They explained that during the strike."

The wavy haired guy came over the looked the spy in the eye.

"You stink, pal," he said. "How naive can you be. Of course UMass does war research. You know it and I know it. We just have to get them to admit it." The spy laughed, much to the consernation of the wavy-haired guy who was now foaming at the mouth.

"But that's ridiculous," said our worthy reporter."

"Being a physics major, I should know. The only research being conducted now is investigating the possibilities of supplying white pseudo-radicals an easy permanent wave-kit for Afro-hair styles. We're going to sell the rights to the Toni Company."

At this point the look on the Brillo Pad's face changed from distress to wonder. As the others present slowly filed out to attend the Mobe meeting, the fuzzball and our reporter stood in a heavy conversation.

"Far out, brother," sid the kinky-haired guy. "My old man's an executive in the company. Come on, let's talk about it over some food at Hardee's."

With that the two walked out of the building and climbed into a red Firebird, put the Chicago cartridge in the tapedeck, and disappeared into the fog, leaving exhaust vapors behind.

Art Buchwald

Put Your Bets On WW III

WASHINGTON—Mr. Harold Hopsack, the Hollywood agent, and Frederick Roarington, the well-known sports promoter, have just announced that they have tied up the closed circuit television rights to World War III.

Mr. Hopsack told reporters at a press conference, "This has got to be the greatest fight of all time, and we think that there are millions and millions of people all over the world who would be willing to pay 15, 20 or even 30 bucks to see this historical event."

Mr. Roarington said, "We are paying each of the participants $250 billion. In order to meet our expenses and make a reasonable profit, we have had to demand complete exclusivity for the rights to World War III. This means that no one will be able to see or hear it on their regular TV channels, even on a delayed basis. There also will not be any radio broadcasting of the fight except where it has been authorized by Musical Variety Enterprises, the company which will license and sell the engagement."

"Does this mean that our GIs will not be able to see or hear World War III?" a reporter asked.

"We are working on arrangements now for the armed forces network to pick it up, but we cannot permit broadcasting in areas where the rights have already been sold to commercial promoters. Our first responsibility is to our clients."

"What do you think a fight like this could gross?" a reporter said.

"We estimate that with the excitment that World War III has engendered, we could make $3 trillion, not counting the printed programs and the commercials we hope to sell between the battles.

"We have already committed the largest halls and arenas, plus race tracks and hotel ballrooms in every major city in the world, to carry the event. We also plan to make a film of it which we will distribute in theaters one year after the war is over. Our contract with the participants gives us carte blanche to sell any and all of the rights in any manner we choose."

"Will the winner get a percentage besides the $250 billion?"

"No, this is a flat fee arrangement. Neither side expected to get anything like that sum for World War III, and if they can come out of something like that with $250 billion guaranteed no one has cause to complain," Mr. Roarington said.

"Musical Variety Enterprises," Mr. Hopsack said, "will pay all the expenses for the closed circuit TV installations, so the only expense to the participants is out-of-pocket expenses during the fight."

"Will there be press seats?" someone asked.

"Of course the press has been provided for," Mr. Roarington said. "We're counting on you guys to promote this event like no event has been promoted before. And believe me, you will have plenty to write about. World War III comes along only once in a lifetime."

A reporter said, "It's true that this is probably the greatest box office event of all time, but isn't there a possibility that some of the theaters will be destroyed during World War III?"

"We've thought about that," Mr. Hopsack said, "and we will refund the money to anyone caught in a theater which has a direct hit."

"Are you making any plans for a rematch?" someone asked.

"Of course there will be a rematch. We have too much invested in this to have just one war."

Letters To The Editor

They're Bumped Into A Curb

To the Editor:

In response to Eugene Kelly's letter "Curb Your Senate" we feel obligated to defend both the Senate and the responsible students of the University. It is unfortunate that Mr. Kelly does not recognize himself as one of his "apathetic, or illiterate" students; for indeed, by his own comments he has thus classified himself.

Not to dwell on his ignorance concerning student affairs, we would like to enlighten him and others to the fallacy of his reasoning. To be sure there is some basis for his remarks concerning retroactive payment to Senate Officers. However, to call the Senate "DICTATORIAL" is to neglect the process by which the Senate is created (i.e. direct student vote).

In his reference to the administration as "...God!" Mr. Kelly again misreads the intent of the Senate as the devil's advocate. We as Senators, working for hours have tried and are continuing to try to keep student expenses at a minimum. The SATF is a tax determined not by an arbitrary Senate but predetermined by the students requesting money for their own groups. If the proposed SATF is going up it is because the Senate and its committees have spent 1900 more hours of responsible work negotiating with student organizations to reduce the budget.

We could list ad infinitum the work the Senate has done on behalf of the student body, but then, those who are interested in knowing, interested in working, and interested in helping to protect the students know what would be on that list.

It is only those who have never become involved and feel they can do something with "a little work" who criticize vacuously.

Senator Jack Little Et Al

For Clarification...

TO THE UNDERGRADUATE STUDENT BODY:

On March 9, 1971, the Student Senate held a referendum on S-137 (Officer Pay Bill). A great deal of controversy has since arisen, relating to the Senate press coverage of the event. I feel it necessary to clarify the situation.

On Feb. 25, 1971, the Public Relations Committee voted to publish a leaflet, explaining the bill, giving both the pros and cons of the issue. The material was gathered and sent to the publisher the following Wednesday. On Sunday, March 7, the fliers were completed, but were not suitable for distribution due to many typographical errors. Because of the late date, there was insufficient time to reprint the booklet. The Collegian was then contacted, and although the customary deadline had past, the staff was willing to let the PR Committee run a full page ad in Tuesday's paper. (March 9)

The misprinted leaflet was given to the managing editor, after the necessary errors had been corrected. This "rush" job led to a certain amount of confusion in the Collegian office, and in this confusion the corrected version was mislaid. The managing editor took an uncorrected copy, and he wrote in the "Vote-Yes", as he felt that the general campus atmosphere was favorable to the Senate action. (The editor printed a correcting statement in the 3/10 issue.)

So because of the misunderstanding, the Senate will not be charged for the ad or the leaflet.

I wish to make clear that this unfortunate dilemma came about as a result of a misunderstanding of both parties. There were no outside influences; no one else was involved.

Susan Spatrick
Chairwoman
Senate Public Relations

Cost To Whom?

To the Editor:

In response to your article A Costly Error which deals with the topic of payment for Student Senate Officers, I too wish to say a costly error has been made. Due to the fact that the bill was made retroactive the Student Senate Officers collected $2100.00 prior to the referendum which soundly killed any prospect for future "remuneration"-(you spelled it wrong by the way). This $2100 is no longer with us. A bill has appeared which should prohibit a similar uh..-mistake from ever happening again, but this indeed was a costly error.

Do not misunderstand me. I agree with the arguments which claim that the Student Senate Officers work very hard and deserve some sort of compensation for their efforts; but I believe the form of payment should be academic credit and not U.S. currency. Why? Over the past few years I haveknown fortunately or unfortunately, four Student Senate Presidents. They have carried from 3 to 6 credits a semester, with spasmodic success, and have spent summers and extra years on campus attempting to gain a degree. They have sacrificed hours of class time in carrying out the tremendous responsibilities of their office. In the process, however, these people have become one step removed from the students at this college. They have alienated themselves. To make the Student officer positions of the Senate paid positions will lead us one step closer to creating a larger bureaucratic maze, which will further alienate Student leaders from their "peers." Academic credit (6 to 10 a semester for one year) would give the Senate Officers the time they need to lead us with "progressive legislation" for an improved campus. This would certainly be more effective than paying them to become what would essentially be a new branch of the Student Affairs Office in Whitmore. The maneuver which sapped $2100 from the Student Tax Funds already smacks of professionalism. I don't believe we need any more.

The Once And Future

To The Stupid Editor:

In yesterday's alleged student newspaper, which I found sitting in the Union stalls, a letter to the editor was printed and attributed to Me.

Granted, I submitted the letter, but signed it "Go in Piece," not "Go in Peace," as the MDC and Ware River News ended up printing.

I had tried to be witty, at once both dumping on a couple of MDC'ers and at the same time making fools of the hundreds of hair persons who run all over this campus, heads up their asses, shouting "go in peace."

Please, Collegian, I paid my $6.50, try to get something right. Must I wait for a Wednesday night before my letters can be printed correctly? I hope your paste up man breaks another negative strip in his headliner.

All For Naught?

To The Editor:

To the person who stole the Fisherman's sweater on March 3, from a car parked in Southwest:

I'd like you to know about the hours of work I put into that sweater-two months to be exact.

I'd like you to know about the nights I sat up until 3 or 4 a.m. knitting so that it would be done before skiing season ended.

I'd like you to know that it was a gift to someone I care about, that I put in the last stitch only a half hour before you stole it.

And finally I'd like you to know how sick I felt when I was told that it was gone.

If you have any feelings whatsoever, please bring it, mail it, leave it on the doorstep, or in any other manner, return it to 406 N. Pleasant Street, Amherst.

It's not necessary to appear in person; I don't think I'd want to see you.

Congratulations

To The Editor:

Congratulations! The stories by Silverman and Pascarelli in Tuesday's MDC were the best in about a month, and I hope that the "new editors" see fit to keep printing their stories. Now, if something could just be done about that front page and those garbled editorials.

Guarded Reply

To The Editor:

In reply to Al Jagoda's letter in the Collegian on March 9, I would like to say that neither the University nor the state job specifications for the position of security guard state that a person must be a high school graduate, know how to read and write, talk, or have any education whatsoever.

However, there are certain rules found in other documents that apply to all state employees. Mr Jagoda may find the requirements he seeks there.

I met about 15 security guards while covering the article that Mr. Jagoda quotes from. (That is about three-fourths of all of them.) They are intelligent and (since Mr. Jagoda equated intelligence with the amount of education a person receives) several have college degrees.

Saturation Point Dilemma

To The Editor:

I wish to protest an annoying and time-consuming ordeal that faces many a candidate for a teaching position in the public schools this spring. I find that the problem is as great here as in my home state California.

The ordeal to which I refer is the endless hours that must be spent filling out separate applications varying from two to five pages per school district. Essentially the information which they all require is the same, except that it must be submitted on their own paper, often in the applicant's hand-writing. For every form there is a new way of figuring the number of credit hours of completed work and of restating one's qualifications.

This is the third year, two years with a B.A. and now with an M.A., that I have encountered this problem. Recently I had a four-page resume, which included a list of all my college courses and a two-page biography of experiences and aims, sent to most of the school districts in Massachusetts. What did I get back? A dozen information sheets requesting the same data. In these days of teacher oversupply, when a serious candidate must literally saturate the market to get any response, one standardized form or a comprehensive resume should really be sufficient.

Scurvy Of The Mind

To The Editor:

I write this letter in protest of a recent cheating session which took place in Mahar Auditorium for Microbiology 140, by a group of jocks, many from a well-known jock fraternity.

I find it extremely frustrating to compete, and lost, to an individual who did his preparation for the exam at Mike's, comes to the exam, sits in his seat for an appropriate span of time (playing with his pencils, or better yet-himself), goes out front to get an answer sheet, and comes back in amid the confusion of 500 people, to copy the answers and pass them to his friends.

I think we should take into consideration that the worth of our degrees will be down-graded considerably by the duplicate degrees of these beer-swilling jocks on their athletic scholarships, and it is time students demand the academic honesty they deserve.

A Point of View

The kind of thinking that has put America in the mess it is in now was heard again last Monday in an article in this paper by Jim Mitchell on the recent bombing.

He started off by saying that "They (the bombers) have discovered and pointed out problems and alternatives that have escaped the rest of us for quite some time...Ideas that cannot be implemented today or tomorrow, but in time."

Solutions must be implemented today, not "in time." The "in time" theory has brought us our problems of today, and might well end our freedom tomorrow. Unless the people in power stop saying, "let's do it gradually" they may find that when they decide to act they will no longer have the power to do so.

Mitchell then goes to laud Attorney-General Quinn's reaction to the wave of bombings and bomb threats. Mitchell congratulates Quinn's for his new anti-crime bill which would give a life sentence to anyone convicted of a fatal bombing, and "20 to 25 year term to anyone calling in a bomb threat to a school or church. He then goes on to say that both laws are "mild".

The morality of these acts won't be discussed here. But it should be realized that laws such as those only continue the trend that has brought about the bombings. Instead of legislating against our problems, we should try to comprehend the reasons behind the violence, and eliminate the reasons, not the people.

The threat of the law has never stopped individuals from acting in a way they think right. Possessing grass is a felony, yet twelve million people smoke it.

Mitchell's last point is that while violence was justified during the revolution, it isn't now because, "Our constitution hasn't been altered, nor have the channels of communication." Mitchell doesn't need me to answer him on that. Even Mr. Nixon, whose opinion I would guess he values, has admitted that the "channels must be opened" for all people.

To paraphrase Jim Mitchell's final paragraph: Power to all the people, not just those in power.

D.A. John Callahan Favors Reduced Marijuana Penalty

Hampshire County Dist. Atty. John Callahan, said he favored reduction of the penalty for marijuana use, which he said should be a misdemeanor. At the same time, Callahan said the use of marijuana should never be legalized for children under 18.

"My decision on its legality for adults must await the results of a study done by the National Institute of Mental Health," Callahan stated.

The Dist. Atty. took a strong position on the harmful effects of the use of LSD, amphetamines, and heroin and said, "We have a frightening problem here in Northampton, as well as throughout Hampshire and Franklin Counties in the use of these hard drugs."

Callahan urged the full support of the community in identifying drug pushers so they could be prosecuted, convicted and imprisoned.

He stressed the importance of educating adults and yung people by physicians, psychologists, and psychiatrists in the distinction between marijuana and hard narcotics and in the immense dangers of children turning to harmful and addictive drugs.

The Dist. Atty. reported that narcotics arrests are rising rapidly within the district.

According to him, 3/4 of the Superior Court case load is drug related.

"In discussing the use of drugs with children, adults should be aware that we have no scientific evidence that marijuana is more harmful than cigarettes or alcohol," Callahan said.

"We have a tremendous amount of evidence on the frightening effects of speed, LSD and heroin," he continued, "and we should not weaken our case against the harmful addictive drugs by overstating our case against marijuana."

The Dist. Atty. cautioned against "Copping out" on drugs when faced with a childhood problem.

At a hearing, Tuesday, on a number of bills dealing with narcotic drugs before the Legislature's Committee on Social Welfare there was wide support for easing state laws against possession and use of marijuana.

Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn supported his measures for easing penalties for marijuana use, abolishing the law against being present where marijuana was kept, setting up funding for police to buy drugs in narcotics investigations and setting up an expert state narcotics squad.

"We should, on the other hand, realize that at this point, the use of marijuana is a crime. Its use is a step into the arena of criminality and may give the pusher the opportunity to introduce the use of other drugs.

"Certainly, the use of marijuana by children would deter them from effective school work and perhaps interfere with the development of their adult egos and the ability to cope with problems," Dist. Atty. Callahan said.

Two UMass Profs Awarded Senior NATO Fellowships

Dr. Joe T. Clayton, professor and head of the food agricultural engineering department; and Dr. Otto L. Stein, professor and head of the botany department have been awarded NATO senior Fellowships in Science for study in Europe.

A limited number of NATO senior fellowships are awarded to outstanding acientists at U.S. universities and research institutions each year. They include stipends to help pay for travel and residence abroad for study of new scientific techniques and methods in NATO countries or countries cooperating with NATO, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The program is administered by the National Science Foundation.

The fellowships will be part of sabbatical leave activities for both of the UMass professors. Dr. Clayton has already begun his fellowship study at the University of Reading in Berks, England. He plans to spend half of his time at the main campus of the university, studying the organization, operating procedures and management of the university's Centre for the Study of Agricultural and Food Production Structures.

The other half will be spent at the University of Reading's National College of Food Technology in Weybridge, studying the physical properties of foodstuffs. He will return in September of this year.

Dr. Stein will do research at Imperial College in London, leaving in September of this year. His research area is the effect of chemicals and radiation on the structure and development of plants. Working with chemically treated plant roots, he will study cell shape changes and other responses to chemical and environmental changes. He will use a scanning electron microscope. He plans to return in May of 1972.

Van Lierop To Discuss Palestine Resistance

Robert F. Van Lierop, Attorney-at-law and Member of the Executive Board of the American Committee on Africa, will speak tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Thompson 106 on "The Palestine Resistance Movement and Its Relationship to Third World Liberation Movements."

Van Lierop has travelled widely in Africa and the Middle East. He was present when fighting erupted in Amman in September, 1970.

He obtained his LL.B. from the N.Y.U. School of Law, where he was active in the Civil Rights Movement and was Co-Founder of the N.Y.U. Law Students Against the War in Viet Nam. He is a past member of the Board of Directors of the New York Civil Liberties Union, and is currently a member of the Board of Directors and Vice-President and Secretary of the Black Economic Research Center.

While Assistant Counsel for the NAACP, Van Lierop participated in Constitutional litigation affecting the rights of persons of African descent. He worked on cases arising from the massacre of students at South Carolina State College in Orangeburg, S.C., the maintenance of a segregated school system in Newburgh, New York, and in cases involving discriminatory employment practices by some of America's largest defense contractors.

His experience also includes preparation and participation in a case challenging the constitutionality of the Delaware National Guards' ten-month occupation of the black community of Wilmington, Del. after the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King.

Van Lierop was one of the organizers of the Pan-African Solidarity Week (May 19-25, 1970); in March, 1970, he testified before the House of Representatives Sub-Committee on Africa, Committee on Foreign Affairs, at its hearings on U.S. Foreign Policy toward Africa in the '70's. He has also written and delivered public addresses on Third World Liberation movements, particularly those from Southern Africa and Palestive.

His lecture is sponsored by the Organization of Arab Students, the Palestive Solidarity Committee, and co-sponsored by the Young Socialist Alliance. The public is cordially invited to attend.

Bookstore Shoplifting Becoming Too Prevalent

Shoplifting has become so prevalent in the Campus Center Bookstore, says Mr. Cummins, the manager, that there are now student workers whose principal function is to monitor the floor. They have the power to stop and detain anyone suspected of stealing.

A fairly significant number of people have been apprehended. Recently seven students were caught in one day.

So far, they have been taken to the Student Court. Some have been put on probation for as many as three semesters. They also receive a written letter of censure. Second offenses are dealt with much more stringently.

However, Cummings pointed out that they have the ability to take them to county court when circumstances warrant it. If it reaches the point where they do this (as some local merchants do), Cummings emphasized that it can be very detrimental to the student, as he will acquire a criminal record. This is something Cummings feels he may be forced into.

The manager also said, "I know this is getting to be a trite statement at this point, but we keep trying to emphasize that all they're doing is stealing from other students."

Amherst Plans Further Study Of N. Pleasant

At the second part of the Amherst Town Meeting held last night a motion was passed to continue a study on the proposed closing of North Pleasant Street where it passes through University.

$3,000 was appropriated, to be matched by an equal sum by the University, to continue the professional survey and analysis of traffic circulation patterns. A report of the results of this study should be rendered in approximately six months.

Superb Dance Company Performs Next Week

The Alvin Ailey American Dance Theatre will offer two different evening programs at UMass in Amherst, March 16-18, under the auspices of the Massachusetts Council on Arts and Humanities, the National Endowment for the Arts and the University's Fine Arts Council.

This noted company will perform "Streams," "Flowers," and "Revelations" on Tuesday evening, March 16, in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. All three works have been choreographed by Mr. Ailey. Music for "Streams" is "Eight Inventions" by the contemporary Czech composer, Miloslav Kabelac.

Music by Pink Floyd, Blind Faith, and Janis Joplin is featured in Ailey's new work, "Flowers," which will be danced before intermission. Closing this first program will be "Revelations," probably the most famous Ailey work, with traditional music.

Wednesday, March 17, the Alvin Ailey Company will perform the following works in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. "Blues Suite," again with traditional Negro music; "Archipelago" with Andre Boucourechliev's "Archipel I" used as the musical accompaniment. Mr. Boucourechliev is a contemporary Bulgarian composer. Closing this program will be "Revelations," again employing traditional Negro music.

Reserved tickets to the evening performances, as well as complimentary tickets for the Ailey master class and lecture- demonstration may be obtained by contacting the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall. To those purchasing tickets to either evening performance, there will be no charge for the master class and lecture-demonstration tickets.

Scratch A Genie

Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp - the well-loved tale from Arabian Nights - Will be presented by the University of Massachusetts Children's Theatre in Bartlett Auditorium on March 18, 19 at 7:30 p.m., and on March 20, at 10:00 a.m. and 2:30 p.m.

Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp, by James Norris, is the delightful tale of Aladdin, the poor tailor's son, who encounters an evil magician who is in search of a magic lamp. Danger is always present for Aladdin, but with the aide of the magic lamp and a swirl of Genies he is able to circumvent a scolding mother and grasping sultan; to outwit the wicked magician; and to win riches and the beautiful princess Adoria for himself.

Direction is by Dorothy Aldrich; settings and lighting by Nicholas Scott; costumes by Steve Driscoll; and choreography by Randy Robinson.

Tickets may be purchased by advance ticket sale at the University Theatre box office. Bartlett Auditorium, or by calling the box office, 545-2579. Admission is $.50.

NIT Discussed At Varsity M

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

Head basketball coach Jack Leaman and assistant coach Peter Broaca were the featured guests of the UMass Varsity M Club luncheon yesterday at the Newman Center.

With the regular season completed the main topic was the N.I.T. Commented Leaman, "We are happy that we were invited. I don't see any reason why they weren't invited early. We were only the second team in the history of the Yankee Conference to win all ten games in a season and we have a record of 23-3.

We'll feel a whole lot better playing this year in the tournament. Last year it was just a novelty to be invited and as a result we took the task that we had ahead of us a little too light. Mentally we think we're ready to play and this is a big part of playing basketball. From the teams picked already, no one team stands heads and shoulders above us."

He went on to say, "at the beginning of the season we set as one of our goals to win one game at the N.I.T. But if you win one, you get greedy and want to win two, three and maybe four games."

The coach also introduced backcourt stars Mike Pagliara and senior Bill Greeley. Leaman added, "Bill and the other two seniors Ken Mathias and Bob Dempsey, are the only seniors ever to graduate from UMass without losing a Yankee Conference Championship and this is quite an accomplishment."

Word on the pairings and seedings for the tounament will not be available until either Monday or Tuesday of next week. The coaches of all the participating teams will meet on these days to set up the pairings.

A film of the Rthode Island game was shown. Leaman called this a big game for the team. "We had just come off the loss to Springfield and needed this game to get back our winning ways. They had good personnel and we had to be ready."

Broaca narrated the film and gave his usual interesting commentary on the action. He pointed out the big thing in this game was getting the lead early and making the Rams play catch up ball which resulted in them playing sloppy basketball and letting UMass run up a comfortable lead.

Also on hand was wrestling coach Homer Barr, New England wrestling coach of the year who had a few words on his New England Champion Redmen. "After we defeated Springfield for the title everyone thought it was a fluke. But we've been looking for this meet since the beginning of practice way back in November and it was a well earned victory, not a fluke."

Next week skiing is the topic with coach Bill McConnell as the featured guest. His skiers completed an undefeated season last weekend which should make for another interesting and informative luncheon, next Wednesday at the Newman Center, 12:15 sharp.

Red Sox Win Scott Homers

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP)—The Boston Red Sox, given a big scare when shortstop Luis Aparacio was felled in a second-base collision in the third inning, broke loose for three runs in the ninth Wednesday for a 5-4 exhibition victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Aparacio, a 36-year-old veteran acquired from the White Sox during the winter, was kicked on the inside of the left knee in tagging out Rich Morales on an attempted stea.

"Luis suffered a painful bruise on the inside of the knee," LeRoux said "However, it doesn't appear serious and X-rays won't be necessary unless the knee swells considerably. I think he'll be out of action only a day or two."

The Red Sox jumped to a 2-0 lead on a triple by rookie Doug Griffin and Billy Conigliaro's sacrifice fly in the first inning and George Scott's 425-foot homer far over the fence in left center in the fourth.

Chicago jumped on Cal Koonce for four line-drive hits and a suicide squeeze bunt for three runs and a 3-2 lead in the seventh.

The Red Sox erupted in the ninth, hiking their exhibition record to 5-1, including four one-run victories.

With one out, George Thomas grounded a pinch double down the rightfield line and took third on a line single by Jarvis Tatum. Tom Satriano ran the count to 3-1 and then put down a perfect bunt to the left of the mound, beating it out for a hit as Thomas scored.

Tony Muser, the almost forgotten rookie first baseman, popped a single to right, scoring Tatum. Satriano then scored what proved to be the winning run on an infield out.

Gary Wagner pitched the ninth for Boston, serving up a homer to Bill Melton before retiring the next three batters in easy fashion.

Skating Show At Orr Rink

The very first benefit for the 1972 summer and winter Olympic Games will take place Wednesday March 17th at Orr Rink with two shows, the first at 4 p.m. and the second at 8.

This will be the first time that an event of this sort will be taking place in the Western Massachusetts ara and will feature both World Class performers and four current members of the UMass hockey team.

Events taking place will be pair skating, pair dancing and singles. New England gold Medal dance skating champion Jeff Caird, a student at UMass will head the pairs skating with his partner Kathy Ryan.

Redman stars Al Nickerson, Bob Bartholemew, Dan Reidy and Jack Edwards will perform routines with Adelle Boucher, Leslie Haladay, Pamela Trailkill and Robin DeAngelis, all leading girl skaters.

Eastern pairs champions Kathy Normile and Greg Taylor who also are the world team alternates will be on hand to perform along with Scott Allan, an eight time member of the U.S. world team, silver medalist in the world competition, bronze medalist in the Olympics and two time U.S. figure skating champion.

Tickets for the show will be available at the box office before each show or they can be purchased at the First National Bank of Amherst. The charge is $2 for adults and $1.50 for children. All proceeds will go to the U.S. Olympic Fund.

Puckmen Lose Thriller, 2-1
Complete Best Season In UMass History

By DAN KAMAL
MDC Staff

BURLINGTON, Vt.-It was all Dave Reece. The University of Vermont's senior goaltender turned in an acrobatic performance in leading his team to a 2-1 victory over UMass in the Division II semi-finals here last night before some 4300 fans.

There are just not enough superlatives to describe the way Reece played. He made 35 stops while continually frustrating the Redmen who were frantically trying to comeback from a 2-0 deficit.

The action very early gave an indication of what trend the game would take. In the first two minutes of the contest Reece robbed Pat Keenan on four different occasions. This was only the beginning.

The teams played virtually even-up for most of the first period. However, Vermont opened the scoring at 16:12 of the first when Bob Dunnington let go a screamer from the right point which beat P.J. Flaherty who appeared to be screened on the play.

Vermont increased its lead to 2-0 midway through the second stanza on a goal very similar to Dunnington's. Ned Grant took a pass from center ice, came in on the left wing and fired a shot that beat Flaherty and bounced off the inside of the post and into the net.

Late in the period Flaherty made a great save on a rebound attempt by Ross McDonald. It must be mentioned here that the UMass goaltender was having a good game in his own right as he kept the score down while his teammates were trying to break through Reece. It was a tip in by Mike Waldron at 8:45 of the third period that finally put the rubber disc past the seemingly unbeatable Catamount netminder. The scoring play was started by Lonnie Avery who fed a pass back to the left point to Don Lowe. And Lowe's slapshot was tipped in by Waldron, the score 2-1, Vermont.

Up to this point Vermont had been sitting on its lead and following the Redman goal the home team tried to press the action once more. However, from midway through the period UMass dominated the play as well as a team can dominate the play only to be turned back time and time again by the All-American Reece.

For the last two and a half minutes the puck almost never left the Vermont zone. UMass was on the power play and with about two minutes left Coach Jack Cannif pulled Flaherty giving the Redmen a 6-4 man advantage. The visitors put on great pressure and had one golden opportunity after another but Reece was equal to the challenge.

Then in a fitting ending Reece dropped to his knees to make a good save on a Dan Reidy backhander at the buzzer.

ICE CHIPS-When I talked to Reece after the game he was almost apologetic. He repeatedly asserted his respect for the Redmen, and specifically cited players like Waldron, Keenan, Reidy, Flaherty and Brian Sullivan. He felt that although the Redmen put on great pressure they did not shoot too well. He mentioned that they took many of their shots from bad angles, held some shots too long, and generally didn't finish off their plays... Cannif agreed with the UVM goalie. He said, "The two big factors in this game were Reece and bad shooting. We had the puck in front of the cage numerous times but just couldn't get the right shot away. We have no excuses and we'll be back..."

P.J. SAVES - UMass goalie, P.J. Flaherty (1) shows why he was one of the major reasons for UMass' success in hockey this year. However, last night another goalie Dave Reece, put the clamps on the Redmen as they dropped their first playoff game ever to UVM, 2-1. (MDC Photo by Dan Kamal)

SOPH SHOT - Sophomore Pat Keenan (4) is one of many reasons the UMass hockey team will be back in strength next year. Although losing to Vermont, the Redmen completed their most successful season ever last night. And with many talented vets returning next season plus some good freshman talent, coming up the hockey future at UMass looks pretty bright. (MDC Photo by Dan Kamal)

Gymnastics Championships In The Cage Today

By MICHAEL CUSACK
MDC Staff

Beginning Thurs. March 11 at 1:00 p.m., the strongest gymnastic team ever to represent UMass will begin competition in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastic League Championships, which will be held in Curry Hicks Cage. Gymnasts from UMass will compete with teams from Army, Navy, Springfield, Temple, Penn State, Pittsburg and Syracuse, with individual and team championships at stake.

Penn State is heavily favored to regain the League title, which they lost to Springfield last year. The Nittany Lions are currently sporting a 7-0 record in League competition. However, strong teams from Springfield, UMass and Temple will battle Penn State for top honors.

In individual competition, every school has several competitiors who will be vying for top honors. Coach Erik Kjeldsen's Redmen are capable of placing a number of performers in the finals, and should place several medal winners.

On floor exercise, John Calabria, who placed fifth in the New England's, and Jack Berner will be challenging performers such as Lowell Meek of Pittsburg, who is defending floor ex-champion.

The Redmen's Rick Riley will be the top sidehorse specialist for the team. He has finished third in New England for the past two years, and is looking for a strong finish to his varsity career.

On rings, the top Redman will be Jay Aronstein, a fifth place finisher in the New England's this year. Aronstein, a sophomore, will face experienced competitiors like George Stalter of Syracuse, last year's champion.

Jay Thomsen, UMass' most consistent vaulter, and Steve Cary, an outstanding competitor on parallel bars as well, will be representing UMass' hopes for a medal in vaulting. Cary tied for fith in last year's championships.

Along with Cary, Dave Genest will be carrying the Redmen's hopes for a strong showing on parallel bars. Tough competition will come from Penn State's captain, Tom Dunn.

On high bar, Scott Stover will be the number one prospect for UMass. He has been a solid performer all season, and placed fourth in the New England's.

In the all-around competition, the top Redmen are Norm Vexler and Tony Vacca, who finished fifth and fourth respectively in this year's New England's. They will receive stiff competition from Springfield's Jeff Wiles, Temple's Ron Clemmer, a member of the U.S. National Team, and Marshall Avener, a member of the U.S. World Games Team.

UMass will be hoping for a strong finish in the team title as well as the individuals. The Redmen will be looking for at least a second place finish, ahead of Springfield and Temple. The Chiefs have downed UMass in their two meetins this season, but the Redmen have the power to avenge these defeats. However, they must put their power on the floor when it counts.

For continued coverage and final results, consult the Collegian, daily.

REDMAN GYMNAST - Rich Riley is one of several UMass gymnasts who will compete in the Eastern Gymnastic League Championships in the Cage today.

ED DATTI-Springfield College gymnastics team captain, Ed Datti, is one of many talented gymnasts who will compete in the Eastern Championships in the Cage today. Besides UMass and Springfield; Army, Navy, Temple, Penn State, Pittsburg, and Syracuse will also be represented.

Notices

P.E. 175-SKI MAKE-UP LESSONS-Ski make ups should be completed on Monday, March 15 and on Tuesday March 16. Ski buses leave Boyden Monday, 12:30 p.m., Tuesday, 8:00 a.m. and 12:20 p.m.

Two Coaches Named

AMHERST-UMass named two coaches to fill positions on the Redmen football staff yesterday.

Robert Harris, the head coach at Northampton High School for the past two years will serve as defensive line coach on Dick MacPherson's staff while Larry Pasquale, an assistant coach at Navy for the past two years will be the defensive backfield coach.

A native of Pittsfield, Harris played football at Pittsfield High School, while serving in the Air Force, and then at Purdue University where he received his bachelor's degree. He has had teaching and football coaching experience at Freeport (NY) High School, and Pittsfield High School in addition to his two years at Northampton.

Pasquale, a native of Brooklyn, N.Y., played quarterback at Lafayette High School as well as Bridgeport University where he received both his bachelor and master of science degrees.

His high school coaching experiences include Chappaqua (NY), Greenwich (Conn.) and Danbury (Conn.). He has also served as an assistant on the football staffs of Boston University, Slippery Rock State College and the U.S. Navel Academy.

HANGING TOGETHER IS IMPORTANT if a University and community are going to develop resources by education, UMass President Robert Wood told the Amherst Chamber of Commerce at its meeting last night.

Wood Advises Planning In Town-Univ. Affairs

By ANNE STADNICKI
MDC Staff

"Planning and numbers in the new educational system must be considered so that communities, such as Amherst, can retain their charm, integrity and vitality while existing side by side with a growing University ," Robert C. Wood, President of the University told the Amherst Chamber of Commerce last night when he was featured speaker before the group.

Newly elected President of the Chamber of Commerce Robert H. Linquist was presented at the meeting and two Distinguished Service Award recipients were also named.

Wood spoke about new university systems changes in education and impacts of institutions on towns.

Wood said that UMass was fortunate because it is not planned to have the "cookie cutter" effect that the Mid-Western schools have. He explained that this locates the same course offerings in the same central groupings with no variance such as the Worcester Medical School offers for UMass.

"What is appealing about the UMass system is that we have three different styles of campuses, offering a variety of alternatives," he said. "We can beautify and aid the various communities if we plan the campuses correctly."

Knowledge from the University can help the community if it receives and utilizes the latent expertise the school has to offer, Wood said.

"Until ten years ago Amherst was still a "college town", he continued. "The growth of the University has caused it to become a "University town" in these later years."

The fact that the three campuses are located in Amherst, Boston and Worcester" makes the Mass Turnpike my office" Wood quipped, but it was his comment that the separated campuses are a good policy, considering the growth of the school in the near future.

Wood said the ceiling for enrollment at Amherst would be about 25,000. In operative terms this would mean that the Building Authority would have to provide for buildings that go beyond 50 years from projected use, he said.

The new campus at Columbia Point was one step in providing for the future, Wood went on. He said that "we must prevent obsolesence, and change when we see feasible and exciting changes to be made."

He added that the Boston campus could grow to 15,000 or greater.

In response to a question about state aid to communities affected by a university, Wood said that the latest development of "charity impact" should be considered. Federal aid could be allowed to communities that contain a large institution of any services to the public, for example hospitals or universities, he said.

Concerned about the proposed tuition hike, Wood said he would testify soon against the increase.

"Seventy per cent of the families of UMass students make less than ten thousand dollars a year," Wood said. He explained that an increase in tuition would exclude students because of lack of money.

Wood saw one of the changes in the University to be the exclusion of many persons from higher education, because of rising costs.

Another major change he saw was the problem of addressing education to the adult rather than the adolescent.

"American education extends the pattern of so called "adolescence" Wood said. People stay in school longer and we must deal with adult interests in the school and their needs in the community, he said.

Wood spoke about action for community welfare among educational institutions in an area. He said the Five College area groups could do much for the Connecticut Valley, just as the Worcester consort and the Boston campus could work with schools in their areas to better provide for their communities.

"We all have to hang together and ask for resources that we will develop by education," he said.

In other business at the Chamber of Commerce gathering, Gerald Grady, UMass business manager and outgoing prdsident of the Chamber introduced Robert Lindquist as the new president.

Lindquist operates the Blair, Cutting and Smith Insurance Agency in Amherst.

Grady was lauded by Lindquist as having provided the businessmen with someone to talk to with insight into the University.

"Amherst businessmen will have many more mutually beneficial associations with the student body," Grady was confident.

For his business record and public service Roy R. Blair, owner of Blair, Cutting and Smith Insurance, was presented a Distinguished Service Award.

Blair, a native of Amherst and retired member of the Amherst Savings Bank Board of Trustees, is one of the first to receive the honorary degree. Ernest Whitcomb was also named a recipient but will receive the plaque at a later date as he was unable to attend the gathering.

Collective Suggested To Break Isolation

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

In an attempt to go against the idea of leading isolated and seperated lives Steve Gamon, former campus activist and presently a member of the Goodell Library staff led a discussion last evening concerning the formation of a Radical Collective in the Amherst area.

The idea, planned for several years by Gamon, was introduced to a group of about a dozen students. In his opening remarks, he stated that his idea of a collective involved people living and working together 24 hours a day to educate people to bring about change in the community and the world. He stressed to the group that this wasn't going to be an easy job.

The purpose of the Collective would be twotold. The first would involve the internal structure of the group. Gamon stated that there would be equal division of labor among male and female members with members of both sexes participating in activities such as cooking in the collective to leading political discussions. The Collective, he stated, would be a place for the members to exchange ideas and to learn how to live to survive. Cooking, health, first-aid, and self defense would be some of the things offered. Close interpersonal relationships and group sharing would also be an active part of the proposed Collective.

Once the people get involved, the first thing to be done is to get a house for everyone to live in and to find a way to get along. According to Gamon this could be a problem because of opposition from landlords in the area.

After explaining his ideas, the group discussed their ideas and objectives. About half the group left during the discussion, interested but not willing to drop out of School to devote full time to the collective.

Once things are settled in the proposed Collective, the group will go out into the surrounding community and work to bring about peaceful change by educating people. High Schools, factories, and the College Community would be involved.

Gamon then proposed several ideas on how they might be able to do this. An underground newspaper, guerrila theatre, lectures and workshops would be involved. Also mentioned was the establishment of a radio show which would give a political analysis of what is happening in the world. Presently such a show is run on Amherst College's radio station WAMF, stated Gamon.

Black Radio Project, Senate Budget Debated

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

Budget recommendations for a Black students' radio project and for the Student Senate were heard on the floor of the Senate late Wednesday evening, after the writing of yesterday's story on the meeting. Extensive debate on both budgets included a great number of requests by Senators that the Senate Budgets Committee make amendments in its final recommendations later in March. A Budgets hearing last evening considered these requests.

The Black Mass Communications Project budget consider Wednesday was for a total of $13,385, compared with the $28,000 which the radio project had originally requested in its first hearing with the Budgets Committee. About 20 further changes in the budget were requested by Senators.

For the past five months, the Black Mass Communications Project has been broadcasting 15 1/2 hours of programming a week over campus radio stations WFCR and WMUA. It has been operating without funds and using the facilities and materials of the two stations over which it broadcasts, mainly WFCR's. With funding, it hopes next year to expand its broadcasting time.

Members of the organization explained to the Senate that it is necessary for Blacks to develop their own sources for communication through the mass media. They say they cannot use the general guidelines set up by other, "establishment" services, because of a difference in programming needs.

The Project bears the sole responsibility for Black mass communication in this region, according to spokesmen. They feel a very strong need for communication in which Blacks are involved. This includes not only news and interviews on Black affairs on the campus, but also a tie-in with Blacks around the country.

The $13,00 recommended budget provides for the purchase of supplies, printing and advertising, two wire services (Black Audio Network and Liberation News Service), some furnishings, and small equipment, and includes funds for the running of conferences on campus for training workshops and the pooling of ideas with other media projects around the country.

The Budgets Committee last evening cut approximately $1500 from the budget in postage and telephone and then added a $1000 category for conferences. A Senator's request to include $2000 to pay a coordinator for 50 weeks was defeated over the Project's strong objection that this was needed to tie the organization together. The Budget Committee's final recommendation, not complete at this writing, will be heard on the Senate floor when the Budget Act of all organizations is considered later in March.

Over 25 requests for amendments were made when the $173,000 budget of the Student Senate was considered Wednesday evening. Category reductions as large as $30,000 were asked for by Senators, who took their requests to the Budgets Committee hearing last evening. Consideration of these had not started at the time of this writing. Whatever the Committee decided will be heard on the Senate floor when the budget is included in the entire Budget Act.

The budgeting of student organizations for next year has taken up so much of the time at the last several Senate meetings that President Elters has called a special meeting for Sunday at 7 p.m. to devote to other business.

Dick Gregory To Speak On Campus March 16

Dick Gregory, humorist, historian, and activist, will speak at the University on March 16, sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program. Before his lecture, a reception will be held in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union, from 3:30 to 5:00. Mr. Gregory will speak in the Ballroom at 8:00 p.m., after which he will visit the Black Studies Office in Mills House.

Dick Gregory

Dick Gregory is a man with a message... a message of freedom and equality not only for the black man but for the entire human race. He has spent time in Southern jails, marched in more demonstrations, prevented more racial violence and worked harder for the rights of the Blacks than any other entertainer in America. His autobiography, "Nigger", has become a best-seller and his new book "Sermons" for Doubleday, looks to be an even bigger success.

But more than a commentator more than an author, more than a comedian, he is a soldier in a war against hate and bigotry. His weapons include a complete personal dedication of his talent and a razor sharp of humor. His home is in five suitcases, a garment bag, and a tape recorder. He lives en route, stopping to play countless benefits, deliver church sermons, lobby in Washington and speak at colleges and universities all over the country. Named as the man most hated by the Ku Klux Klan he quips, "They're so out of style I think they are the only people in the country who aren't using colored sheets." A dynamic and communicative man, his message is vital to the struggle for equality in this country and his experience is first-hand.

Gregory is also the author of "No More Lies". The Myth and Reality of American History."

VISTA Workers Here To Seek Support, Funds

By IRWIN LEFMAN
MDC Staff

Marion Johnson and Peter Hawes are concerned individuals over the plight of the poor in North Carolina. They are two young people working under the authority of Western Carolina Community Action Incorporated, and receiving monetary compensation by Vista.

They cited the main problems of the poor in the South as arising from low wages paid to the working force. Marion Johnson and Peter Hawes stated that the situation stems from the large industries in the area such as General Electric and Olin Paper Inc. who are the large employers as well as the industries opposing other corporations coming into the area.

Another factor contributing to the poor economic position is the mining industry. Quite frequently the people are forced to work under poor conditions, and receive very low wages.

Some other major problems of Henderson County in North Carolina is that the poor have few means of transportation. In an effort to resolve the conflict, Peter and Marion supply the transportation in an eighty mile radius. They also bring coal and food for people needing it.

They also proposed some practical methods of improving the conditions in the area. They felt that food and transportation cooperatives may eliminate the immediate pressing problems.

In an effort to raise revenue for Community action, they are setting up Zodiac. This is a record company that will manufacture records as well as sell them.

Initially, the corporation will be run my middle class establishment people, but will be turned over to the poor people. Stocks of the corporation will be sold, and the revenue will go into the Organization. Peter and Marion hope that the corporation will be able to train individuals in the fields of accounting and management.

During their three day tour of UMass they were only able to raise $300.00 for their corporation. They were heartened by the discussions at Lewis house, and by the genuine interest displayed. However, they did appear to be disheartened at the lack of attendance at the Campus Center last night.

However, if you were unable to attend the meeting, and have questions, or wish to donate money to the organization, you can write to them at the following address.

Skepticism And Optimism

Pascarelli And Platt On UMass Future

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

A mixture of skepticism and optimism was expressed yesterday by two members of the President's Committee on the Future of the University when queried by the Collegian about the committee's progress and prospects. Peter Pascarelli, the only student serving on the committee from this campus, and Associate Professor Gerald Platt, faculty member from this campus, were asked for their reactions after attending the first two meetings held prior to the committee's two-day session here yesterday and today.

Pascarelli expressed some doubt as to how in-depth or effective the committee's final report will be. He said the committee will be meeting monthly through May and holding open meetings around the state before writing its report in June and July.

He continued, "I'm sort of skeptical about how in-depth the report can be in this short a time. Already, there have been factual mistakes on the University included in materials handed out to the committee--mostly caused by the haste. It escapes me how a committee of people mostly unfamiliar with the University can gain the necessary familiarity with it to effectively change its future by virtue of one or two visits to campus and periodical, sketchy, descriptions given them of campus problems."

Pascarelli went on to explain that the committee is made up largely of nationally prominent figures who have not all previously been in close touch with the University. Among the members are a former President of Ohio University, the editor of the ATLANTIC MONTHLY, the publisher of the BOSTON GLOBE, the Presidents of the University of Maine and Fordham University, and two former aides to Robert Kennedy and Eugene McCarthy.

According to Pascarelli, "The committee is made up of influential people in the outside community to lend more credence to the report when made public. I'm skeptical of the report because reports have a history of not being listened to these days, i.e. the reports of the Scranton and Kerner commissions. But maybe the fact that this committee was formed expressly by President Wood will pave the way for some of its useful recommendations to be implemented. Even if just one beneficial change for the University can be gained from this committee's report, then maybe it's worthwhile."

When questioned as to his effectiveness on the committee as a student, Pascarelli replied, "I seriously hope I can influence them in some ways. I've kept quiet the first couple of meetings, probably awed by the impressiveness of the people around me. I hope to begin saying things which I want the committee to know. And students should come to the open meetings Friday to give their opinions, too."

Although agreeing with Pascarelli that the committee will not necessarily be powerful, Gerald Platt finds its makeup to be more favorable than Pascarelli does. The Associate Professor of Sociology welcomes the fact that many of the members come from outside of the University community.

He said that their experience in the world of business, politics, and education elsewhere will lend a "balance to the recommendations coming from within the University. It is good for them to bring in commercial and business interests and one must realize that a state university can't be an ivory tower in these times. These men will be able to inform the University from their own point of view to help integrate it with the outside world."

Professor Platt feels that it is too early to judge how the committee will turn out. He said, "It's premature to say what direction it will go in. After two meetings, the committee is still slowly trying to define itself. It started with a broad set of definitions and is still evolving as it feels its way along."

"This is a committee of people of good faith," according to Platt. "They may not all be sympathetic to everything they have heard, but they are picking up the main problems faced by the University. I find the members to be sympathetic and hoping to make positive recommendations for change. They should be able to give the University an estimate of the changes it needs."

Like Pascarelli, Platt is concerned about the shortness of time, but he wonders if the people could serve on the committee for much longer than planned as it is.

Platt agrees with Pascarelli that it is doubtful just how powerful the committee's report will be. The report is advisory and not binding upon anyone. Platt does feel that it is "a committee with influence although not necessarily powerful. President Wood, who established the committee, is only one man, but he will do the best he can. He has to contend with the trustees and the legislature, not just himself." Platt does give the committee a good chance of helping the University determine its future.

President Wood's committee will meet today, from 2:00 to 3:30 in rooms 901, 902, 903, 905, 909, 917 in the Campus Center. The hearing will be run on a walk in basis, no scheduling or appointment necessary.

Whether or not you are able to appear on Friday, longer written statements are solicited on any of the subjects to be considered by the committee.

Statements may be left with the Committee today or may be mailed to "Presidents Committee on the Future University, University of Massachusetts, 85 Devonshire Street, Boston, Massachusetts 02109.

Battle Against Encirclement Characterizes Black Struggle

By JAMES GOLDMAN
MDC Staff

Describing the Black man's struggle as a battle against "encirclement", Acklyn Lynch of the University of Michigan, spoke on the "Political Developments in the Black World Since World War II," last evening in Mahar Auditorium.

Lynch, before a small crowd, termed the present condition of the Black man as "encircled by Urban Renewal and highways; contained by new movies and an educational system that co-ops and diffuses energies, and by Black people being co-oped by business."

Relating the neo-colonialization of the Third World to the multi-national corporation, he described these corporations as the "greatest evil in the world during the 1960's."

Lynch traces the neo-colonialization of the Third World back to the Marshall Plan. He described the plan as a tool geared to open up investment opportunities in Africa and Asia for American capitalism. Lynch explained the area study programs instituted after World War II as a means for determining new American foreign policy and developing new methods of American exploitation of the third world.

Domestically, Lynch described the conditions of the Black man during the war years as "dependent on the performances of Joe Lewis and Jesse Owens."

Lynch believes the Roosevelt administration was not ready to integrate the Black man politically, economically, socially, or militarily. He described the 1943 race riots as the "frustration (of the Black man) over fascism in this country."

Lynch went on to discuss the modern Black migratory patterns. The movement, he believes, is largely determined by the availability of jobs in certain areas. During the war years the pattern was northward to the newly built war plants and in the 1960's and 1960's westward to the booming aerospace industries.

However, Lynch stated, "The Black people were never trained to enter the lead sectors." He described the skills taught to blacks as "thirty years behind."

Terming the American culture during the 1950's as being heavily influenced by "bourgeois art," Lynch characterized the era by naming its foremost personalities. Doris Day and John Wayne. He continued describing the flight of Black jazzmen to Europe which was then the "vanguard of the artistic world." The 1960's, Lynch related, brought a resurgence of the American art scene including a new Black consciousness of art.

The pop art forms of the late 1960's, however, negated the achievements of the identity struggle featured in earlier art forms, Lynch explained.

Lynch concluded by noting the new attitudes toward education and Black culture that ultimately led to the establishment of Black studies programs.

Tricia To Wed

WASHINGTON (AP)—After months of rumors and disclaimers, President and Mrs. Nixon appear to be planning to announce next Tuesday the engagement of their daughter Tricia to Harvard law student Edward Cox.

The wedding date is reported to be Saturday, June 12.

It's not much of a secret these days that Tricia, blonde and 25, is planning to marry Cox, 24, from a socially prominent New York family, after a romance that goes back seven years.

South Viets Go Deep; Find Vast Destruction

SAIGON (AP)-Enemy gunners raked South Vietnamese troops Thursday as they swept areas of southern Laos in their deepest penetration since the incursion began more than a month ago. Ground troops reported B52 bombers had wrought vast destruction in the region.

Action flared near Sepone, the Ho Chi Minh trail crossroads town 25 miles west of the Vietnamese border. A South Vietnamese military spokesman in Quant Tri, Maj Doan Duc Hoi, said 23 of the enemy were killed in two clashes Thursday 11 miles south of Sepone. He said two South Vietnamese were wounded and two missing.

Associated Press correspondent George Esper reported from the northern combat base at Quang Tri that nearly 200 mortar and rocket rounds were fired in one shelling of government forces about seven miles southeast of Sepone. There was no immediate word of casualties.

Helidopter pilots returning from missions over Laos said there was ground action at several points, but gave no details.

The effectiveness of B52 raids in the Laos campaign was evidenced Thursday in reports that listed the finding of hundreds of enemy bodies along with vast amounts of blasted weapons, vehicles, equipment and supplies. Vietnamese headquarters said between 500 and 600 enemy dead were found in jungle areas seven and 25 miles southwest of Sepone.

This letter area was reported to be the deepest that the South Vietnamese have penetrated into Laos.

Ground troops said the B52s had smashed a base and supply depot of the 33rd North Vietnamese army logistical group.

Military sources in the north said the ground situation around Sepone and in other areas of the Laos front remained much as earlier. They said troops which thrust into the battered, abandoned town last Saturday had searched the area for enemy caches and that none had actually been positioned in the town since Monday or Tuesday.

U.S. sources in Quang Tri said an American helicopter was destroyed Thursday in the area of the Laos operation but just inside South Vietnam. They said the UH1 had landed to let one man get off and that it was hit by a 57MM recoilless rifle round while on the ground.

Field reports said two American helicopters had gone down at a landing zone about 14 miles west of the border and 2 1/2 miles south of Highway 9. One was reported to have crashed from unknown causes.

The U.S. Command in Saigon said it had no reports on additional helicopter losses on Thursday, but accounts reaching headquarters often lag. The command now lists 60 helicopters lost to all causes in the Laos operation, but it counts only those destroyed.

South Vietnamese headquarters reported no major action or movement on the Cambodian front, where Saigon government troops also are operating. Nineteen of the enemy were reported killed in two clashes inside Cambodia, and South Vietnamese losses were put at 10 men wounded.

A report from Phnom Penh said Cambodian government forces lost eight men killed in a firefight near the former international airport at Siem Reap in northwest Cambodia. It said enemy losses were unknown.

Urban League Head Drowns In Nigeria

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP)-Whitney M. Young, Jr., executive director of the National Urban League who focused his efforts in the civil rights movement on getting jobs for blacks, died Thursday while swimming. He was 49.

Young, who turned away from medicine and toward race relations as a result of a World War II experience, was here for an African-American dialogue.

He collapsed while approaching the shore after swimming off Lighthouse Beach at Tarquia Bay. Cause of death was not immediately known, but a heart attack was considered a possibility. An autopsy was scheduled.

The black leader had been swimming in the heavy surf with former U.S. Atty. Gen. Ramsey Clark, William W. Broom, the Washington bureau chief for Ridder Publications, and the wives of the two men.

"Ramsey pulled him out of the water and we gave him mouth-to-mouth resuscitation," said Broom.

The League Thursday named Harold R. Sims, its deputy executive director, as acting executive director until a successor to Young is appointed.

Born and raised in Lincoln Ridge, Ky., where his father was president of Lincoln Institute, a Negro boarding high school, Young planned a career in medicine.

He was graduated from Lincoln at the age of 14 and received a B.S. degree from Kentucky State College where he was first in his class and a basketball star-at the age of 19.

After two years at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology he went to Europe during World War II. There, Southern officers appeared ready to treat him with disrespect until they saw his educational background. He was promised the first sergeant's job within two weeks, but spent most of the war in an all-black unit building roads.

The war years were the first in which Young acted as an intermediary between whites and blacks. The white officers found it difficult to control the unit and sought Young's help.

After his discharge, he enrolled in the University of Minnesota, obtained his masters degree, and joined the St. Paul Urban League. In 1954 he returned to academia as dean of the School of Social Work at Atlanta University.

In 1961 he was tapped to be executive director of the National Urban League, a biracial social work agency founded in 1910.

Officer Charges Commanders With Ignoring Torture

FT. MCPHERSON, Ga. (AP)-A veteran combat officer said Thursday he is bringing formal charges against two Army commanders he accuses of covering up incidents of murder and torture of Vietnamese civilians.

Lt Col. Anthony B. Hebert said in an interview he will swear out Friday charges of misprison of a felony and dereliction of duty against Maj Gen. John Barnes and Col. J. Ross Franklin, commander and deputy commander of the 173rd Airborne Brigade in Vietnam in 1969.

Herbert said in the interview that during the 58 days he served as commander of the brigade's 2nd Battalion, he reported specific incidents of torture and murder to Franklin and, through him, to Barnes.

They included, Herbert said, the murder of a Vietnamese woman to which he was an eyewitness, two other murders reported to him, three instances of torture he witnessed and other torture incidents that were reported.

For his efforts, Herbert said, he was called a "liar, cheat, a crook...disloyal" by Barnes and Franklin and relieved of his command.

"My charges are misprison of a felony, because of their improper investigation and failure to follow through, and dereliction of duty and violations of directives and regulations in that they were required to make these reports known to higher headquarters and they failed to do so," said Herbert.

The officer said he is bringing the charges himself because he fears the statute of limitations may be allowed to run out before the Army presses charges of its own.

The legal deadline for action against Barnes and Franklin, he said, is April 4.

Herbert said the Army began an investigation of Barnes and Franklin at his insistence last September, but that completion of the probe has been delayed several times. The Army now informs him that it will complete its investigation of his accusations by April 1, he said.

Since the investigations began, Barnes was promoted from Brigadier general to major general.

Franklin served on the special commission which investigated the possibility of a coverup of the alleged My Lai massacre.

Wald Calls SST "Colossal Folly"

Other witnesses before the Senate Appropriations Committee called the super plane a lemon, an economic albatross, and a dangerous pig-in-a-poke.

Nobel economics laureate Dr. Paul A. Samuelson said continuing the SST project will not create more new jobs, may harm rather than improve the balance of payments, and may cost the nation hundreds of millions of dollars if demand for the plane falls below hopes.

"Sober experience shows that when one does not cut one's losses early on what is essentially an uneconomic enterprise, one sinks deeper and deeper into the mire," Samuelson said in urging Congress to withhold further funds for SST development.

Meanwhile, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., predicted anti-SST forces led by Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., still have the votes in the Senate to kill President Nixon's request for further SST development subsidies.

Samuelson, now on the staff of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, contended the Anglo-French SST, the Concorde, is already in serious economic trouble and said aeronautical engineers "universally regard the Concorde as the biggest lemon ever devised."

Another witness, transportation expert Karl M. Rupenthall, suggested that the government sell its interest in the SST project to the highest bidder and let private enterprise take over.

Ruppenthall, an airline pilot for 26 years who now directs the Transportation Center at the University of British Columbia, Vancouver, said it is no secret the British government would like to scrap its SST project.

Railroads Need Funds

WASHINGTON (AP)—Undersecretary of Transportation James M. Beggs, telling Congress "the picture continues to look very bleak" for many railroads, estimated Thursday $500 million more may be sought in loan-guarantee authority.

"At this point, I am not optimistic that any really significant improvement in the industry's revenue-costs ratio will occur in 1971," Beggs testified during a 2 1/2-hour appearance before a House Commerce subcommittee investigating what his department is doing under last year's Emergency Rail Services Act which authorized $125 million worth of loan guarantees.

He said it is clear the Penn Central, reorganizing under the bankruptcy laws, "is running today because this committee and the Congress acted to provide the emergency loan guaranty assistance."

Beggs added that $100 million guaranteed to Penn Central is expected to carry it through the third quarter of 1971. The Central Railroad of New Jersey and the Boston & Maine Railroad applications for guarantee of trustee certificates for $10 million and $12 million, respectively, "are under consideration and it is expected that decisions will be reached within the next two weeks," he said.

When Rep. J. J. Pickle, D—Tex., pressed for a figure on what the department would seek "to keep this act current," Beggs responded that he could not supply a definite amount because the Interstate Commerce Commission figurs some 18 railroads are undergoing "serious difficulty."

Pickle then requested "you give us a ballpark figure," and Beggs replied: 'I would guess in the order of $500 million or so."

Beggs said the original sum sought before the Penn Central reorganization had been $750 million, although Congress eventually provided $125 million.

Questioned on the timing of the department's next steps, Beggs said "the first good fix should be along toward the end of this month" on the Penn Central situation "but by early May we'll be able to know where Penn Central will stand."

As for the 18 other troubled lines, Beggs said "five or six are worse off than the others," but it will be harder to estimate when they may be in serious enough difficulty that they may have to turn to reorganization.

Chinese Nation Threatened By American Proximity?

"China willnot stand aside," said Peking. "The Chinese people will not be afraid to fight aggression...should the imperialists wantonly invade the territory of their neighbor."

North Korea's territory already had been deeply invaded by then, and toward the end of October, U.N. forces were 50 miles or so from the Chinese border. In mid-October, there was a lull in Chinese statements of threat and protest. Then, suddenly, the people were urged by their leaders through the press and radio to "rise up" in defense of their soil.

Rallies were organized throughout China, addressed by high-ranking army officers. Messages flooded in on Mao Tse-tung from men offering to go where he sent them, a rather broad hint of the "volunteer" intervention to come. Peking issued broadside after broadside, warning of an imminent threat to Chinese soil.

In the first days of the Korean War, some official Chinese statement sounded like those being issued today about Vietnam: China would not "stand by with folded arms;" the "aggressor" ought to withdraw.

But as the Korean Communists were battered back, Peking's statements became more menacing. The rallies could have been the tipoff. From hindsight, they seemed intended to prepare the country for the intervention. "Workers" issued inflammatory statements about "American devils" threatening China. "Students" warned that "should the U.S. aggressors dare to take one step onto the soil of China, they will meet with sudden death."

By Nov. 1, Red Chinese "volunteers" were swarming into Korea. There is one parallel with what is going on in Indochina today. The South Vietnamese invasion of Laos has changed the situation, and China can claim that there is a direct threat to her from that as well as from the hints of an invasion of North Vietnam. She has a frontier with both Laos and North Vietnam.

A generation ago, China was just out of a long and bloody civil war and groggy from it. The Red Chinese probably saw an enormous menace in an American thrust close to their territory. Today, much depends upon the reading of American intentions in Southeast Asia, but Peking does have more time and a better perspective for assessing them.

Senate Favors Aid Program Over Revenue Sharing

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate Thursday approved an extension of the Appalachian aid program, spurning a request by President Nixon that it be phased out in favor of a nationwide revenue sharing plan.

Although the 77-3 vote amounted to an indirect test of sentiment for revenue sharing, Republicans vigorously denied in floor debate that it was a setback for the President.

The bill now goes to the House. It provides for a four-year, $571-million extension of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965.

The administration had sought a one-year extension costing $283 million.

The three negative votes were cast by Republican William V. Roth of Delaware, Conservative James L. Buckley of New York and Democrat Allen J. Ellender of Louisiana.

The Senate action followed by one day a presidential message to Congress in which Nixon proposed that the 13-state Appalachian Regional Commission be superseded by a $1.1 billion nationwide program of revenue sharing keyed to rural development.

Thant Censures Israeli Policy

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—Israel declared Thursday it saw no sign of a breakdown in Middle East peace talks. But there was sharp reaction from Egypt and indications of a widening rift between Israel and Secretary General U Thant.

Ambassador Yosef Tekoah of Israel met for 45 minutes with Gunnar V. Jarring, the U.N. special envoy, and then told reporters:

"We are now awaiting the Egyptian response to our proposal that we enter into detailed discussions."

Later Ambassador Mohammed H el-Zayyat of Egypt saw Jarring for 25 minutes. El-Zayyat told newsmen that Jarring still had no reply from Israel to questions submitted to both sides Feb. 8. Egypt replied Feb 15.

An Egyptian spokesman charged that Israel was seeking an imposed solution and added: "It seems that Israel is still waiting for us to come crawling on our belly."

Thant came under sharp criticism in Israel after he issued a report last Friday praising Egypt and asking Israel to give ground on the issue of withdrawal from Arab territory occupied since the June 1967 war.

"It is not our purpose to establish secure and recognized boundaries in a debate with the secretary-general, Tekoah told newsmen in response to questions.

Thant reacted with some bitterness to an Israeli policy paper issued through its embassy in Washington on Wednesday. It denounced Jarring's proposal, supported by Thant, that Israel withdraw to old 1948 boundaries between Egypt and the British mandated territory of Palestine.

Thant said through a spokesman that all he had seen were press reports on the embassy policy paper, but that if the reports were accurate he finds it hard to believe the reports emanated from an official Israeli source.

NES Committee Forms Basic Plans For Fall

SPRUTTING UPWARD is the crane at the new library. The question is just how it got there. The construction workers make dandy use of it, as the other day when it was used to drop a hungry worker his lunch.

The NES Coordinating Committee has formed some basic but tentative plans for next semester involving both modular and full-time credit.

The first and most difficult plan to initiate would aim directly at the academic achievement of a tutee. Students would obtain three credits for tutoring twice a week. One of the tutoring sessions would be in the Springfield schools during the school day. For the other meeting, the tutor would see the same child again in the NES center during one of the after-school sessions now in progress.

The problems with the above program would be the number of UMass students participating, cooperation with Springfield teachers, and transportation. It is hoped that 150 to 200 students would want to take this course.

Another two- or three-credit course being considered involves changing the educational atmosphere in the NES centers. Since one-to-one tutoring is often difficult, ideas of group activities is offered as an alternative. The accent here would be on fun-bringing JOY into education.

UMass students involved in this aspect of the NES program would be responsible for one tutoring session a week and an activity planning session in Springfield or on campus. These students will do the planning and the carrying out of group activities in the NES centers. They would have to participate in a minimum number of activities to obtain the credit for this part of the NES program.

With these group activities which would hopefully improve a child's feeling toward learning, the traditional NES program will be in effect where a UMass student will receive modular credit for going to Springfield one or more times a week. Here, the tutor and tutee can use any option they want.

In the past the once-a-week routine too often only provided for a weak tie between the tutor and tutee. It is hoped that the tutors who work in the schools and the centers and those students who plan group activities will provide an atmosphere of participation that will make the interaction of a tutor and tutee one time a week more meaningful and worthwhile.

This is a general outline of what NES hopes to do next year. Plans are being made now so students can fit these student-created courses into their regular academic schedule. Hopefully, everything will be in writing and agreed to by the middle of April.

If you wish to participate in designing the final product for academic marketing, please stop by the CAF office, room 104 in the Campus Center. The phone number is 545-0575. Better yet, attend the weekly coordinating committee meeting. Check the notice section of the Collegian for the time of the meeting.

Amherst Clerk Outlines Town Voting Policy

By RENE COMTOIS
MDC Staff

Recently, a 23 year old grad student was denied the right of registering to vote in Amherst. The reason given was that because he spent his summers elsewhere, he was not considered a permanent resident of the town.

Incidents similiar to this have stirred public opinion. Students claim that they live in Amherst for most of the year and should be able to vote here. The townspeople feel that they pay the town taxes, and are more interested in the affairs of the town. Both sides realize that if most students were able to vote, Amherst would be a student-run town.

In an interview yesterday, Mrs. Dimock, Amherst registry clerk, outlinned the towns policy on registering students to vote. She gave me a prepared statement which read as follows:

1. The Town Clerks office has never made a statement that Amherst does not register students. Hundreds of grade students and a few undergraduates have registered in the past;

2. The general statement on student registration from this office has been that most undergraduate students should register in their home towns;

3. The statement that approximately forty students a day have tried to register to vote in this Town Hall is grossly exaggerated; this office has not had forty students under twenty-one in all try to register since the age was lowered to eighteen and nineteen, not including, of course, those students whose parents live in Amherst;

4. There has been no change whatsoever in the interpretation of voter qualifications, which are:

1) A citizen nineteen years of age or older (OR eighteen for federal elections)

2) Six months residence in Amherst, and this obviously means permanent residence.

3) Intent to remain in Amherst the year round as a relatively permanent residence.

5. In interpreting residence the policy followed pretty generally throughout the Commonwealth is that the official residence of most undergraduate students is with their parents who claim them as dependents. Mere removal from a place is not enough to establish residence elsewhere.

"We are very much in favor of students registering to vote--but not necessarily here" Mrs. Dimock said. "I don't think it would be fair to the town if all students were allowed to vote. They could pass legislation for their benefit which would be harmful to the town as a whole. Besides, I don't think in general that students are interested in our town politics."

Mrs. Dimock said that the town has asked the Attorney General for a ruling on the residency requirements. Until then, we can sit back and wait. I wouldn't hold my breath though if I were you.

Recycling Center For Glass Starts

By BOB SCHEIER
MDC Staff

Starting Monday, students may bring empty jars, bottles, and all glass containers to be recycled to the Free University, opposite the Hatch in the Student Union, in a project sponsored by Lynda McIntyre, a graduate student, and Room To Move, the campus drop-in center.

Anyone who wishes to bring something to be recycled should first wash it, and remove any metal tops or neck rings which could interfere with the recycling process. Then, the containers-preferably broken to save space-can be brought to the Free University where there will be space to sort them by color.

From there, the Free University will use its trucks to bring the glass to a recycling center in Connecticut. There, it will be remelted, and eventually used in making new containers. The $20 per ton that will be received for the glass will be put towards a residual bail fund, or added to the Free U's present money for speakers.

In the future, Miss McIntyre also hopes to get glass for recycling from local businesses, and says that so far response to the project has been very good. If anyone has any questions, or would like to donate the use of a truck to bring the glass to Connecticut, he should call Room To Move at 5-0400 or go to the collection center in the Free U.

Area Bands And Light Show Performing Opera 'Tommy'

Two well-known area bands will perform the renowned rock opera "Tommy" on Sunday night, March 14 at 7:30 at Greenfield High School.

"The Fathoms" and "The Strawberry Wine" have been rehearsing the past several weeks for their performance of "Tommy." The opera, made famous by "The Who," has been played all over the world, but has been only five times in this country.

"Strawberry Wine," "The Fathoms," and "The Captain Video Light Show" have combined over $50,000 worth of sound and light equipment to produce the complete rock opera.

Sponsors of the program, the Greenfield Jaycees, have announced that all profits will be turned over to the "Hot Line" for their help of those in need in Franklin County.

Tickets for the performance may be purchased from the Allstate booth in Sears in Greenfield or at the door Sunday evening.

The Weeks Over

People don't stop to think about the everyday events in the world around them too much. Mostly, the day to day crisis of living your own life keeps the mind occupied and the days busy. Around the University its easy to just let everything flow into an endless blurr. A whole week can pass without you realizing what is actually going on in our quintessential little world in the valley.

Take this week:

Last weekend the UMass wrestling team won the New England Inter-Collegiate Wrestling Association tournament. The same weekend a group of self-styled "radical" faculty and grad students met to talk about things like the "cultural revolution", radical teaching, and Women's Liberation. There were also a large number of people talking about a referendum on paying Student Senate officers, which happened and ended with the defeat of the pay bill on a five to one margin.

Late last week some people on the "Lettuce Boycott Committee" were mapping plans to close down one of the dining commons with a student picket line. That resolved itself Monday when the Chancellor told the group: "I don't even like lettuce." On the same day as lettuce was taken care of, the Chairman of the Student Senate Budgets committee announced that the student tax might have to go up to about $50, a $16 jump from last year. Than to add to a general concern for money, the CCEBS program looks to be about $100,000 short for next year and the University is, at present, only confirming half of its Teaching Assistants positions for next year.

The week moved on quickly and the "Vet's for Peace" explained their Westover Air Base demonstration; a group of MIT students decided that Southwest's problem was "compartmentalization"; a "non-student" was arrested in the Student Union for trespassing; the former Chairman of S.W.A.P. decided that the potential for change at UMass was "pessimistic"; a group on campus began to organize a "peace treaty with the people of Vietnam"; the Senior Day committee announced a "food and beer budget" of $1000; the "Third World" got $4000 to sponsor activities and a "National Convention"; and Vice-Chancellor Gluckstern stated that "there is some dishonesty with administrators."

What to make of this week, or any other week, here at UMass is up to the individual. We're living in University which flourishes on its contradictions and revels in its confusion.

You have to stop and appreciate it every once and a while.

Canine Conspiracy

Like the rest of you, I'm sick and tired of glancing through the newspaper and continually seeing the same names and stories day after day. I'm fed up with Ali-Frazier, Calley-Medina and if I hear another word about Sickle Cell Anemia, I'll go out of my mind

Out of all this redundancy, however, has come something almost worthwhile. For in my battle to avoid the sobering sight of the front page headlines, I have been forced to delve more deeply into the bowels of the local journals rather than giving them the cursory glance that they generally rate.

Not only has this endeavor broadened my extremely limited horizons, it has also exposed some noteworthy and important happenings to me which I normally would have overlooked.

For instance, in Wednesday's Greenfield Recorder, there is a small story buried on page six about dog licenses. Though at first glance this might seem unimportant, there is a lot more to this filler than initially meets the eye. According to the article, dog licences are becoming more expensive due to, of all things, inflation. The story goes on to say that the fees will be raised by "$1 each to $3 for males and spayed females and to $6 for each unspayed female."

I could hardly believe what I was reading. While women are now rightfully complaining about sexual discrimination, female dogs are forced to pay extra for their sexual discrimination,

I could hardly believe what I was reading. While women are now rightfully complaining about sexual discrimination, female dogs are forced to pay extra for their sexuality, a whole $3 extra.

What possible justification can there be for this bizarre action. while the male and the unsexed, or is it desexed, mongrels end up in suburban living rooms sleeping every night before the comfort of an open hearth, their female counterparts are caged in the concrete confines of the local ASPCA.

Obviously some type of male canine conspiracy exists which flaunts the sexuality of the female rather than accepting her worth to the community and it is this group which has caused the unspayed females to be priced out of the dog owner market.

What is needed is a political movement by these females to get the rights and prvileges that they deserve.

UNSPAYED FEMALE DOGS OF THE WORLD, UNITE!

The Light of Reason

Last Saturday afternoon, we witnessed yet another cry for understanding by a new faction of Women's Lib. A group known as the "Committee to Defend the Right to Live" entered a building owned and occupied by Harvard University, asked everyone to leave, and then demanded a lease on the property. Among other things, they would like to use this property as a drop in center for lesbians.

I am in full sympathy with these women insofar as their plea to society for recognition goes. Regardless of whether we consider their sexual habits normal or not, they are entitled to engage in these activities as long as they don't cause society any real harm. However, the importance of their cause notwithstanding, we cannot allow individuals to trespass on and sieze private property to make a point.

Harvard has traditionally been thought of as a community leader in Cambridge, which partially explains why these women chose to vent their grievances on them. Naturally by using Harvard as the scapegoat, much more attention is drawn to their plea. The school realizes full well the importance of taking these women out of the gutters that society has placed them in, yet the precedent that would be set by allowing them to stay could have severe consequences for years to come. In either case, Harvard should not have to bear the responsibility of making decisions which rightfully belong to society.

This brings us to the question of whether even society is in the position to make a judgment on lesbians, or homosexuals too for that matter. I don't think we can say 'yes', such behavior is good or 'no', that it's bad. At this point, when such issues are just beginning to surface, issues that are still offensive to many, about all we can do is quietly acknowledge such behavior, neither encourage nor discourage it.

In any case, it is a poor policy for these women to bemuddle their cause even further by getting themselves on the wrong side of the law. If society begins to feel intimidated, and thinks that these girls are making a mockery of the law, it will react out of fear, a reaction that never did rely too heavily on logic and reason. But let it feel that it is not being forced and harrased into acknowledging new and changing morals, then it surely will in time come to a decision under the light of reason.

Already Strained Lines

The report by the architectural students from MIT on the "Compartmentalization" of students here at UMass comes at the same time that Pierpont is retaliating for our Mr. Williams' supposed assault on its true character ("The Great Acid War"). I have myself associated Pierpont with the wildest drug orgies for miles around--even though I spent a year "next door" in Cance.

Pierpont has the most ghoulish image on campus partly because it has been the most secluded dorm on campus. This is obviously the trend for many other dorms--Cance, Butterfield, and the many other dorms with co-ed programs and more limited "Autonomous living" systems--and the master plan, apparently, is to render the area from the Tunnel to Hasbrouck virtually useless. The report from MIT is already doomed.

Eventually what will happen is, given a choice of communities, the politicos, drugsters, Krishna Consciousnessers, and so forth, will all divide up and sit around and brainwash themselves with insulated lies--Mao this and Trotsky that and the latest secret message from the latest Jefferson Superstar record. Stockies are all dumb berries, right?

This situation could spell the end of higher education for the masses. If you think a degree from this place is worthless now, what will it be like when your entire milieu is geared to exactly what you like to hear?

The MIT students were less helpful in their remedies for this potential mess. They proposed a gathering place for Southwest in Hampden Commons--for what? An Arts and Crafts center? Everybody thinks that arts and crafts are great and dandy and everything, but how much interest is this going to create amongst those who perhaps need it most, the talentless many? Their other proposal, a Hotline, is likewise a minority service. Friends who work at the South Hadley-Holyoke based Link tell me that most of their calls are either cranks, paranoids (drugs and otherwise), and voices who want to know if there's any speed in this yellow mescaline they copped. Most of the important social work will need to be done by professionals - creating more unwelcome budget-work the information services will have a minimal effect.

The main social "mixing" events are concerts and boogies, where precious little mixing takes place. Polarization is inevitable at a place this big, there are enough representatives of every current trend or litestyle to make it possible for most people to withdraw into the insulated community of their choice. It's up to the people whether they are going to let this happen. They probably will, and though the consequences could be disastrous on our already strained lines of communication, it's very understandable.

One Brave Soul

there was a professor who had a course who desparately needed a text book source little could be found to his dismay and so to the library he sent a mayday

the library accepted his call some material was to be had after all this he announced to his students with glee and shortly thereafter discovered his folly out of a class of thirty or so only one was brave enough to give it a go

the rest called it quits

Letters To The Editor

Impossible To Lose?

To The Editor:

In an editorial in the Wednesday, March 10 Collegian, the editors stated that, because of the defeat of the senate officer's pay bill, "the student senate's officers will receive no compensation for their labors." May I take the editors by their hands and lead them to page 1 of the same paper. In the cover story it says that the officers will be paid their back salary, even though the bill was overwhelmingly defeated. I estimate that this means the president will get about $500, the v.p. $425, and the treasurer $425. These are only rough figures, of course, but they should be close.

It seems to me that, using this simple procedure, the student senate could have voted itself anything, retroactive to anytime, and even if this action was overruled it would still be valid. This method has the same beauty about it that cheating at solitaire has, that is it is impossible to lose.

In the editorial the editors stated "Perhaps...people will be a little more willing to give their representatives what they deserve." What do they deserve?

This is the crux of the matter. The Collegian seems to think that the senate is a responsible body and should be paid because they are responsible. I claim that, if the senate does not fulfill its responsibilities that it is irresponsible. The senate's self-proclaimed primary responsibility is to represent the will of the students. If, the senate acts against the will of the students it is being irresponsible. If the senate acts in an irresponsible manner it does not deserve to receive pay. The senate has voted to pay its officers. The students have let it be known in the referendum that they do not wish to pay the senate officers. Since the officers are going to be paid a total of nearly $1500 in spite of what the students will, I claim that the senate is being irresponsible and that therefore its officers do not deserve to be paid. The only responsible action for the senate would be to recind the retroactive pay to officers and to change the rule which allows such a thing to occur.

Since it is reasonable to assume that nothing of consequence will happen in the senate regarding this matter, I propose that the senate take a different tack entirely. I propose that the senators should vote themselves enough retroactive money to bankrupt the senate. This would have a three-fold effect.

1: It would make it possible for some students to get something out of UMass., money.
2: It would give Yahoo something to write about.
3: It would abolish the Student Senate.

I think that these are three worthy motives that should be considered in light of the fact that the officers will probably not let go of so much easy money. Of course, this action would be overruled by a referendum, but the beauty of it is that it makes no difference.

What the senate has done is hypocritical, while my humble suggestion is blatant thievery. If I had my druthers, I'd druther have a thief get my money than a hypocrite.

For Your Conscience

To the Editor:

After attending the last meeting of the Veterans for Peace that was held on Tuesday night, I feel compelled to write this letter. Can I be wrong when I say that the meeting was well publicized? Of course not, tables had been set up at the Hatch on the previous Friday, a notice was posted in the Collegian on Monday, Tuesday an article was published in the Collegian and flyers had been sent by mail to all the Veterans who had signed our mailing list. Then why did only a handful of people show up? Am I to presume that Veterans on this Campus don't give a shit? I'm beginning to wonder? An organization has finally been established that we can identify with - so why not participate? If you believe that an end to all US involvement in Indochina must be accomplished, then you belong with the VFW (Veterans for War).

On this coming Saturday, March 13, the Veterans for Peace will hold a peaceful demonstration at Westover AFB. It is our intent to express our solidarity with active GI's who are also opposed to the war and to make clear to the residents of Massachusetts that the anti-war movement is composed of diverse elements and not solely students. If you did not make the meeting but you can participate in the demonstration, transportation will be available in Parking Lot 11 (across from Whitmore) at 9:45 a.m. on Saturday morning. If any additional information is desired, we can be contacted outside the Hatch on Thursday and Friday of this week. Stop being so apathetic, you did something for your country once, now you can do something for your conscience.

Robert R. Drolet

Great Orator

To the Editor:

Amid the sound and fury of Wednesday's Senate meeting, the resignation of Sen. Robert Waters of Gorman House may pass unnoticed by the student body. I write that this may not be so. Bob Waters was the Senate's Great Orator, but more than that he was a capable Senator, respected and liked on both sides of the aisle. Bob's was a voice of reason, speaking for the student tax payer, the forgotten UMie if you will. Most recently he was a prime mover behind the referendum on the Senate Officer's pay bill. The Senate has lost one of its finest members and the students have lost the voice of their most elegant tribune.

Gets Facts Straight

To the Editor:

Concerning the article by Irwin Lefman on radar speed "traps" on campus (MDC 3/11), I feel some clarification is in order. As I informed the reporter who contacted me, the only action I have taken on this matter to date has been to insert a question, concerning the cost in money and manpower involved in the operation of the radar, in the Senate agenda. The University Police replied that the radar unit is not in general use (yet), and that no arrests have been made with it. They also assure us that they will announce the use of the radar unit publicly before it is made operational. I feel this is an important distinction, especially since the article gave the impression that I was going about chastising the police for "trapping" myriads of cars with this unit.

Furthermore, I have not yet proposed changes in the speed limits, nor have I even discussed "abolishing" the use of the radar. Whatever some people may think of the Student Senate, I for one take pains to get my facts straight before introducing bills or making statements. Having done so, you may rest assured that I shall attempt to bring about some selective raising of speed limits on certain campus roads, but I have not and shall not go around screaming "trap" over nothing, as the article seems to imply.

Short-Sightedness

To the Editor:

These past few weeks I have been making use of the Curry Hicks Cage as a place for indoor jogging. However, because there are no girls' lockers I am obliged to either come prepared with sweatshirt and jeans or else use the Ladies' Room. In either case I have no really safe place to leave my books and purse; also I have no place in the Cage to take a quick shower. What's worse is the fact that although Boyden issues sports equipment out of the mens' locker room (sweatpants, basketballs, etc.), girls are obligated to travel across campus to get equipment. In my case I would have to go to WOPE to get dressed, then walk over to the Cage, jog, and then return to WOPE to give back the equipment I borrowed and get dressed. Oh, Boyden does offer locker room and shower facilities for women, but if I've already given my I.D. to the WOPE matron for use of the equipment, how can I obtain a towel from the Boyden matron? (I must show her my I.D. also).

Why is it that boys are afforded a locker room in the Cage and girls are not? And why is it that girls cannot get equipment to use at the Cage without having to traverse across campus to WOPE? This is an example of the athletics department's short-sightedness concerning the practical use of all gym facilities to both sexes.

"Name Withheld upon Request"

Bravery

To the Editor:

I think it is disgraceful cowardice that a person would feel strongly enough about an issue to write to the Collegian and then request that his name be withheld.

I am sure that other students abhor this policy of faceless anonymity endorsed by you.

How about modifying this shameful practice?

Editorial Points

The Amherst Record, that paragon of small town journalism, created a 20-page special section entitled "BRIDE 1971", which tells the female population that a number of national firms, the names of which are synonymous with gournet cooking, a well set table, a lovely home, and not to mention the well groomed wife" will be at this year's Bridal Fair. Women! You can be "well groomed."

"There is some dishonesty with administrators," Vice-Chancellor Gluckstern told a group of professors. Maybe if half of the administrators around campus watched the other half everybody would be honest. At least everyone in the administration would have something to do.

The man responsible for the editorial page of the Springfield Union received a phone call from a Collegian editor informing him of some blatantly false point in their lead editorial. The man replied: "We got that information 2nd or 3rd hand, you know how it is." Imagine, one of the editors of one of the largest newspapers in Western Mass writing policy editorials from information he has gotten 2nd or 3rd hand.

After viewing all the military trials and investigations lately, it's hard to believe that anything could be so ludicrous.

Big Bang Footnote

(Editor's note-The following are excerpts from the March 13 edition of New Yorker Magazine.)

In 1971, it is nearly unbelievable that American or South Vietnamese officials could be considering an invasion of North Vietnam. Yet in South Vietnam both President Thieu and Vice-President Ky have openly advocated such an invasion, and here President Nixon has said he "would not speculate" on whether an invasion might take place, Secretary Laird has refused to "be involved in speculation" on the subject, Henry Kissinger has said that an invasion is not "the dominant probability at this moment," and Secretary of State Rogers has registered opposition to a proposed congressional resolution against the use of American ground troops in support of an invasion. It has been suggested that these statements by the South Vietnamese and these equivocations by the Americans are only threats designed to frighten the North Vietnamese into submission, and do not indicate that an invasion is actually planned. If this is the case, the four American officials have certainly succeeded in creating a climate of complete ambiguity. It is impossible for us, as citizens, to know, from the outside, what the intentions of our government are in Indo-China.

Under the cloak of public relations that has hidden the true nature of the war--from its earliest days, when we were told that the expanding war was not a war at all (it was a "conflict"), to the present, when we are being told that the still expanding war is practically over--the war and the war machine that runs it have gradually been moving into the dead center of our national life. We used to see the war as just one of many issues in our political life. Now things have been reversed and we find that our political life is one of many issues of the war. The question is no longer whether our political system will allow the war to drag on after a decade of failure; it is whether the war and the war machine will allow our political system to survive after nearly two hundred years of success.

The way things are going now, unless Congress resolves to withstand the erosion of its powers it may very soon be nothing more than two large rooms full of men in business suits who make speeches written by other people--men who may possess convincing rhetorical gestures, charming smiles, and excellent television "images" but who will have no power. This has happened in our time to more than one country's congress or parliament that has not been vigilant against military and executive power.

In some instances, the American helicopter crews are reported to have forced the South Vietnamese soldiers out of the arriving helicopters. At other times, it is reported, South Vietnamese soldiers have clung to the runners of helicopters leaving the battle zone to carry out the wounded. In front of the South Vietnamese troops are the North Vietnamese; behind them are the Americans, cracking the whip over their heads.

Five years or so ago, when everyone knew that the war was getting larger, the slightest suggestion of an invasion of the North caused an uproar. But now, when the war is supposed to be "winding down," these suggestions pass almost unnoticed, although there is no reason to believe that the consequences of an invasion now would be any different from what the consequences would been then. This war has gone to our brain. It has drugged us. Our reflexes have slowed down. Our alertness has been blunted. Now, as this small war--this "brushfire war"--threatens to bring us to the edge of the ultimate war, we drowse on. We act as though the big bang were only the footnote to little Vietnam.

ALVIN AILEY DANCE THEATER
The Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater will be in-residence here on campus this March 16-18. The different evening programs are planned. On Tuesday the program includes "Streams", "Flowers" and "Revelations". "Flowers" is a recent work based upon the life of Janis Joplin and includes music of Pink Floyd, Blind Faith, and Miss Joplin. Wednesday program will repeat "Revelations" along with "Blues Suite" and "Archipelago". At Bowker Auditorium ($).

THE GOOD WOMEN OF SETZUAN
Bertolt Brecht's play which dramatizes the constant struggle between good and evil is performed by the Stone Theater Group. The company is comprised of some local theater talent, at the People's Institute, 38 Gothic Street, Northampton. Tonight through Tuesday at 8. ($)

THE PRIME OF MISS JEAN BRODIE
Miss Brodie, a teacher of strong individuality and powerful personal charm, greatly influences her students at a conservative Scottish girl's schools during the 1930's. A fine production of this New York and London hit continues through this weekend at the Lab Theater, Mt. Holyoke College, curtain at 8:15. ($)

RICHARD II
The Amherst Masquers' distinguished production of Shakespeare's history Amherst College, 8:30 through Sunday, at the Kirby Theater, Amherst College.

Films

A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS (Friday and Sunday, Southwest Cinema, DC 5.)
Frank Zinnerman's highly satisfying adaptation of Robert Bolt's historical drama. Paul Schofield gives a masterful performance as Sir Thomas More, the pragmatic advisor to King Henry VIII. The film follows the conflict between these two men over Henry's break from the Catholic Church and this rift makes for an excellent drama.

THE BATTLE OF ALGIERS
A "Cinema-verite" documentary of the Algerian conflict. An exciting, intelligent interpretation of history; undoubtably one of the best films of its kind.

BUTCH CASSIDY AND THE SUNDANCE KID (Calvin Theater, Northampton)
This fine western-comedy is back once again. The closing of the American frontier is explored in the story about the last days of two famous outlaws. Paul Newman Robert Redford, and Katherine Ross make a highly agreeable threesome and there's enough witty lines and fine photography to make it worth seeing once again.

CROMWELL (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
Richard Harris and Alec Guiness are opposing lord and king, respectively, in this historical epic about the Puritan Revolution in seventeenth century England. Finely crafted, literate, with excellent performances and details, making this film a cut above most historical spectacles.

GIMME SHELTER (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
The Maysles Brothers followed the Rolling Stones across America and made this stunning documentary about the seamier side of the counter-culture. The final section deals with Altamont, the free concert where Jagger, the Stones, Hell's Angels, and a massive crowd made Woodstock only a concept once more.

HARPER (Amherst Cinema, Amherst)
Paul Newman as a Sam Spade-type detective. All the Bogie touches are there, even Lauren Bacall making the film just plain, dirty fun.

HELP, A HARD'S DAY NIGHT (Saturday SU Ballroom)
The Beatles' first two films, both directed by Richard Lester. A HARD DAY'S NIGHT first broke the image to the media-at-large that there was more beyond the quartet than being just screaming teeny-bopper's idols. It follows a day in the life of the foursome and is an easy-going funny film.

HELP is wilder and far more absurd. One of Ringo's rings is needed by a strange, Eastern cult to perform a religious ceremony and they go to all ends to steal it. Very funny and clever with some fine touches by Lester and some great Lennon--McCartney songs.

KING KONG
The original-uncut version. This means it's a bit more violent and sexual than what you would expect. One of the greatest films of all time, a totally unique achievement. A group of adventure seekers capture King Kong, a giant gorilla, and bring him back to New York. A highly-interpretative, multi-level film that is worth seeing purely on the nostalgia and adventure of it all Fay Wray's finest role.

THE LICKERISH QUARTET (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
Radley Metzger's latest horn flick. Opulent, decadent, and even a bit funny, at times static and boring. Metzger lack's the sense of humor which makes his peer Russ Meyer's exercises such grosse high camp. This film is expensive, lovely to watch yet ponderous if you have seen any sex films before.

LITTLE BIG MAN (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
The most discussed film of the year, it's been found on more "best films" lists than any other. Arthur Penn makes a perfect-ballad-like film out of the fictional autobiography of the 120-year old sole survivor of Custer's Last Stand. Impressive performances come from Dustin Hoffman, Faye Dunaway, and Chief Dan George, who has won the NY Film Critics Award and is up for an Oscar as Best Supporting Actor.

LOVE STORY (Showcase Cinema, West Springfield)
"Did I mention when I was fifteen I took it out of my pants and whacked off on the 107 bus from New York?"

Alexander Portnoy

LOVERS AND OTHER STRANGERS (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
A very well made series of comic vignettes all related to sex and marriage, with Gig Young, Anne Jackson, Bonnie Bedelia, Bea Arthur and a fine, large cast.

OCEANS 11 Friday, Thompson 104, 7 and 9:30)
Frank Sinatra and ten other of his World War Two buddies decide to pull a five-million dollar heist in Las Vegas. It's been on television far too many times and its easily one of the worst films in years.

OLIVER (Sunday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:30)
The film version of Lionel Bart's smash musical success is even better than the original. Dicken's Nineteenth century London is vividly portrayed and all-round good performances make this fine musical worth seeing.

THE PARTY (Friday, Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
Peter Seller's in a mod romp which stretches the joke a bit too far.

THE PASSION OF ANNA (Academy of Music, Northampton)
Bergman's latest. An abrasive look at the lives some complex human relationships.

RABBIT, RUN (Amherst Cinema, Amherst)
John Updike's stark and bleak novel makes a stark and bleak film. James Caan plays a man fed-up with his middle-class life and simply leaves it all behind. Middle America is shown in uncompromising, unsympathetic terms.

TAKE THE MONEY AND RUN (Saturday, Sage Hall, Smith, 7:30 and 9:30)
Woody Allen's comic triumph. A schmuck dreams of being a master criminal and it's all very, very funny to watch.

THE SINGING MARINE (Sunday, Thompson 104, 7 and 9)
A Busby Berkeley musical, with the now legendary elaborate production numbers. Berkeley is now in vogue again thanks to the recent success of "No, No Nanette" on Broadway, which he directed. Dick Powell and Jane Wyman star.

THE TRIAL Tuesday, Thompson 104, 7 and 9:15)
Kafka's allegory. Amman is brought before a judge and jury with no idea as to why. Orson Welles directed and starred, with Anthony Perkins as the young man.

Music

DIDOS AND AENEAS
Henry Purcell's opera, concerning Dido, Queen of Carthage and her love for Aeneas, who is destined to be founder of Rome. The age-old story of two human beings entangled in a reckless relationship. With the Smith-Amherst Orchestra and the Smith College Glee Club and professional soloist in lead roles. Tonight through Sunday at Theater 14, Smith College, 8:30 PM. ($).

PAUL BUTTERFIELD BLUES BAND AND JAMES COTTON BLUES BAND
Two fine groups make some good music tonight at the Cage, Amherst College, at 8. ($).

GRADUATE RECITAL
Gerald Chenoweth, clarinet, will present a graduate recital this Monday at 8 in Bowker Auditorium.

Mr. Chenoweth's program will include Anton Webern's Funf Geistliche Lieder, op. 15 and Drei Volkstexte, and Igor Stravinsky's Berceuses du chat. Soloist for these three pieces will be Donna Harler, soprano. Also included in the program will be Quintet for Four Woodwinds and Percussion by Dr. Frederick Tillis a member of the University Music Department Faculty. The program will conclude with the premiere performance of Mr. Chenoweth's The Ghost of Abel-a cantata by the University Women's Choir and soloists Dorothy Ornest, soprano; Jon Humphrey, tenor; and John d'Armand, bass.

UMASS SYMPHONY BAND
The UMass Symphony Band under the direction of Larry Weed will present a concert this Sunday afternoon at 3 in Bowker Auditorium. The program will include the World Premiere of the Symphony no. 1 of Robert Siligman. The work uses themes of American composer Roy Harris and is in one movement. Mr. Siligman is a recent graduate of the University. Also on the program will be Aaron Copland's "Red Pony ballet suite, and works of Erick Leidzin, Dvorak, Gabrieli, Grainger, Holst, and Shostakovitch.

UMASS WOMEN'S CHOIR
The UMass Woman's Choir, Alarn Harler directing, will be joined by the University of Rochester's Mens Glee Club tonight at 8 in the Campus Center Auditorium. The program will include works of Brahms, Adler, Wayland, Phillips, and Schutz.

Boston Ballet On Way

A spectacular dance series will open in Theatre 14, Smith College on April 3, 4, and 7 with the Boston Ballet Company and featured artists-Edra Toth, Anamarie Sarazin, and Robert Steele, principle dancers of the Boston company, and guests-Violette Verdy and Edward Villelie of the New York City Ballet and Peter Martins of the Royal Danish Ballet.

Violette Verdy, world famous French Ballerina of the New York City Ballet will dance with the Boston Ballet Company in Theatre 14, Smith College, on April 3 at 8:30 and April 4 at 2:30. Also featured in the second season of Dance Concert Series will be Edra Toth, Peter Martins, and Edward Villella.

The program on April 3 (8:30) and April 4 (2:30) will include "Swan Lake, Act II" starring Violette Verdy and Peter Martins; a Rock Ballet, "Gamete Garden", featuring Anamarie Sarazin and Robert Steele (music composed by Michael Kamen with the New York Rock Ensemble and choreography by Louis Falco); "Sleeping Beauty, Pas de Deux" (Verdy, Martins) and "Graduation Ball" performed by members of the company.

On April 4 (8:30) and on Wed. April 7 (special student matinee at 4:00) Edra Toth and Edward Villella will star in "Swan Lake, Act II" and the Pas de Deux from "Le Corsaire". The program will also include the Rock Ballet "Gamete Garden" and "Graduation Ball".

On Wed. evening, April 7, the above program will be repeated, except that a new ballet "Speed Zone" will be premiered (choregraphy by Samuel Kurkjian and music by Paul Hindemith) and will replace the Rock Ballet.

Tickets are on sale Mon.-Fri. from 12-5 in the Theatre Box Office, 584-2700, ext. 840, until March 20 when the college closes for vacation.

Albums: Short Takes

Soft and Subtle

IF I COULD ONLY REMEMBER MY NAME, David Crosby (Atlantic). Each of the talents which made Crosby, Stills, and Nash blend so well together are now being distilled in single albums. Crosby's (with a little help from a wide variety of fellow musicians) is the best so far. Melodious, with rich, subtle harmonies and soft careful phrasing, the album proves David Crosby has come into his own as one of popular music's special talents.

ALEX TAYLOR WITH FRIENDS AND NEIGHBORS, Alex Taylor, (Capricorn)The third member of the Taylor family to have his own album. He sounds like James but wisely doesn't follow either he or Livingston's styles. His is country rock and blues with some fine hack-up. It's probably the Taylor album for those who find the others a bit too maudlin, self-reflective, or simply lacking in musical content. This contains some excellent arrangements with the now immortal grainy--vioce, Taylor sound making it all a very nice combination.

ROAD, Paul Winter Consort (A & M)
Soft jazz, recorded in concerts by an excellent and fairly neglected ensemble. Comprised of winds, guitar, and percussion, the consort cover a wide variety of musical forms--from atonal jazz improvisation to Bach--successfully. The group ar at their best with the easy, free-flowing pieces, yet handle everything well in a most enjoyable album.

THE LADY AND THE UNICORN, John Ewnbourn, (Reprise)
Folk tunes, medieval jazz, and early classical music interpreted on recent instruments, specifically Renbourn's guitar. A different and delightful album not for everyone's tastes.

CURVED AIR, Air Conditioning (Warner Bros.)
Sonja Kristina has one of those rich, cold, fleeting, boring voices fitting this strange album. Take the cover, there hasn't been anything equal to it since Small Faces' round album, and while that was a total delight this is a bit vague and obtuse. The music is packaged towards someone's idea of what drug-using children of Middle America want to hear; long phrasing, Kristina's dragging monotone, unusual instrumentation and a general tone of unreality.

Room To Move

STP - A New Trend?

Early in 1967, the New York Times made public that a new type of psychedelic drug was found in some dope taken during a bust. FDA identified this drug, commonly called STP, as DOM. Since then it has been recognized that the name STP stands for a whole family of related compounds: TMA MDA, MMDA, DOM, DMA, etc. These compounds are considerably different from the well known indole-base psychedelics such as LSD, Mescaline and Psilocybin; rather, they are all Amphetemine-base compounds, i.e. their basic structural components is a speed--they are "speed like" hullucinogens.

Since their "official" discovery, these amphetamine-base hullucinogens have been slowly filling the gap in research left by the psychedelics. In 1965 all LSD research using human subjects was terminated in this country (with the exception of one project) leaving a vacuum in research and drug therapy. Now, there is wide spread use of STP-family compounds on human subjects in therapy and research, but somehow these hallucinogens (riding in the wake of the LSD scare) failed to create the same furor and false concern for physiological damage that LSD had done earlier.

There are a few important reasons why these compounds have provided a more than adequate replacement for LSD in research. Unlike LSD and mescaline, these compounds give minimal perceptual distortions. True, the colors, patterns and movements are perhaps even more vivid than those of LSD, but bizarre psuedo-hallucinations and radical distortions of the environment, often characteristic of high dosages of LSD, are almost entirely absent with the STP-family.

Soc and, because these compounds are closely related to speed, they are more apt to produce more positive emotional responses. Surging energy rushes, persistent and enhanced euphoria, enhanced self awareness are common. STP-family compounds seem to affect the entire body while the traditional indole-base psychedelics are still to a large extent "mind-altering." More important all of the STP-family, particularly MDA, have a profound emotional affect, allowing for free and natural release of strong ememotions, which is often so difficult in an uptight society, which teaches us to bottle up any human feelings we might naturally express.

Also, at least for MDA (though less for DOM and TMA) there is less of an anxiety producing reaction, and less chance of becoming anxious and bumming out. These important differences have made the STP family quite popular in contemporary drug therapy.

At the risk of being obviously predictive, I believe that the amphetamine-base compounds are becoming popular in the student population for those same reasons that they have become popular in therapy and research. There is less of a chance of "bumming out" (especially with MDA and less with DOM at least in the traditional sense of the word. Pent - up emotions and then released more freely than with LSD and energy rushes and bodily sensations make the drugs markedly sensual. Surely, it is not hard to observe that MDA has become popular -- a drug literally unheard of two years ago. A significant change has also taken placed on the drug market.

More and more over the last two years, we have been discovering that what is sold as acid is really STP-family compounds. Yes even Tim Leary and his famous orange sunshine that he (unknowingly) freely distributed as LSD in 1964 was later found to be STP (DOM). Most of the orange sunshine and a large percentage of various microdots sold as really good acid have been found to be substances in the STP-family. From our own analyses, we have found a lot of the acid this year to be STP (DOM) and DMA, but there is still a lot of industrial acid around. Whether the appearance of STP-family compounds are indicative of a type of supply and demand remains to be seen.

A number of practical questions arise in light of this new trend. First, how can one tell if he is tripping on an indole-psychedelic (LSD) (or an STP produce (MDA, DOM, etc)? If you get tremendous energy rushes and strong visceral feelings you are probably either tripping on an STP compound or LSD-mixed-with-speed. Pupil dilation, common to the psychedelics is not found with STP compounds. Duration of the trip is also different. Pure LSD and mescaline--no matter how high the dosage--never last longer than 8-10 hours. If you go 12-16 hours (or three weeks) you have taken an STP-family compound or a psychedelic-mixed-with-speed or some other shit.

A second important question is: What are the dangers involved? How can I use STP drugs with the most safety? Although traditional bummers are uncommon, a new type of bummer is common to STP compounds -- it concerns sleeping. Because of the vast amount of energy consumed during the trip, people get exhausted by the tenth hour but will not be able to sleep for a number of hours after that. They become anxious, jittery, bored and complain about not being able to sleep.

A second warning concerns physiological damage. As far as can be detected from a minimum of evidence, it is not wise to do these regularly (like once a week!) as they can cause damage. If they are to be done at all, sporadic use can be done with some safety, as any affects are repairable, but should not be done too often. A few times a year only may be the safest.

Maine Likes Gentle Living

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP)—A Waterville legislator Thursday told the Liquor Control Committee that if it's "still interested in preserving the art of gentle living and drinking," it ought to approve a bill allowing the sale of beer in kegs.

Democratic Rep. Earl H. Smith, sponsor of the proposal that would eliminate the ban on the sale of kegs of beer to individuals, was backed by a Colby College delegation.

Smith said the anti-keg ruling is contrary to efforts to encourage "tasteful and gentile drinking."

Testimony Heard Concerning Schools

The State legislatures Committee on Education heard testimony Monday on a number of bills affecting UMass campuses in Amherst, Worcester, and Boston.

Bills in question would establish an evening school in Amherst, a veterinarian school in Worcester, a course in penology in Both Amherst and Boston, a law school in Amherst, and a six-year medical course leading to a doctorate at the UMass Medical in Worcester.

Area representatives also pressed for construction of a new fieldhouse on the Amherst campus, and for student representation on the UMass Board of Trustees.

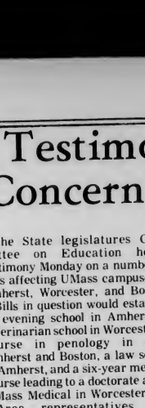
State Rep. Thomas G. Simons, R—Montague, appeared before the committee to support his bill which would establish a special commission to study the establishment of an evening school at UMass-Amherst.

A measure to establish a school of veterinary medicine at UMass Medical School in Worcester, was strongly supported by Sen. Barrus, the Massachusetts Farm Bureau, the state Department of Agriculture, and the Mass. Veterinary Association.

Sen. Barrus also urged the legislature to direct UMass trustees to develop a penology course at both Amherst and Boston campuses.

Rep. Simons also testified in favor of his proposal to direct a special study commission to inquire into the possibility of a new convocation center on the Amherst campus to replace the Curry Hicks Cage.

The proposed center would have multiple uses, including basketball, hockey, major indoor conferences, concerts, guest speakers, major cultural events, and provide an alternate site for graduation exercise, Rep. Simons said.



He added that Curry Hicks Cage has a limited seating capacity of 4,200, inadequate for a state university whose enrollment is nearing 20,000 students.

In calling for a six-year course in medicine at UMass-Worcester for qualified high school graduates, Rep. Edward T. Connelly, R—Agawam, noted that present entrance requirements insist that applicants be graduated from a four-year premed course.

"A six-year course in medicine, leading to a doctorate, for high school students would expedite our medical education programs in the state," Rep. Connelly told the committee.

Rep. John W. Olver, D—Amherst urged the committee to approve his bill, which calls for student representation on the UMass board of trustees, and Rep. Allan McGuane, D—Greenfield, appeared in behalf of his bill to establish a school of law in the state operated university.

The Committee on Education, under the leadership of Rep. Michael J. Daly D—Boston, took all UMass bills under advisement

Students For Peace Propose Peoples' Treaty

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU
MDC Staff

The Students for Peace met recently to inform and organize its newly-increased fold. The group has in sight its own extension of a national coalition projecting the resolution of the war in Viet Nam.

"There are different ways of shutting down the war", said Jon Weissman, one of the students, and ours involves the international ratification of a "People's Peace Treaty". He is its stand:

"Be it known that the Americans and Vietnamese people are not enemies. The war is carried out in the name of the people of the United States and South Vietnam but without our consent. It destroys the land and the people of Vietnam. It drains America of its resources, its youth and its honor."

"We hereby agree to end the war on the following terms, so that both peoples can live under the joy of independence and can devote themselves to building a society based on human equality and respect for the earth," he continued. "In rejecting the war, we also reject all forms of racism and discrimination against people based on color, class, sex, national origin, and ethnic grouping which torn the basis of the war policies of present and past United States Governments."

The Treaty goes on to list nine points intended to bring about these conditions. Copies of this treaty will be distributed throughout the campus as part of the Students campaign for support.

The campus efforts will also include teach-ins, dormitory floor-meetings, special tables set up in the dining commons, radio broadcasts, a campus-wide referendum, and various other forms of publicity.

The national coalition is planning training workshops on disruptive behavior" in preparation for mass demonstrations in Washington this spring. They also intend to send a delegate to the Paris Peace Talks with their collected signatures.

March To Free Black Panthers

A group of people from the five college area will be participating in a march to demand freedom for jailed Black Panther Party members Bobby Seale and Erika Huggins and all political prisoners this Saturday, March 13, at 12 noon in New Haven.

The march will begin at different points in New Haven and will go to the Superior Court.

Participants are urged to bring posters and banners, and a can of food to support the New Haven Community free food program, a spokesman for the group said.

Seale is accused of first-degree murder and kidnapping resulting in the death of Panther Alex Rackley in May, 1969. Huggins is charged with kidnapping resulting in death. Seale faces the electric chair if convicted.

Cars will be leaving in front of Whitmore Saturday at 10:00 a.m. To coordinate transportation, interested persons can sign up at the table outside the Hatch during the day or call 586-2376 after 5:00.

Film Institue Offered For June

The University Film Study Center (UFSC) and Hampshire College announced this week their first annual summer institute, "Film and Photography," to be held at Hampshire's new campus near Amherst, Mass., June 20-July 3.

The Institute will be a two-week, concentrated educational experience for teachers, potential teachers, students and enthusiasts of film and photography. Six areas of intensive study are offered: Film Making, introducing a newly developed Super-8mm sync sound system; Basic and Advanced Photography workshops a seminar on effective film teaching approaches for secondary, college and university levels; a study of the influence of Soviet Cinema in the development of film; and a survey of Photography and Literature as expressions of American Culture.

Room and board are available. Applicants are advised to register as soon as possible. Registration for the Institute is limited. Deadline is May 15, 1971.

Campus Radio Lists Programs For Sunday

"Black Perspective" is a show dealing with the Black point of view, with the comments and views that surround the issues.

Hosting the show will be Noah.

The first show begins on Sunday evening at eight P.M. on WMUA with a rap with Dr. Cass Turner concerning "The Black Student on a White Campus," and other discussions of importance.

Preceeding "Black Perspective" will be "Liberation Front News" at 7 p.m., a new program dealing with the latest news and information coming from revolutionary fronts all over the world.

WMUA will also feature the International Hour, at 9 p.m.; "Around the World in Sixty Minutes", hosted by George Courmouzis, presents music and information from around the world.

Musical Sabbath At Smith

A Shirat Atideinu - song of our future - musical Sabbath service will be celebrated by the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundations of Smith College and Amherst College tonight at 7:30.

The service, to be held in the Helen Hills Hills Chapel at Smith, is open to the public. It is part of a series of special musical events sponsored by the Hillel Foundations over the past three years on the campuses.

The service was composed by Arthur Yolkoff and makes elaborate use of traditional modes from both the Ashenazic Western and Sephardic Eastern traditions. It also incorporates folk motifs. The service had its first performance in 1966 at Congregation Beth El in Akron, Ohio.

This work will be performed by the Freshman Choir Alpha under the direction of Lawrence Doebler, a member of the music department at Smith.

Describing the relevance of the service, Rabbi Lander, associate chaplain of Smith and director of the Hillel Foundations, noted that, "In each generation, the Jewish people sang to its God in the modes of its day. Both psalms and modern folk rock music provide channels of worship. It is our attempt in performing these special musical services to expose the student and general community to these forms so that they may become a regular part of their worship."

S.A.D. Wants Draft Repealed

Selective Alternatives to the Draft is currently conducting a drive aimed at enlisting people to write letters to Senators, Representatives and members of the Senate Armed Services Committee to petition for an end to the draft.

S.A.D.'s basic belief in this campaign is that the draft cannot be merely reformed, it must be totally repealed and substituted by some sort of "super agency", by combining the Peace Corps and Vista into one.

In their campaign, S.A.D. is hoping that those who are concerned and disturbed about the draft will bring to the minds and attention of members of Congress the sentiments of the people concerning such questions as that of the President's power to induct the President's blank check on the nation's manpower procurement without Congressional approval; and the fact that the President's own Gates Commission has urged a volunteer army and an end to the draft. They also wish to impress upon the minds of Congressmen that the draft in any form is the most flagrant violation of an individual's rights.

This campaign is aimed at influencing congressional vote on the upcoming debate over the extension of the Selective Service Act of 1969.

Larry Romanovitch, director of the Amherst branch of S.A.D., can be contacted every night except Thursday at room #4 159 North Pleasant St., Amherst; phone 253-9968 for further information.

Dr. Wald To Give Free Lecture Tonite

Dr. George Wald, a Nobel Prize winner, known as much for his political views as for his contributions to biology, will give a free public lecture Friday, March 12 at 8:00 p.m. in Johnson Chapel, Amherst College.

Dr. Wald is a Higgins Professor of Biology at Harvard University and co-recipient of the Nobel Prize for Medicine in 1967.

Dr. Wald will speak on the topic: "Therefore Choose Life." The scientist is an articulate opponent of the Draft, the Vietnam War, a large standing army, the arms race and the military-industrial establishment.

In 1968 Amherst College honored Dr. Wald with the honorary degree Doctor of Science, indicating in its citation that he had "demonstrated that persistent and increasing specialization...can and in your case did open up once more to the fields of the general and the liberal."

Dr. Wald is a graduate of New York University with M.A. and Ph.D degrees from Columbia University. He has been a Fellow of the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute (Berlin and Heidleberg), and has served on the faculties of the University of Chicago and the University of Zurich. The scientist has taught at Harvard since 1934. He has been widely honored not only for specialized research but for his contribution to general education in science.

International Club Elects New Officers

The International Club elected ten new officers to serve for 1971 at a meeting held March 4. The new President is Mohammad Ullah, a graduate student in Industrial Engineering from Pakistan. His Vice President is Hao-Jan Chang, a doctoral candidate in Chemistry who comes from Taiwan.

Miss Mumtaz Nathani, an undergraduate from Uganda, was elected First Secretary of the Club. The post of Second Secretary went to Larry Frates, an American graduate student. Serving as Treasurer will be Sajjad Naseer, a Pakistani graduate student in government.

Ex-officio members of the Executive Council are Francisco Roig, from Spain; Jacob Chacko, from India; a Greek student, George Courmouzis; Stanley Ndorakaarusoke, from Uganda; and Chia-ling Lee, from Taiwan.

There will be a meeting as soon as possible to plan activities for the rest of the spring semester. One item under consideration is an International Fair, such as was held with some success last year.

The intention of the Club, according to its constitution, is "to promote understanding and friendly relations among the members of various nationalities at the University and between them and the surrounding community, by means of appropriate activities."

Membership and participation are open to persons of any nationality.

Announcements of Club activities are made in the Collegian and the Foreign Student News Bulletin. The latter publication, issued monthly, is available free from the Foreign Student Office, Whitmore 229. Call 545-2843 to be put on the mailing list.

Program Council Plans To Continue Dances

By JOHN S. CARDILE
MDC Staff

Installation of new officers and the welcoming of new members high-lighted a recent Program Council meeting.

The chairman announced that John Barth will be lecturing on April 29 and plans for the childrens' Easter party will be beginning this week.

A Spring Weekend is planned for April 30-May 1, and the free, Friday night, Hatch live band dances have been called a success and will continue at least through March and into April.

The question of what events will actually make up Spring Weekend have yet to be decided. The ideas of free concerts by the pond, afternoon concerts and barbeques and tie-dye parties were discussed, but nothing was made definite.

The treasurer's report was given with a report of less than $8,000 to spend on the rest of the semester, which includes $4,000 for the Crafts Guild, and a possible $1,000 on a Dada-Surealistic festival.

A Play by the Black Flag Players called "Home" was voted to be presented, if a group from P.C. approves the play at a rehearsal. This experimental multi-media show is new and the council wishes to be sure that the money put into it will be worth while.

The offer to support "Spirit in Flesh" was turned down. Room to Move needed a category change in their their budget by Student Senate but if the change did not go through, P.C. was asked to support the group. The reason for the denial was that the P.C. has decided not to support religious groups and since "Spirit in Flesh" is a group forming the commune, Brotherhood of the Spirit of Warwick, Mass, P.C. could not support the group.

A request for $1,000 to revive the Freshmen Mugbook was voted down by a majority of the membership. P.C. was to join the Student Senate and the Greeks in reviving the well used book that was ended after the, now junior class, entered.

A Student Industries Night, similar to the Winter Carni happening on the 2nd concorse level will be looked into by a special task force.

Bologna Deadline Now April 1

Students who wish to apply for the few openings still available in the Bologna Summer Program may do so my submitting an application form before April 1. The Program runs from June 17 to August 9. From August 9, when classes end in Bologna, to August 26, when the Program's charter flight will bring the group back to the United States, participants will be free to travel on their own.

Participating students have the opportunity to earn six regular credit hours by choosing two courses from art, government, history, Italian language and literature. All courses are given in English and knowledge of Italian is not a prerequisite for joining the program. Classes are concentrated on a four day schedule from Monday to Thursday. Weekends are thereby left free either for organized field trips to such major cultural centers as Rome, Venice, Florence, Siena, and Pisa, or for independent travel.

Exclusive of -board, which the student must provided for himself, the cost of the Bologna Summer Program is $725. This amount includes air transportation to and from the United States, tuition, health, and library fees, field trips in Italy, and room rent in Bologna from the day of arrival to August 9.

Application forms and further information are available from Professor Roland Sarti, director of the Summer Program, in Room 611, Herter Hall.

Drive Started To Aid Poor

Beginning March 14th and extending through April 4th, the Newman Club will sponsor a drive to aid the poor of Appalachia. This is a chance for the entire University Community to take an active part in alleviating the suffering of the needy in this area. Unfortunately the poor of Appalachia are only too often forgotten by our government. This is especially true now with our current military and economic situation causing cutbacks in aid to Appalachia (and to other depressed areas).

Some desparately needed items are: clothes, sewing supplies, household goods, shoes and boots, school supplies, soap, dry foods and vitamins and aspirins. Any cash donations would also be greatly appreciated.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Dr. George Abel, director of the astronomy department of the University of California at Los Angeles, has been my debating opponent on at least three occasions, including an encounter over educational television. Dr. Abel, although not an astrology enthusiast, has tried to keep himself informed on the subject. It is always a pleasure to meet with and debate him. This cannot be said for most astronomers.

Dempsey And Greeley: Two Reserves, True Assets

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

For many hoopsters the scoring average is a true estimate of one's playing ability. But for senior reserve veterans Bob Dempsey and Bill Greeley it just presents a total picture of deception.

While the pair's scoring credentials combined probably don't amount to much more than the average sum, their availability and readiness to come off the bench in key situation reflects credibly in the final analysis. Marking time on the bench doesn't come easy to anyone. But it's an even more difficult task to come into a ball game prepared to do the job when you're called upon. Head Coach Jack Leaman feels that they have been more than adequate in bolstering the bench and adding depth to a squad which is already blessed in balance.

"I don't think that it's any accident that UMass started winning when Dempsey and Greeley came into our program, declares the Redman mentor. Their three year record is 58-17 and by the end of this span, they will have played in two national tourneys. You can't ask much more than that from any player."

They've both been excellent team players. They enthusiasm and desire have deinitely helped us to the best three year varsity record in UMass basketball. Both have made significant contributions to this ball club. At some time in their careers either one has started in a key ball game and has come through with clutch play."

Looking back over his schoolboy days, Dempsey was quite the basketball player for Durfee High (Fall River) where he was an All-State guard for two years. In his senior season the co-captain averaged 17 points per outing while his school secured the state title with a 25-12 log (1966).

The other members who rounded out Durfee's starting cast that year did well for themselves, too. Brother Ted, a former Providence hurler who registered a 10-6 record with the Friars, is currently working towards his PHd in education here at the university. Former teammate Ernie Fleming brought along a junior college buddy in Artis Gilmore and has helped to make Jacksonville the team it is. One mate played ball at Vermont for two years before withdrawing and another received a grid scholarship.

Dempsey insists that baseball was always his game and he sometimes regrets having abandoned it for the hardwood. He qualified for the Hearst sandlot team two of the three years he played on the high school diamond.

All it took was a one year stay at North Yarmouth (Maine) Prep Academy and the athletic Fall Riverite never knew the confines of a dugout again. His 25-point scoring average complimented that of Ray Johnson's 35 (now at P.C.) and carried North Yarmouth into the finals of the New England Prep School Tourney where they bowed after a 22-game unbeaten streak.

But the ball didn't stop for Dempsey there--it kept rolling for 10 more games. Selected to the NE All-Star Prep team, he was just one of the better reasons his squad went undefeated in a three week tour of Europe. He paced his mates with an 18 point scoring average and toted home the MVP honors.

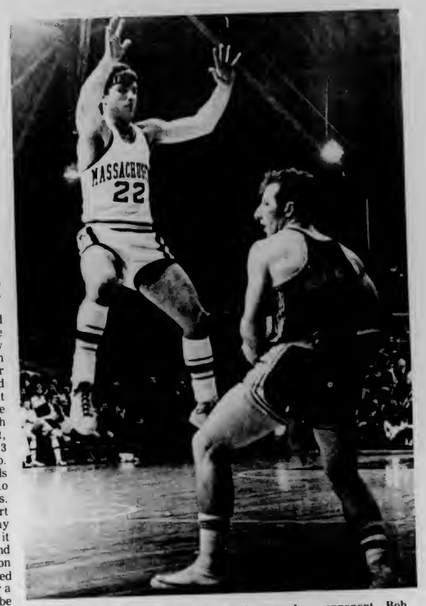
Greeley, an All-State guard for Melrose High, likewise led his team to a state championship in basketball-- and they did it a year after Durfee turned the trick.

A campaign earlier the Class B champs were nearly afforded the opportunity to tangle with Dempsey's team. But the chance was scratched out when they fell by one to Westboro. Westboro, by the way, was immediately banished by banner-bound Durfee in the semi-finals.

Two of Greeley's team mates went on to play collegiate ball. Bill Jacobsen, 6'6", is at Dartmouth. Wayne Peiria, 6'8", had the dubious distinction of playing against Ernie Fleming (a Durfee boy, don't forget) when the later attended Gardner Webb Junion College.

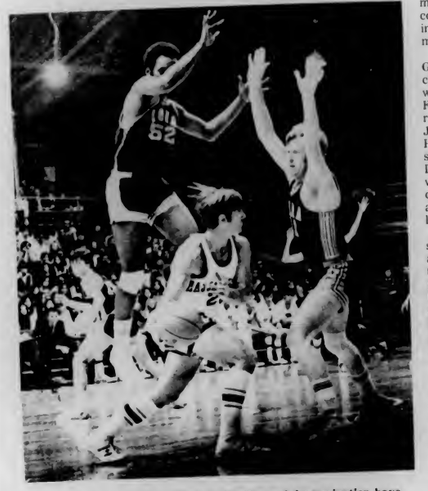
Greeley was a three-sports standout at Melrose, competing in football and baseball besides basketball.

Dempsey and Greeley had proven themselves enough to be dubbed fine schoolboys in every sense. UMass wasted no time in recruiting them. When given their first test of the collegiate brand they didn't exactly shine on, but were contributing cogs to the freshman's 12-7 slate under coach Broaca. Despite a 28 point debut, Dempsey could muster only a 7.3 average. Greeley scored at 6.6 clip.



In any event the two guards made a good enough impression to graduate into the varsity ranks. With an incomparable backcourt combo in All-YanCon greats Ray Ellerbrook and Joey DiSarcina, it would appear that Dempsey and Greeley wouldn't see much action as sophomores. Well, as it turned out DiSarcina was inactivated for a spell and a guard post had to be filled. Leaman went to his young guards, alternating the duty. They responded to the opportunity and performed well. Of seven games Dempsey started, the Redmen won seven. As for Greeley, he played more than last year and this year combined. UMass ranked second in New England and had a 17-7 mark.

It was rather unfortunate for Greeley and Dempsey that they came at a time when the Redmen were loaded with talented guards. For any possible steady starting role eluded them last year when John Betancourt and Mike Pagliara worked their way into the scene after an unbeaten frosh year. DiSarcina was gone but Ellerbrook was rounding out the final leg of his career. As a result, the amount of action they saw was considerably lessened.



Much of the same is true this season. Pagliara and Betancourt are established starters, and transfer student Tom McLaughlin gets his share of playing time. But there have been situations this season when Dempsey and Greeley have demonstrated that they possess the ability of a starter, despite their consistent role as a reserve.

Dempsey had his night in the Northeastern tilt, fitting in for Pagliara who was struck with the flu. In 30 minutes of action he caged eight points, two for three from the floor and four in as many charity shots. Tabbed as one of the better ball handlers on the club, Dempsey pleased the crowd well.

The UConn evening belonged to Greeley. He was inserted with 13 minutes left, hit on four of five long bombs, and employed his usually tenacious defense.

GREELEY ON THE MOVE--Dedication and determination have been the trademarks of Bill Greeley, shown in action against Iona. He has been a key figure in the bright UMass hoop picture during the past three years. (MDC photo by Gary Slickman.)

Asked if the role of being a reserve has been frustrating at times, Greeley replied: "I'm not going to say that it doesn't bother anyone from accomplishing from what he sets out to do. But you have to adjust to things or else you're going to be in trouble. And I guess I've sort of adjusted to this situation.

"I know my contributions haven't been overwhelming because I've been on the bench. But if I've done anything I can say I've worked pretty hard in practice to get the team ready to play. Everybody likes to think they're No. 1, and it's hard when someone else comes along who can do it as well if not better. But one good consolation is that I've been a member of a championship team. That's the way I've rationalized it."

Greeley says he intends to work with coach Broaca next year as Ray Ellerbrook did this season, then he hopes to secure a high school coaching job the following fall.

Dempsey gives his version to being a reserve: "As time went on I din't improve, from my freshman to my sophomore and junior and senior years because of a lack of playing time. I never saw anyone improve who sat on the bench. It's partially my fault, since I didn't play up to my potential. In order to play up here you have to put out 150 percent in practice. Sometimes I didn't. The coach says if he doesn't have confidence in you in practice he can't play you in a game. And that's what happened to me.

But now I see things in a different light. It's kind of tough sitting on the bench. A lot of times you see a certain spot where you could've done the job. But any time the coach calls you, you've got to be ready. That's the thing you're waiting for. And I think that every time the coach has called on me I feel I've been ready."

Dempsey and Greeley have been in perpetual competition against each other for four years. They've remained the best of friends--they roomed together as freshmen, went to Sam Jones' basketball camp together and belong to Theta Chi Fraternity. How much action one sees in the NIT will certainly be influential upon the other's playing time. Asked if there has been any friction amongst them. Dempsey took a friendly jab: "The only friction there has been has been caused by a few girls we've dated!"

New Olympic Facility To Highlight Track Season

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

With a little help from mother nature one of the best outdoor track facilitics in the nation will be ready when the UMass track team opens its outdoor dual meet schedule on the 10th of April hosting New England's top two indoor teams, Boston University and Northeastern.

Undoubtedly this new Olympic track will be the highlight of the season as it will provide for the first time in a while a chance for UMass sports fans to come out and see some of the top individual performers in New England who compete for the Redmen.

For the past couple of seasons names such as Ron Wayne, Walter Mayo, Jerry Spellman, Dave Evans, Eddie Arcaro, Cal Carpenter and Rip Dyer have covered these pages with their excellence in track competition. Now the opportunity has come for UMass fans to see these stars in action.

During this past indoor season the track team was both unsuccessful in dual meets and under par in companionship competition. This spring season should see a change as added outdoor events will enable the Redmen to fortify their ranks for the tough schedule that it will face.

Sprinting and hurdling have been the main strong points for UMass in recent years. This season the Redmen fielded the strongest group of performers in New England in each event during the indoor season. With the addition of the 220 yard run and the 440 yard relay the sprinters will have two more chances to chalk up points.

With an extra hurdle event Spellman and Jim Graves will have another opportunity to score.

The final area is in the throwing events. Eddie Arcaro was the lone weight man during indoor season in both the shot and the weight throw. With the addition of the javelin, discus and hammer throw and with added support from Rocco Pettito, Jim Queeney, John Homan, Peter Natti, Gil Silvia and Bruce Bursey, the UMass weight crew will be a formidable outfit.

Beside the old top flight performers, UMass fans will be able to get a look at some of the younger blood on the team who will be the nucleus of next Year's squad.

Names such as Ed Shaunessey, Steve Levine, John Maloney, Mike Teasdale, Gene Costello, Tom Jasmin, Roger Nasatka and Doug O'Connell, who will be the news makers in track in the next couple of years will be able to use the spring to continue their development.

With the toughest track schedule to face the Redmen in some time, a blending of the old and the new will be needed to make the spring track season a success.

Redman Pair Named All-YanCon

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

Julius Erving and John Betancourt, who sparked UMass to its fourth consecutive Yankee Conference Championship and its second straight N.I.T. bid were named along with Bob Staak of UConn and Nate Adger and Dwight Tolliver of Rhode Island to the All-Yankee Conference First Team.

Second team honors went to Redman Ken Mathias, Steve Rowell and Phil Hickson of Rhode Island, Bob Boyd of UConn and Dwight Peters of New Hampshire.

Honorable mentions went to Ron Hrubala (UConn), Dave Pemberton (UNH), Nick Susi (Maine), Ed Molloy (URI) and Ray Ortiz (Vermont).

Erving, who led all New England scorers and rebounders and was eighth and third in both departments in the nation, was the only unanimous choice of the six league coaches and this came as no surprise. The 6'6 junior all-American, who was honored earlier in the week in being named to Basketball Weekly's all-American team, was the dominating force in all Redman games during the regular season. His scoring, his rebounding and his defense were the driving force in the Redman surge to basketball prominance.

Betancourt was named on four ballots for first team and two for second. In his second straight season as a starter, the 5'10 junior averaged 12.8 points a game and led all Redmen in assists with 113. He was the spark of the team with his ability to come up with the big game when needed a major factor in UMass basketball success.

Coach Jack Leaman commented on his play, "John is the spark that ignited the team. When he played well the team played well. He did a good job both defensively and offensively and was the key to our running game which is our most effective type of play."

Adger and Tolliver are both seniors and all Yankee Conference opponents are happy to hear this. Adger averaged 17 points per game and was the big guy under the boards for the Rams. Tolliver, 5'9, was consistent throughout the season and was deadly from the outside with his left-handed shot. On defense he was as good at his position as any guard in New England.

Staak is also a senior and one of the best shooters in New England. He averaged 20.9 points a game and hit almost 50% from the floor with his stylish jump shot.

Mathias came on strong in the second half of the Redman season to establish himself as one of the best big men in New England. He hit 56% from the floor averaging 10.4 points and 9.6 rebounds a game.

The selection of Rowell, a sophomore and Hickson, a junior, gives Rhode Island four starters on the two all-conference teams. Both forwards are strong up front with Rowell leading the Rams in scoring with 17.1 points and Hickson one of the leading percentage shooters in the region. Both will be back next year.

Boyd is the second half of the hot-shooting UConn duo along with Staak. He averaged 18 points on the season and along with Staak will be graduating this year which is also good news for UConn opponents.

HOOP NOTES-Two more teams were added to the N.I.T. field a couple of days ago. From the Big Ten league runner-up Michigan was picked to become the first Big Ten team to compete in the N.I.T....An interesting note on the Michigan selection is that its coach John Orr was the former head coach of basketball at UMass and his assistant was none other than Jack Leaman....Also picked was Big Eight runner-up Oklahoma which will be making its second straight appearance in the tournament....The Sooners have a record of 19-7....The last four bids will come from the Atlantic Coast Conference, which is presently completing its league playoffs, and from the Missouri Valley Conference...Pairings will probably be made on Monday and Tuesday at which time a notice will be made of ticket sales.

YANCON BACKCOURT-All-Yankee Conference first team guards Dwight Tolliver (12) of Rhode Island and John Betancourt (10) test each others skills in early season play at Rhode Island. These two were joined by Julius Erving, Bob Staak (UConn) and Nate Adger (URI) on the All-Yankee Conference five. (MDC photo by Gary Slickman)

Gymnasts Complete Compulsories; Team Championship Today

First day competition of the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Championships came to an end yesterday as each of the eight league members completed the compulsory exercises in each event.

The top three teams at the end of the competition were Penn State with 147.10 points, UMass, 133.00 and Springfield College, 117.90.

High scorer for UMass in the floor exercise was John Calabria with a 7.9. Jack Berner and Tony Vacca had scores of 7.8 and 7.2. High scorer in the event was Ron Clemmer of Temple with 8.7. Penn State took the lead after this event with a score of 24.0, UMass followed with 22.9 and Springfield had 22.85.

UMass lost a little ground in the sidehorse event. Springfield took this event with 24.6 points with Penn State second at 24.45 followed by Navy with 23.5. An outstanding performance was turned in by Worthington of Navy who posted a 9.4. Rick Riley and Vacca of UMass, both strong competitors throughout the season, contributed scores of 7.65 and 7.25.

UMass' score for this event was 21.35. Penn State now led with 48.45 points, Springfield moved into second at 47.45 with UMass dropping to third with 44.25 points.

Dan Spier led UMass in the rings with 7.85. Penn State took this event with 23.35. UMass took second with 22.55 and Springfield was next with 19.15 points.

MARSHALL AVENER-This Penn State gymnast was the top performer in yesterday's parallel bar competition. A sophomore, he is a member of the U.S. World Games team in his specialty, all-around.

In the long horse vaulting the Redmen scored 22.60 points. Penn State won this event with a mark of 26.60, followed by Temple with 25.60 and Army, 24.35. Vacca's average score was 8.0 to lead all UMass vaulters. Kruist of Penn State had top score of 9.2.

Parallel bars and high bars were strong events for UMass. Redman Dave Genest pulled a strong 8.4 to lead UMass in parallel bars. Penn State's Marshall Avener scored 8.85 to win the event. The Nittany Lions again won the event with 25.05. UMass was second with 22.40 and Springfield was third, 16.00.

The last event, high bar, had Penn State on top with 24.35, UMass second with 21.20 and Army next with 14.30.

Today's competition will feature optional routines in all events with the E.I.G.L. team championship at stake. Competition will be held from 1-3:30 p.m. and 7-9:30.

The championships will conclude tomorrow with the individual championships beginning at 2 p.m. at Curry Hicks Cage.

Matmen At Regionals

By BOB GANLEY
MDC Staff

Having disposed of the Springfield Chiefs and most of the other wrestling teams in New England last weekend, the UMass wrestlers try to add Harvard and UNH to the list this weekend when they compete in the NCAA New England Regional tournament to be held at Harvard College.

This is the NCAA's official university division tournament to determine the qualifiers for the national tournament later in the month at Auburn University. Only university division teams will be competing and this eliminates many of New England's strongest teams. Springfield and Central Connecticut will be eliminated and many other university teams are not going to bother to go.

URI, which finished fourth in the NEWA tourney last week, is not going and neither is Connecticut. The only additions will be UNH, which missed the tourney last week, and Eastern League member Harvard. The other Eastern League team, Yale, is on NCAA probation due to the controversial Jack Langer case of a year ago.

Since there are no team championships at stake, several of the teams are bringing only partial squads, including the Redmen. Seven of the eight place winners in last week's upset over Springfield will be wrestling for the right to compete in the nationals. This list includes champions Shelly Goldberg, Tom Young, and Carl Dambman, as well as Dave Amato, George Zguris, Dave Reynolds and Clay Jester.

Since many of the wrestlers who placed ahead of the Redmen last week won't be competing, there is an excellent chance that UMass will be well represented at the nationals. The first and second place winners qualify.

Among the wrestlers from other schools who will be in the race for the nationals, are Harvards Coleman at 150, Starr at 177, and Fowler at 158. UNH is represented by Don Stahlman, probably the favorite at 158, and Larry Woods at 167. Dartmouth will have three fine wrestlers in New England champ Ted Thompson at 177, Steve Morelli at 150 and Dick Pritchard at unlimited. Brown's contingent includes Serge Brunner at 126 and a fine heavyweight Ed Walsh. Other schools competing are BC, BU and MIT.

Coach Homer Barr of the Redmen feels that although the team has suffered a letdown after its tremendous victory of a week ago, the team should be ready. It is a case of a wrestler not having to worry about how his team does and can concentrate on his own effort. Barr feels that all seven of the wrestlers will place in the top two and hopes they can keep their momentum going into the nationals.

Skiers Seek N.E. Title

This weekend the UMass ski team puts its season's accomplishments behind them as it travels to New Hampshire to compete in the N.E.I.S.C., New England Interscholastic Skiing Championships, which includes the top four teams from the Oxborne, Thompson, and Northern Divisions.

Coach William MacConnell's varsity squad has disposed of Boston College, Worcester Polytechnic Institute, Amherst, Dartmouth, Tufts, Bentley, Northeastern, Babson and Boston University en route to these all important meets at Wildeat and Cranmore Ski areas in Jackson and North Connelly, N.H. respectively.

Co-captains John Gray and Jim Lattinger, along with seniors Chuck Walker, Ted Martin and Jerry Curran comprise the varsity team that will compete in the slalom Saturday and Giant Slalom Sunday. They will be accompanied by Curt Sayer and alternate Tuck Woodruff, two excellent freshman skiers and future prospects.

Last year, UMass made a fine showing in the N.E.I.S.C., placing second of twelve teams. This year, they will have to really be keen to top teams such as Norwich University of the Northern Division. The Redman skiers are in fine shape to garner a first place finish in this weekend's events, but it's a sure bet that the other eleven teams will show up ready to race.

Vets Protest War, Rally At Westover

By STEVE FELD
MDC Staff

The Veterans for Peace, a newly-formed group at UMass, peacefully demonstrated against all United States involvement in Indochina Saturday outside the main gate of Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee.

The gathering began at 11:15 A.M. when about 60 protesters, consisting of Veterans for Peace and the UMass Student Mobilization Committee, marched from a nearby road to Westover carrying various anti-war signs and chanting peace slogans. They stationed themselves in front of the main gate and proceeded to distribute leaflets explaining their cause to cars entering the Base.

Bernie Lougee and George Schuerer, co-chairmen of the group, and Dick Ryan, a veteran of the Vietnam War, spoke following the march.

"The common people in Vietnam are against the Americans and are supporting the Viet Cong," said Ryan. "They do not want us there. We should get out."

Lougee echoed his thoughts. "Opposition to the war is no longer restricted to students and Communists. Veterans for Peace is getting larger and larger."

By 12:15, the crowd slowly started to disperse.

"In terms of what we wanted to accomplish, I'd say that this demonstration was very successful", explained Lougee.

The purpose of the demonstration was two-fold, he said. First, it was intended to show to the public that antiwar sentiment is composed of many diverse elements. It also was to express solidarity among G.I.'s who talk against the war, he added.

"A veteran is a figure of credibility and respect", explained Rick Duggan, a member of the group. "We want to show that there are veterans against the war."

There were no attempts to go on the Base nor was there even the slightest hint of violence.

The Chicopee Police commented that the crowd was peaceful and that there were no problems.

The Veterans for Peace will concentrate on moving into different communities and talking to people, convincing other veterans to join, a spokesman said. There are many VFP organizations throughout the country, he continued. They are, at present, unorganized but in the process of getting together, he said.

On April 24 the Veterans for Peace will join in the mass demonstration to be held in Washington, D.C. They will start a petition to present to a Massachusetts representative signed by any veteran against the Indochina War.

Their next meeting will be held this Thursday at 7 p.m. room 817 of the Campus Center. All interested veterans are urged to attend.

By DENISE MAGNELL
MDC Staff

University presidents, private businessmen, and UMass professors and students were among the approximately 200 persons who gathered in the ninth floor meeting rooms of the Campus Center mid-afternoon Friday to discuss the future of the UMass community.

President Wood's Committee on the Future University, here for a two-day session Thursday and Friday, centered their discussion on the "content and organization of the curriculum," but touched upon other topics as well including counseling, residential colleges, and the role of the Trustees.

The elimination of grades was examined extensively in a group "headed" by Rev. Michael Walsh, S.J., President of Fordham University. Arguing in favor of such a move was Student Senator Phil Cohen asking that "students and faculty get together...treating each class individually...creating less of a feeling of working for your mark."

The problem of transfering pass/fail standards on to graduate work was cited as the major obstacle in the way of totally eliminating grades. Rev. Walsh added that until there is recognition of this system in graduate schools, there will be more pressure on students taking graduate entrance examinations.

In the case of a pass/portfolio system, it was felt that smaller schools would benefit more since faculty members could get to know their students better, affording them more individual evaluation.

Turning to University core requirements, many students agreed that it was good for the University to recommend a structure, but not to force it on them, offering a set of guidelines instead.

One student speaking in favor of the present set-up said, "Kids don't know what they want when they come up here...core requirements help you experience, find out what you really want." To which a co-ed rebutted, "They may not know what they want, but they know what they don't want."

"They (administration) want me to be well-rounded according to their standards, but these aren't my standards, and they aren't taking my ideas into consideration," explained one girl from Project 10.

A senior reflecting over his almost-four years here said that there had been more social than curriculum change during his stay, and that he thought the University core should be relaxed and the individual department requirements made stricter.

Inadequate counseling was blamed for most students' course selection problems. Freshmen, in particular, both during orientation and their first year, were singled out as being the worst counselled.

Constance B. Simonides, Vice President of MIT and an observer to the proceedings, suggested a six-week advisor system under which a student would have the same couselor for six weeks and the option to change advisors after this period if he felt he could profit from counseling in another area.

The idea of having advisory groups of seniors available for counseling made an impression on George Rockrise, a private architect from San Francisco who worked with President Wood while the latter was with the federal agency HUD (Housing and Urban Development).

Rockrise also questioned whether graduate school wasn't emphasized too heavily at UMass. Several students seemed to agree, however, that the general feeling on campus was to complete the four years and immediately go on to work.

One young man defended the graduate system by stating that students who did not go on to graduate work were not deprived by the degree of emphasis on continuing their education and that the system would collapse if this emphasis were not maintained.

The role of the Board of Trustees in handling campus affairs was also examined. According to Nick Apostola, Chairman of the Long-Range Planning Committee, "It is no longer possible for the Trustees to make University-wide decisions...we are becoming too diverse."

"If the power were only decentralized, there could be 100,000 on campus with no discontent. The areas are given the name residential college...but what is a name? One of the main problems of the residential colleges is that they are given no power," he said.

Individual community projects and services were cited as ways by which to make the "resources of the University work for the people."

Senate Presidency Action Stalled

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

Action has been postponed in an undergraduate's attempt to have the office of the Presidency of the Student Senate declared vacant, and to question the constitutionality of a non-undergraduate holding Senate office and the legality of the retroactive clause of the Senate's recent officer salaries bill.

The attempt is being made by George Inglis, who Friday afternoon took his case to the University's General Court of Justice. Also present at the session, when Inglis presented his petition signed by 72 undergraduates, was Senate President Glenn Elters. He was there in response to the Court's subpoena of the Senate to send a representative to the session.

Inglis' first petition, concerning the chair of the Presidency and the holding of Senate office by non-undergrads, was found by the Court to be defective. Action on it was postponed to give Inglis three days to return with a corrected version. Action was also delayed on Inglis' other petition concerning the salaries bill. Both cases will be heard at a date in April to be determined.

The Court ruled that the first petition was defective, following the challenge of the Senate's General Counsel Richard Howland, defending Elters at the hearing. Howland objected to the petition on the technical grounds that it did not state specifically any legal grounds for declaring vacant the office of Senate Presidency.

On the basis of this, he questioned whether students signing the petition had a constitutional question in mind or if they were using the General Court as a forum for political debate.

Howland's motion to have the petition struck was not upheld by the Court, which considered it in secret deliberation. However, Chief Justice Robert Rochford informed Inglis and his advocate Joseph Kilmartin, a graduate student, that the petition must be made more specific. He said this was necessary so that the Court could be sure that the intention of all those signing the petition was one of questioning legality and not political or personal.

Justice Rochford also explained that the General Court does try to hold its technical requirements to a minimum. He said that the Court does not require many of the technicalities which apply to outside courts, but that the minimum needed is a specific, clearly stated charge.

Anti-War G.I. Show S.R.O.

(AP) A show aimed at countering military-sponsored entertainments opened in a jammed coffee house near a huge Army base, with actress Jane Fonda and other entertainers spoofing the war and President Nixon.

It was standing room only at the antiwar show's first performance Saturday and there were sellouts at $2.50 a person for both Sunday performances in the 400-seat Haymarket Square Coffeehouse, a downtown meeting place for soldiers from nearby Ft. Bragg.

Presented in four 30-minute acts, the show ended with the singing of the Star Spangled Banner by Miss Fonda, comedian Dick Gregory, folksinger Barbara Dane and actors Donald Sutherland, Peter Boyle and Gary Goodrow, who was substituting for Elliott Gould.

Mobe's Response: "You're Too Late..."

Sid Finehurst of Student Mobe addressed the President's Committee on the Future University Friday morning charging that they had "arrived too late...the future has been here and left...the May Student Strike is the future."

He added that the Strike was only an indication of the future as "it occasionally happens in history that the future will reveal itself early. Too early, however, for it to take root so that it dies out in order that it may reflower when conditions are more fertile."

Calling the strike the "radical restructuring of the University from a war university to an anti-war university," Finehurst included in the future of the university "the enlistment in the fight for Third World self-determination the campus as "a staging area for attacks on the sexist practices of the status quo," and as a place "to organize against the illegal, immoral invasion of Southeast Asia by the U.S. government."

"The anti-war University was and will be where a democratically elected strike committee of both students and faculty is the de facto governance of the university."

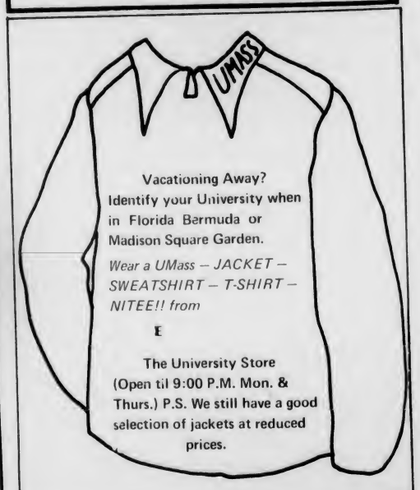
Housing, Placement Need Student Work

Three announcements were made at the Wednesday meeting by Senators requesting students to become involved in committees which are being set up to examine several areas of campus life.

President Glenn Elters announced that a housing "consortium" is being established by a real estate developer and backers. The gentlemen are planning the construction of some housing units and would like to talk to students to get their opinions and suggestions for improving off-campus housing. Students should contact Elters for more information.



Ed Voci, chairman of the Senate Services Committee, asked for student involvement on two committees operating through Services. One is being set up to look at the University's Placement Service to determine improvements necessary in making it more receptive to student needs. Any one interested in working on the committee should contact Senator Janet Pearlman.

Also under Services is a committee being headed by Senator Brenda Rau to study the University Health Services. Miss Rau is also looking for more students to participate on this committee and should be contacted by anyone interested in working to improve the Health Services.

Senator Voci also announced that the Services Committee has begun a search for a student to manage the Student Senate Transit Services next year. This year's manager William Perkins is graduating in June.

A group of students attempting to write a "Student Bill of Rights" is also looking for student input. Chairman of the Senate Student Matters Committee Lee Sandwen is heading the project and would like to talk to anyone willing to work with him.

Grad Senate Plans To Fight Fund Cutbacks

Facing a possible 50% cut in funds for teaching assistantships for the upcoming year, the Graduate Student Senate has called a general meeting tonight at 8 p.m. in Thompson 104 to discuss the situation and develop strategies to forestall any reduction in funding, according to Grad Senate President Daniel J. Collins.

The "serious financial plight of the University" is a condition created by budget cuts in the state legislature, Collins said.

He said it is unfair that the "plight" does not entail salary cutbacks for faculty, staff or the upper-echelon administrators" charged with the agonizing mission of eliminating our jobs and/or reducing the level or our rather precarious standard of living."

"The administration has a clear obligation to apportion the burden equally among all members of the academic community rather than singling out its most weakly organized and vulnerable segment," Collins declared.

Graduate students are not funded by the State Legislature, Collins explained. He said that funds are scrapped together from miscellaneous University funds, mostly 03 (part time job) allocations.

While the University has established a figure of $3,200 per year for teaching assistants many make much less, according to Collins. He said the reason for this was the University's policy of splitting the funds among deserving students, thus spreading thinner the hours and pay.

University statistics reveal that there are approximately 4000 graduate students at UMass and 750 teaching assistants.

"The scope of the problem has been substantially magnified by the fact that federal funding, formerly a fairly lucrative source of funds for graduate students, has been sharply curtailed," Collins said.

Collins added that an effectively organized opposition possessing the resources to apply pressure in the appropriate situation is necessary because "past experience with the University administration...indicates that it will not deal seriously with our problems unless it is confronted."

Other issues the Graduate Senate is pressing for action on, include a day care center and equal tax status for grad students.

Harambe For 3rd World Students

By JEANETTE MARTINEAU
MDC Staff

The Student Senate's vote last week to appropriate $395 to Harambe found a significant portion of the University community unaware of Harambe's existance.

Harambe is a UMass organization founded "to disseminate information of third world literary, social and cultural nature to the community at large," according to its constitution.

It also intends "to provide a funding agency for Black students through which they might implement social and cultural activities." The "Third World" community includes the non-white population of Chinese, Japanese, Arabian and African students, a spokesman said.)

As yet Harambe's membership is undetermined but John Hogan, chairman of the Student Senate Activities Committee estimated that up to 1500 UMass students are eligible. Membership, in accordance to the Harambe Constitution, revised in January of this year, is divided into two categories. First are "Active--Undergraduates at the UMass, being members of the Third World community." Second are "Associate--Any undergraduate student affiliated with the UMass, whether or not a member of the Third World."

Hogan, was instrumental in obtaining Senate recognition for Harambe's constitution.

He commented "It's important to bring the Third World people in the Community together so that they can relate to the University".

Harambe is planning to hold conferences for this purpose with its Senate-appropriated funds.

Interested students may contact Dr. Love, extension 22, at Mills House.

University Considers Aid To Couples

Representatives to a new administration-student committee which will investigate and recommend ways in which services to married students can be improved have been requested of the undergraduate and graduate student senates by Dr. Randolph W. Bromery, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs.

It is anticipated that the committee will try to identify the non-academic needs of married student population at both the graduate and undergraduate level and that it will investigate and evaluate existing levels of administrative support for married students, then make recommendations to the Vice-Chancellor.

Approximately 3400 married students are currently enrolled at the University representing 8% of the Undergraduate students and 50% of the graduate students.

When both partners are endeavoring to complete their degrees many facets of life combine to make a special challenge to married students. Among the problems are not only finding suitable housing but health care and family planning, day care of children, money management, employment, special scheduling, reduced loads and academic planning.

Initiative for the effort to coordinate and extend present service to married students was taken by Lawrence Siddall of the Mental Health Service and by Helen Curtis, Dean of Women, and Randall Dahl, counselors to off-campus students.

Donald Pelkey, Director of Off-campus Housing and Robert Swasey of the Graduate School will also serve on the committee which will be chaired by Siddall, the Vice-Chancellor announced.

Married students interested in serving on the committee should speak to their respective Senators.

UMass Telescope Launced In Texas

The University of Massachusetts infrared balloon-borne telescope was launched successfully this past week by the Balloon Branch of the National Center for Atmospheric Research (N—CAR), in Palestine, Texas, Prof. John Strong has announced.

The UMass package left the Texas launch facility Wednesday at 6:55 a.m. Central Standard Time, Prof. Strong reported. "After drifting for 2 1/2 hours at an altitude of 116,000 feet, it parachuted to the ground and landed in a mud hole approximately 40 miles north of Biloxi, Miss.

"This was a fortunate circumstance-the telescope was unharmed because of the soft mud," Prof. Strong said.

He added that recovered photographic film indicates that everything aboard worked as planned. "It will take several weeks of analysis to determine the scientific result of this NASA—supported program: whether infrared radiation emitted by a ring around the sun is intrinsic thermal emission of circum-solar dust or a scattering phenomena," the UMass astronomer explained.

This ring was discovered by an eclipse expedition in 1966, and further studied on an earlier balloon flight in 1967. William Dalton, present at both these earlier occasions, together with Ta-Chun Li and Larry Provo, were the UMass personnel who carried out the mission. It was under the scientific direction of Professor Strong.

The package was designed and built at the Astronomy Research facility directed by Prof. Strong in Amherst.

It went by truck to Texas and was launched with a helium-filled polyethylene balloon provided by NCAR. The package includes a 20-foot boom with a highly sophisticated tracking system.

Prof. Strong has directed the infrared balloon astronomy program at the UMass physics and astronomy department since 1967. He is a balloon astronomy pioneer whose 1964 flights detected water vapor and ice crystals in the clouds of Venus.

If data from current launch indicates presence of circumsolar dust, according to Prof. Strong, "It may be the residual dust of the original matter in the solar system that condensed to form planets. Its disposition around the sun is similar to that of the rings around the planet Saturn."

Four Busted In Pufton Raid

State Police officers arrested four people yesterday at Pufton Village in a noon-time drug raid which ended in charges of possession and presence of marijuana and amphetamines.

Charged with possession and presence of marijuana and amphetamines were Robert K. Mitchell, Kevin N. Murphy and Frederick Convery. Sheila E. Kennedy was charged with being in the presence of marijuana.

Mitchell, a freshman at UMass, Murphy, a Junior, and Convery live at Pufton Village. Sheila Kennedy lives at 280 Acushnet Rd., Amherst.

Five State troopers conducted the raid, the second in as many weeks for Amherst, accompanied by Amherst Police Sargent Richard Buckley.

The four will be arraigned today in Northampton District Court.

In The Nation And The World

Mrs. Gandhi Wins Control Of India's Parliament

NEW DELHI (AP)-Prime Minister Indira Gandhi gained absolute control over India's newly elected Parliament Sunday, winning a two-thirds majority and wiping out most of her major opposition.

"The people have joined hands to bring about the greatest revolution in the world," the prime minister told thousands of her supporters at a rally as the full extent of her victory in the nation's parliament elections became known.

With results announced for all but one of 515 seats chosen in the elections, Mrs. Ganhi's Congress party had won 350 which would assure it of a two-thirds majority even when the Parliament reaches its full strength of 521.

The additional six seats will come from three members nominated by the nation's president and three from continuencies where voting was postponed until the spring because of bad weather and the death of one candidate.

The decision margin gave the prime minister the power to have constitutional amendments passed at will- before sending them to the house for normally routine approval.

Mrs. Gandhi had only 220 seats in the last Parliament which was dissolved last December-14 months ahead of schedule-to enable a fresh mandate for her Socialist policies

Not since the days of Mrs. Gandhi's late father, Jawaharlal Nehru, had the Congress emerged from a general election with such a great lead on the Lok Sabha, the House of the People, and the nation's political forces.

The personal triumph for the prime minister, weakened-and almost obliterated-other parties from the left to the right of India's vast political spectrum.

With Mrs. Gandhi's victory complete the next Parliament will not even have an official opposition party, which is required to have at least 52 seats, or 10 per cent of the total membership in the house.

The largest single opposition group will be the Marxist Communists, which won 25 seats, in contrast to 19 in the last house.

The more moderate pro-Moscow Communists won 23 seats-one less than in 1967.

Mrs. Gandhi, in a half hour speech to her party workers from the Delhi region, angrily denied accusations from some opposition politicians that her landslide victory would make her dictator.

"The elections have proved that the truth of socialism is the only way on which this country can march ahead, by taking all sections of society along," she said.

"But the object of our socialism is not to take away everything from the rich and give it to the poor. Rather to bridge the gap between the one and the other."

Mrs. Gandhi's new government probably will take office by Thursday or Friday, after her party goes through the formality of unanimously electing her leader of its Parliament wing on Wednesday.

The government's policies will be outlined in an address to Parliament by President V. Liri, the constitutional head of state, early next week.

Through her triumph, Mrs. Gandhi extended her political dominance throughout the country, especially in strongholds of the opposition parties.

Nowhere was her sweep more complete than in southern Mysore state, where she won all 27 seats, and in her home state of Uttar Pradesh, where she won 73 of 85 seats-surpassing all records set by her father.

Both states are ruled by governments led by the Congress party faction opposed to Mrs. Gandhi.

Israeli Premier Defends Actions

(AP)Israel Premier Golda Meir defended her actions Sunday against political opponents.

Mrs. Meir, today in a meeting of her coalition Cabinet stated that what she had said in the interview with the Times of London was not new and did not represent any final government decision.

Incensed over the statements attributed to Mrs. Meir, Israel's biggest opposition party, the right-wing Gahal, called for immediate debate in the Israeli parliament-the Knesset-gave a vote of no confidence in the government.

Gahal, which quit Mrs. Meir's government last year because the party is against any withdrawal of Israeli troops from Arab territory, said Mrs. Meir's comment in the interview amounts to giving up part of the historic home and submitting to outside pressure.

In the interview published Saturday, Mrs. Meir outlined a plan for the demilitarization of the Sinai Peninsula.

She stated also that Israel was willing to withdraw from territory captured during the 1967 war, but was demanding control of East Jerusalem, the Golan Heights of Syria, and Sharm el-Sheih, the strong-point overlooking her country's shipping lane through the mouth of the Gulf of Aqaba.

Mrs. Meir also mentioned that in settlement with Jordan over the occupied West Bank area, there would have to be some kind of Israeli military presence to serve as a buffer against possible Arab attacks across the Jordan River.

Informants said the three National Religious Party ministers in the 18-member Cabinet questioned the premier about the West Bank during the meeting. The party considers the West Bank as part of the Biblical Jewish homeland and opposes giving up the war-won territory

Mrs. Meir was reported to have said that the areas she specified as non-returnable were so proclaimed by her Labor party during the national elections and what she was saying was not new

A statement in the Times interview quoting Mrs. Meir as saying that Israel does not want to become a nation divided along religious lines like Lebanon, brought a quick retort from Beirut.

Lebanese information minister Henry Txorbeh suggested that Israel should follow Lebanon's example as country in which various religious groups lived together in peace.

Israel and Lebanon were also at variance on another issue. Beirut newspapers said there have been more skirmishes between Israeli forces and Palestinian guerrillas from Lebanon during the weekend, but Israel denied it. Israeli troops attacked across the border Friday and Saturday and shelled a number of villages and guerrilla bases close to the frontier, the papers claimed.

One of Sunday's reports said that about 100 Israeli troops backed by tanks had over-run South Lebanon, cut the main road between the villages of Houla and Meiss Jebel for two hours where Israeli guns shelled Blida.

Three Israeli halftracks crossed the border between Houla and Maruaba and clashed with Palestinian-guerillas Saturday, according to another report. One halftrack was said to have been put out of action by the guerrillas in a 30-minute clash.

Percy Urges Pullout Of Vietnam By 72

WASHINGTON (AP)-Republican Sen Charles H Percy of Illinois said Sunday President Nixon would be in political jeopardy in '72 if all American forces are not withdrawn from South Vietnam by that time

Percy said there always is a possibility Nixon will be challenged for Republican renomination but it would be lessened if the withdrawal schedule is accelerated and the economic situation improves.

Percy and Democratic Sen Adlai E Stevenson III discussed Southeast Asia policy in an interview recorded for broadcast to their Illinois constituents

Stevenson said he thinks the administration "is really deceiving itself with current Vietnam policy. I find it very hard, for example, to see how we can end the war by enlarging it," he said.

"I don't find it difficult to understand that the administration is doing in contrast with previous administrations where we were getting in deeper," Percy said. "We're clearly getting out."

Advocating complete withdrawal, Percy said "I think the President would be in jeopardy if it appeared to the country as though he had not fulfilled our pledge and his pledge to get us out of Vietnam."

May 1, with the U.S. force to be at 284,000 men. "I'd like to see a stepup then of 30 to 40 per cent in the withdrawals, which would bring us down to about 150,000 at the end of this year and, continuing at that rate, would get us totally and completely out before Mr Nixon is offered for the presidency on election day November, 1972.

Percy acknowledged there is a chance that Nixon will face Republican opposition next year, but "I put no credence" in the suggestion that he might become a GOP alternative.

Stevenson said he is concerned at the possibility of Communist Chinese intervention in Southeast Asia.

"They will invade if that's what becomes necessary in order to stop us and our allies the South Vietnamese, in their military adventures even farther north in Indochina," he said.

No. Irish Rightists Demand Internments

AP-Six hundred British troops, helped by helicopters, carried out Sunday what was described as the biggest security operation in Northern Ireland's two years of strife.

Soldiers stopped 2,000 vehicles at a road-block in the och Neagh area outside Belfast. Cars were searched and their drivers interrogated in the check, which came four days after three young British soldiers were shot to death outside the city.

A blast severely damaged a shop in Belfast selling Roman Catholic religious state. A small sewage pumping station in County Tyrone was destroyed in another explosion.

Led by lawmaker William Craig, a former home affairs minister, the rightists have demanded Chichester-Clark impose internment without trial on known members of the Catholic oriented union of Northern Ireland.

The rightists cite the murder of the three young soldiers as proof of the need for such a measure.

Senate Votes On Budgets, Boycott

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

The Student Senate voted last night to state its strong opposition to a bill pending in the state legislature which would abolish Student Senate control over student fees. The legislation before the state senate would not only bypass the Student Senate and give the President of the University the right to decide where tax funds go, but would also eliminate certain budgets now in existence.

In other action, the Senate supported measures concerning $50,000 worth of vending machine profits, the current lettuce boycott, academic credit for Senators, a $625 appropriation to the Student Homophile League, and a petition calling for the humane treatment of prisoners of war. The Senate defeated motions calling for a special Stockbridge Senator and for a new policy of assigning dormitory singles.

To express the Senate's strong opposition to the proposed state law which would take control of student taxes out of the hands of the Senate, Senator Leo Clark will attend today's session of the Education Committee in Boston. The bill, which would affect all state institutions of higher learning, calls for a student activities fee to be set up, the amount of which would be determined by the president of each school.

The money received would be distributed, in percentages determined by the presidents, to the following activities: 1) athletics, intercollegiate and intramural, including cheer leading; 2) guest lecturers or presentations in the performing arts; 3) Student health services and insurance; 4) official school musical organizations and drama societies; 5) a special President's Fund for advancement of the school as the president sees fit; 6) the publication of a year book; 7) necessary assessments to pay for student unions and similar physical facilities and 8) printing and distribution of student ID cards.

Senator Clark will inform the committee hearing of the Senate's strong objection to having all control of student funds taken from students. The system currently used by the University is the collection of a studeni tax whose rate is set by the Senate and then must be approved by the Administration. The specific budgeting of organizations is done by the Student Senate.

In an item dealing with the disbursement of vending machine profits, the Senate voted to recommend that the $50,000 currently given the Athletic Council be given instead to the Dean of Students office to be spent otherwise. The money would then be directed to other programs such as dorm cultural enrichment. This will allow funds to revert to the dorms where they came from, according to supporters of the measure. The measure also recommends that the current system be phased out over a period of three years.

Support of the current lettuce boycott was voiced by the Senate last evening. It resolved to urge the directors of on-campus dining facilities to participate in the national boycott called by United Farm Workers by using only lettuce which bears the UFW label.

Negotiations for academic credit for Senators will be initiated, as the result of passage of a resolution by Senator Lee Sandwen. Senate President Glenn Elters and the Senate Academic Affairs Committee were charged to negotiate with the Department of Government.

A budget of $625 was approved by the Senate for the Student Homophile League to use for the rest of the semester. A spokesman for the group explained to the Senate that the money will be used mainly for peer education and for informational purposes.

The Senate also voted to charge its president to sign a petition calling for the humane treatment of prisoners of war in the conflicts in Vietnam and the Middle East. The petition is the effort of a national organization which represents itself as being bipartisan.

The Senate defeated Senator John Hogan's attempt to amend the Senate constitution to allow the Stockbridge Senate to appoint a member as a regular Senator. Hogan argued that Stockbridge students deserve special representation on the grounds that they pay a small percentage of the Student Activities Tax but have no representatives in the Senate.

The motion was defeated however, when Senators pointed out that Stockbridge students are eligible to run for the Senate from regular dormitory constituencies. Further opposition was voiced by a Senator who feared that numerous other special interest groups would want special representation also, all of which has in recent years been eliminated by the Senate.

Also defeated by the Senate was an attempt by Senator Kevin Kulakowski to have a centralized policy of assigning dorm singles established. He considers the current system unfair and unclear because it varies from one house to another. Senators opposed to this stated an unwillingness to interfere with dorm autonomy in this decision.

Young Urged Black Alliance

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP)-"Black leaders in America are showing a new sophistication about African problems," Whitney M. Young said relaxing easily in an armchair, in one hand a cigarette, a glass of cola in the other.

"I'm really impressed with the excitement that has been generated by these session" he said referring to the dialogue between prominent Africans and Americans that were then being held where he spoke. The black congressmen here will go back and communicate African interests to their constituents.

"For too long blacks in America have been misinformed about Africa," Young said. "We can't trust the press and we can't trust the government to keep us informed."

Speaking of the Nigerian civil war, he stated that his Urban League and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had maintained a representative in the military government to supply independent information on the course of the struggle.

Young, like any other activist black American, said he considered the Biafran secession to be heavily dependent on foreign interests that would stand to benefit from a further subdivision of Africa.

"I was for Nigeria in the civil war because I'm against the Balkanization of Africa."

"In the earlier days the black community in America was to apethtic, too involved in its own problems to think about Africa," Young said. "But now some of the leaders-some of the congressmen are here, talking to Africans, and now we can take the message back to the people confident about what we're talking about."

"Blacks in America can help Africans in the same kinds of ways that Jews in America have been helping Israel," Young said, picking up a theme that was amply debated during the closed-door sessions of the conference.

He said that at the next meeting of the national committee of the national committee of the Urban League, "We will talk about raising money and aiding liberation movements" in Portugal's African colonies, South Africa and Rhodesia.

"The African leaders are looking more and more to us black Americans as their natural allies," he observed. "We now have our own direct contacts with certain African leaders and with the OAU"-the Organization of African Unity."

Synthetic Diamond Developed Locally

Howard Jaffe had an idea back in 1969 that has turned out to be a real gem.

The gem is YAG, the brilliant new synthetic diamond that is shaking up the jewelry business. It has luster and hardness that approaches the diamond yet it costs about $50 a carat as compared to $2500 a carat or more for diamonds.

It all started with a chemical concept by mineralogist Howard W. Jaffe, now a professor of geology at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst. The concept has not only resulted in the yttrium aluminum garnet (YAG), but has also had wide and important application in laser technology and as microwave ferrites in microwave amplifiers and radar.

"I tell my mineralogy students that this is a classic example of what may happen when a pure scientific concept is applied," Prof Jaffe said. The idea evolved when Jaffe was a researcher for the U.S. Bureau of Mines at College Park, Md., studying the then-unexplained presence of the rare element yttrium in natural garnets. Yttrium, although not a true rare earth element itself, is always accompanied by the rarest of the true earth elements in its natural occurrances in minerals. These include gadolinium, dysprosium, erbium and ytterbium. "I found yttrium and all of these rare earth elements in a mineral garnet, a place where they shouldn't have been, according to the state of the art at that time. In order to explain yttrium garnets I came up with a theory which was a little unusual at the time and hard for some to accept," he explained.

The YAG is singly refractive, colorless, and its high refractive index gives it a diamond-like sparkle. Its hardness is 8 1/2 on the Mohs scale, compared to 10 for a diamond and 6 for glass. Elizabeth Taylor bought an 87.2 carat YAG to wear as a stand-in for her $1 million plus Cartier diamond. At least four companies now make YAG stones and they are having more and more of an impact on the synthetic gem market.

Nothing To Do But March

NEW HAVEN-The police here had formed a "Special Detail" to meet the Saturday demonstrators; four vans commanded by Sargents Carireir, Prone, Listro, and Bronofiglio; 1000 man hours were allocated to control the 1500 people, chanting "Free Bobby!" "Free Ericka!"

Some carrying red banners, the marchers grouped at New Haven's Beaver Pond Park. A heavy set, thick jowled black cop led the parade down past the Yale Coop, stopping at intersections ignoring the camera men. The line stretched back, ten or twelve abreast for a quarter of a mile.

A Tass correspondent, Alexei Voronin, on a special pass from New York, hurried ahead of the crowd, turning to snap a picture every now and then, moving towards the white stone Court house where Bobby Searle and Ericka Huggins are standing trial for conspiracy to murder.

As the line of marchers reached the common in front of the court house, the formation broke. An NLF flag was hoisted to half mast and the demonstrators began to run towards the corner nearest to the Court House. Police formed a barrier two deep, with the officers watching from the sidelines.

A minor scuffle was quickly subdued and the mob stared at the police, who were backs to the street, arms locked behind the back, clutching riot clubs.

The stony faced cops, some plain clothed ignored the taunts and chants, while a Black Panther spokeswoman used the podium loud speaker to warn the shifting crowd not to do anything until "told."

"We're going to form a line, by two's, and march around the Court House, that symbol of injustice, and sing until, like the walls of Jericho, the court house walls crumble," shouted the girl, the veins in her skinny neck straining to give bit to her words.

* * * * * *

Walking past the "Spot Where the Knights of Columbus was formed in 1882", two well-attired men watched the carnival-like assemblage of students, panthers, people and police, scoffing that "they are all communist bastards, that's all!"

I told the Tass correspondent and his partner about the old man, over coffee in the local Rexall's Drug Store. The reporter, who graduated from University of Moscow and had been assigned to the States nine months earlier laughed.

He explained that he had received a special travel permit to go beyond the mandatory 45 miles from New York limit strapped on him by our government, the day before.

We talked briefly about how stupid it was to set limits on correspondents, but he explained that most of his work was done in New York. After exchanging crowd estimates, I left wondering whether the F.B.I., which keeps tabs on the Soviet correspondents, had taken my picture and filed it under "Communist Sympathizer."

Both the police and the demonstrators seemed satisfied with the walk around the Court house, which at times turned into a smake dance. The whole idea behind the gathering was to "demonstrate and march", not to confront. A representative from a local labor union's committee on Black Affairs pledged the support of "10,000 workers" to those trying to place pressure on authorities to drop charges against Bobby Seale and Ericka Huggins. One of the woman, involved in the take-over of a Harvard building to be used as a "Women's Center", read a letter of support.

The demonstration was characterized by incessant chanting of slogans and "revolutionary" songs. The atmosphere was that of a high school football rally, with the home team berating the visitors. Little children, propped on bicycles, stood close to the police line throwing taunts and epithets in subdued shouts. The police spaced along the sides of the Court House, as the demonstrators walked by in pairs, showed little more intelligence in their caustic remarks.

New Haven will survive the trial of Bobby Seale and Ericka Huggins because the people of New Haven probably don't care one way or the other about the jailed Panthers. No mention of the demonstration was made in the New Haven Register. The old drunks sitting in the public Men's Room underneath the City Hall didn't even bother to venture out into the cold afternoon as the rally reached its noisy peak.

America's institution, its courts, won't be falling in the wake of demonstrating citizens. Just as Yale survives in the midst of the drab city of New Haven, maintained and guided by tradition and the rich men it serves, so the trial of Bobby and Ericka will be decided and made to stand.

Perhaps the outcome will bring justice, perhaps not.

It Finally Hits You

For most of us, the Indo-Chinese war is a word which we answer, "That's nice. I know it's bad, but what else is new?"

From time to time, however, it hides itself in letters from brothers or in still battle-jumpy veterans or in photographs of weeping parents or in the lines of the endless newsprint it has produced. Then, it jumps on you from behind, and claws your vision, and twists your stomach inside and out.

"I Lost Photographers Presumed Dead" was the headline on page six of the March 3 Times.

Kent Potter, from UPI, was but four years older than I and unmarried.

Henri Huet, a French-Vietnamese, had spent the last twenty-two years photographing his country's destruction.

Keisaburo Shimamoto, from Japan, was freelancing in Vietnam for Newsweek. "His wife lives in Tokyo," the obit read.

Larry Burrows, a resident of Hong Kong, wantedtolive "to be around to photograph both South and North Viet Nam in peaceful times." He wrote, "I was born in blitz-torn London" and he explained his desire to "shock the uninterested into realizing and facing the horrors of the Viet Nam war."

In my life, I have been a journalist, standing at one time with Hubert Humphrey, Eugene McCarthy, Bernadette Devlin, and Edward Kennedy. The American, the French-Vietnamese, the Japanese, the resident of Hong Kong--they too, were journalists, standing with men of equal history.

But they are dead, and I live. And what shakes me up is that the difference between us is merely luck.

Behind the Times

--It's true what Agnew and others have been saying--that youth today doesn't have anyone to respect and look up to. Muhammud Ali is the latest victim, but perhaps more tragic than all the other heroes that have died. Ali fell from his Shakespearean pedestal because of his own devices. Like MacBeth, he left fighting, and somehow Duncan just isn't the man that MacBeth was.

--Hyperkinesis is a nervous disease afflicting more than a million children. Its symptoms are "ants-in-the-pants" and a short attention span. In a school, these characteristics can be deadly, and a Department of Health, Education, and Welfare panel has recently recommended the use of amphetamines to "control" hyperkinetic children. Certainly, there is enough controversy on the use of these drugs--even if they are used under carefully controlled conditions--to warrant more careful study than the HEW panel gave it. At any rate, drugs on children should never be used without the permission of the parents. This has not been done in the past.

--The New York City School System found itself a couple of weeks ago with a $40 million dollar deficit. Because it was broke, the Board of Ed said that it would have to fire hundreds of teachers. Now, the Controller, Abraham Beame says that he can find the money by transferring $25 million dollars of this year's expenditures into next years budget, thereby creating a bilateral authorized appropriation in accordance with Section 1704 of Chapter 649 of the state education law. The only problem is that the fiscal year doesn't end until July when New York City is expected to sink under the weight of the nearly completed World Trade Center.

Spare the Budget, Spoil the T.A.

To the Editor:

I would like to make an urgent announcement to all graduate students at the University. The University administration has informed department heads that funds for teaching assistantships may be cut by 50% for the upcoming academic year. This situation creates a critical financial crisis for TA's already burdened with serious financial difficulties. The cut, if implemented, will mean a drastic reduction in the number of TA's on campus next fall or an equally unacceptable decrease in the present poverty-level salary scale of graduate students. (While the University has established a figure of $3,200 per year for teaching assistants many make much less.) Moreover, the scope of the problem has been substantially magnified by the fact that federal funding, formerly a fairly lucrative source of funds for graduate students, has been sharply curtailed.

The administration, in characteristic fashion, is justifying this policy in terms of its ritual pronouncement of the "serious financial plight of the University." The "plight," however, does not entail salary cutbacks for faculty, staff or the upper-echelon administrators charged with the agonizing mission of eliminating our jobs and/ or reducing the level of our rather precarious standard of living.

To be sure, the University may indeed confront a paralyzing financial condition created by budget cuts in the state legislature. But if this is the case, the administration has a clear obligation to apportion the burdenequallyamong ALL members of the academic community rather than singling out its most weakly organized and vulnerable segment.

Past experience with the University administration quite clearly indicates it will not deal seriously with our problems unless it is confronted with an effectively organized opposition possessing the resources to apply pressure in the appropriate situation. The Graduate Senate is therefore sponsoring a general meeting for all graduate students to discuss the situation and develop strategies to forestall ANY reduction in funding. The meeting will take place on Monday, March 15, at 8 PM in Thompson 104. I urge you to attend.

Marionettes

Dear Students:

The idea of a Co-op Bookstore is dead. The Student Senate Services Co-op Bookstore Committee has been dissolved due to lack of sustained interest among the students in changing the bookstore through student effort. Many people complain about the bookstore but we found that very few are willing to try to remedy the situation through some work. You may try complaining directly to the bookstore (if you can spare the energy) but remember that you are only one of thousands who use the bookstore and will be considered as such. The Co-op Bookstore Committee found the Campus Center Administration quite helpful.

Your student government organizations desperately need people willing to donate some of their time if you expect anything to be accomplished. If you don't know how to resolve your gripes go to the Bitch Day run by the Student Senate Services Committee in April. If you don't follow up your complaints with action you deserve to be manipulated by the University.

Women Are...

To the Editor:

I had a rather unique experience during a recent afternoon spent on the lower level of the Campus Center. I was casually non-viewing a television program, when a slovenly-attired, long-haired individual approached me. I immediately classified him as a freak, which is cool because my initial judgement of anyone is readily influenced by their exterior.

When he started rapping to me, I quickly detected a Bronx accent, which upon further inquiry, turned out to be genuine. The major theme of our conversation was how he gets a real charge out of the chicks on our mud-slung campus, and I must admit, I have to concur with him.

There are basically two types of chicks here; the vogue and the hippie vogue. Of course, there are modifications, but both these girls will start out each morning in front of a mirror, whether it be the dorm, Puffton Village, or wherever checking their attire and hair (just like in high school) to make sure they are "presentable". In 1971 that presentation has to be unruly and unkempt just enough, but not so much that someone will question the sincerity of their appearance, or worse yet, their personal hygiene. These people saunter along in their feminine new construction boots (which of course were purchased to cope with the terrain). They attend classes, make sure they are seen in the Hatch at least every other day and eagerly anticipate the weekend. This is when they will have to endure the horror of a local Friday night party in order to obtain a Saturday night date.

I realize that some women's lib advocates will probably respond vehemently to the thoughts presented here from the liaison of two strangers. However,, readers, take note that what is represented is only one small part of the stage microcosm of four years at UMass. Or, better yet, think of the line from a Neil Young cut "Cowgirl in the Sand"-- "It's the woman in you that makes you want to play this game."

Thank You—

To the Editor:

I was elated to see the Collegian finally carrying some good poetry. The Monday, March 8th issue carried a poem "Progression", by Doug Loux. It was both moving and inspiring. To be able to express so beautifully, with just three words, the future we are making for ourselves! Think about it!

I consider myself very fortunate. I personally know the author, a man of foresight and warmth, and after spending all of Satuday night listening to him I feel that he has an exciting future as a poet. He has an unbelievable capability of expressing himself in short succinct statements.

It Still Hurts

To the Editor:

I would just like to say that I can't wait for the day that everyone stops looking at the stereotypes of groups to which people belong. I am talking about people who look down on certain majors--home economics in particular.

Ever since I decided to go into fashion merchandising, I have met a variety of unfavorable reactions. Comments such as "fourth in her class and she majors in home economics!" and "they're teaching that in college now?" are not my idea of ways in which to talk about a person's future.

My friends, who are not guilty of this but have to put up with my complaints about it, have told me that people do this because they don't understand what home ec is like. All they know is that it is the course that girls in high school take because they are supposedly too stupid to take anything else. They don't realize that our courses aren't gut courses--we have to have a few brains, too. Another thing that they don't realize is that I can use what I learn in my courses every day. Can the same be said about other majors? And I know that home ec isn't the only major that has to put with this attitude. My roommate, who is a phys. ed. major, suffers the same problems.

I realize that what people think of my major is not the most important thing in the world, but it still hurts. Lack of understanding other people as individuals is a major problem in our country today. Wouldn't we all be better off if everyone tried to understand others instead of laughing at them?

There is great hunting, good fishing and very little crime."

* * * * *

The quote of the week, although you've probably heard it a thousand times, bears repeating. In the words of our inimitable President, "War is necessary to achieve peace." That's a pleasant thought.

Ali vs. Frazier

The indifferent man did not look too happy, so I asked him, "What seems to be the problem, man?"

"Well, I am very uptight these days," he replied, "and I want an outlet for my aggressive tendencies, but I can't seem to find a subject on whom I could take out my anger."

"That's no problem I told him. "Why don't you go and see a Western movie, I am sure that you will feel much better after you've had a shot of John Wayne."

"I already did that", he said calmly. "It didn't help. It only increased my desire for more violence."

By this time I began to realize that the "Indifferent Man" was indeed serious about his predicament. He seemed to have fallen victim of external violence-proned stimuli that steered his 'Mark I' personality, but he seemed to be sharpening his Internal desire for violence also by demanding more. Obviously one was dependent on the other but the 'Indifferent Man' did not know which one was more within his reach to control--the external or the internal.

"Why don't you go to Vietnam?" I suggested very seriously since this is a meeting ground for both the external and internal stimuli for violence.

"Are you kidding?" he looked at me questioningly. "I'll get my head shot off. I am no guinea-pig. Why should I fight someone else's war, when the Vietnamization plan,-or is it Laotian plan,-these days is working so well, ahead of schedule as a matter of fact"-----

The discussion was getting too political, besides Vietnam was no more an issue any more, since the Vietnamese national character has been boosted to meet the U.S. national standard of violence. Recent South Vietnamese threats to No. Vietnam is indicative of this fact.

I tried to change the subject from political to semi-political topics.

"Since you have to get an immediate gratification for your actions I think the perfect solution for you, (and it is the in-thing these days) would be to hijack a plane to Cuba."

"But I am not a Cuban and I am not sympathetic to their cause---I mean I am not too concerned about them because the U.S. government is doing all it can to give their cause all the publicity it can, and therefore to embarrass Castro's government."

"Don't you have a sports car?" I did not want to give up, "You know one of those cars, that comes with the sex-appeal toothpaste."

The indifferent man had started to become different now.

"Man—do you know what you are talking about?" he asked angrily and giving me one of those looks which the professors give you when handling your exam back in which you did not do very well.

"Well, the toothpaste comes with the car in case you have to flash the sexy million dollar smile while overtaking," I told him. The indifferent man was furious by now.

"You self-appointed so-called leaders," he was saying. "All you can do is be cynical,-You don't represent the majority anyway. You are the destroyers and not the builders."

He got up and went away and I lost a good coffee time acquaintance. "The demolition expert is never the best architect. Planners must take over the job from the demolition expert."

But the indifferent man did not wait to hear this. I was indeed disappointed that he did not bear me out because I was going to very honestly suggest to him that he get hold of two guys, pay them a handsome amount of money and ask them to knock each other out--but be sure not to kill each other, because humanity cannot be so cruel as to allow that; they can do all that they could, but they must not hit below the belt, they must fight within an enclosed space and with specific time limitations.

My coffee hour acquaintance would have surely laughed and asked--"But why would these two guys fight if they don't have anything against each other personally?"

And I would have surely replied--"They just did in Madison Square Garden." The roaring public and the excessively pounding hearts round the world over ruled my adquaintance objection, but instead they went right ahead to give vent to their assimilation of violence and called it "a great show."

I was too unhappy, but I had lost one acquaintance and discovered many millions more.---"PEACE".

Education Commission Reports:

Campus Bill of Rights Urged

CHICAGO (AP)—The Carnegie Commission on Higher Education said yesterday many Americans have mistakenly interpreted campus dissent as disruption and called for a bill of rights and responsibilities for all schools.

The commission also urged administration to maintain constant liaison with police to prevent disorders.

Clark Kerr, former president of the University of California and chairman of the group that prepared the report, told a news conference that the report was being issued at this time because "many campuses are engaged in drawing up codes...and we are in a period of peace."

But he added, "I don't think anyone can conclude that campus unrest is all over...My view is that there is a higher level of dissatisfaction among students than ever in history."

The report noted that "the campuses in recent years have been in the greatest turmoil in all their history over three centuries."

The report's three chief recommendations urged the adoption by all campuses of a "Bill of Rights and Responsibilities," the developement of contingency planning for disruptive emergencies and the creation of effective judicial procedures.

"Too many members of the campus have been reluctant to give up the myth of uninterrupted serenity and thus too few campuses have adequately thought through the handling of emergencies," the report said. Close contact must be maintained between the campus on the one hand and the police and the courts on the other, the report said.

A MODEL BILL of rights to clarify areas of responsibilities and understanding was proposed because:

"Faculty responsibilities have been less clearly set forth than faculty rights."

"Student rights have often been less carefully established than student responsibilities."

"The appropriateness of political action on a campus by whomever, but particularly by the institution and its component parts, has not been sufficiently defined."

"Too much has been left to oral tradition. More people need to know more precisely what is expected of them."

The report was the second on campus unrest by a major study group. It generally endorsed the previously released study of the President's Commission on Campus Unrest (Scranton Commission).

THE CARNEGIE report said "Most campus protest has taken the form of dissent, not disruption. However, there has been some tendency in the public reaction to protest activity as well as disruption. The American public seems to show limited tolerance for mass protest activities, even when these are within the bounds of the law.

"This substantial disapproval suggests that many Americans may not distinguish sufficiently between organized dissent and disruption."

The report recommends that evaluation and response to events on a campus be based on the distinction between dissent and disruption."

Dissent "lies at the foundation of a university," and "organized dissent and protest activity within the law are basic rights which must be protected on campus," the report said.

Disruption was defined as activity "which interfers with the rights of others...based on coercion and sometimes violence...utterly contradictory to the values and purposes of the campuses."

The commission also said: "The view that a campus is some kind of sanctuary from the law has been held for too long by too many."

"We recommend that significant actions which could be construed as violations of the general law be handled by the outside courts...Campus authorities have an obligation to report significant violations of the general law."

Kerr said, "We suggest that campuses maintain constant liaison with police as to when police will come in and how they will conduct themselves."

He added, "We regret the necessity for all this, but the fact is that campuses are bigger, there is less consensus among members of the campus and there are more confrontations by students and ousiders."

Ecological Conference To Be Held In Wakefield

Advance registrations are now being accepted for "Engineering for the Environment," a conference on technology's impact on environmental quality May 6 and 7 at the Colonial Statler Hilton Inn in Wakefield.

The conference is being held in conjuction with the annual meeting of the Massachusetts Society of Professional Engineers (MSPE). It is jointly sponsored by MSPE, the Massachusetts Audubon Society, and the University of Massachusetts through its Technical Guidance Center for Industrial Environmental Control.

Speakers will be educators, researchers, and government and industrial officials. They will discuss basic ecological concepts and will examine two specific areas of environmental concern in depth--city transportation and industrial recycling.

Soc. 101 Exam Wed.

The Introductory Sociology mid-term exam will be given March 17, 1971 Wednesday, at 6:30 P.M. The make-up will be announced in lecture. There will be no lecture on Tuesday, March 16.

Assignment for March 16 is due on March 18. Be sure to report to the proper room promptly. Test room assignments for discussion sections may be picked up in Machmer Hall, W-31.

Fraternity Re-paints Building

In five hours thirty brothers and pledges of Alpha Phi Omega used thirty gallons of paint to cover the basement and walls and ceilings in one of the buildings at Belchertown State School.

This basement will be used for special learning and training programs for the children.

With white walls and ceilings, five cheerfully colored cubicles were painted to welcome the children, rather than the dusty bare cement that covers most cellars.

The brothers performed this work (on Saturday March 6 and 13) as one of their many service projects on campus and in the community. Other projects include Las Vegas Night, Used Book Exchange, Amherst Fair and old age home visits on Easter Sunday.

Immunization Clinic Hours Announced

Due to the increased volume of immunizations given during the spring months, March 31 to May 27, the immunization clinic hours will be Wednesday 1:00 to 4:00 p.m. and Thursday 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. and 1:00 to 4:00 p.m. During this time period visits to the immunization clinic will be by appointment only. Call 5-0057.

Yellow fever immunizations, as usual, will be given only between 2:00 and 3:00 p.m. on Wednesdays.

Vt. Group To Fight Atomic Power Plant

Anthony J. Roisman of Washington, D.C. will represent the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution before the Atomic Energy Commission at the Vermont Yankee hearing for the Agency's Vernon, Vermont plant on April 13. The Coalition will endeavor to raise all vital questions concerning radiological health and safety, engineering safety and environmental impact of the plant. Expert witnesses will be asked to testify on issues which will be indicated at a preliminary hearing in Brattleboro.

Since the Vernon atomic reactor is located on the Connecticut River, it is anticipated that New Hampshire, which owns the river, will be involved in the hearing. The Vermont Water Resources Board has issued a permit to Vermont Yankee which allows the water temperature to be raised 6 degrees higher than the amount allowed by the Federal Water Quality Agency and by the New England River Basins Commission. This discrepancy may well constitute a basis for an objection to the permit for thermal effluents by New Hampshire.

Massachusetts may also be involved in the hearing since Connecticut River water, containing radioactive substances, will be diverted from the river 14 miles below the plant into the Quabbin Reservoir. From there drinking water will be supplied to the Greater Boston area of about 1.8 million people.

The Coalition was organized in Brattleboro on February 6 and its members include scientific and legal experts as well as many concerned local citizens. At its organizing meeting last month members of the Coalition stated that the raising of vital questions about the Vernon, Vermont atomic power plant was in the public interest.

Contributions to this effort may be made payable to Wildlife Preserves Inc. and mailed to Mrs. F. Cabot Holbrook, 19 Terrace Street, Brattleboro, Vermont 05301. Contributions are deductible from taxable income to the extent provided by law. Contributors may indicate on an accompanying letter that the money is to be used for the Vernon, Vermont case.

Hamlin Dorm Goes Co-Ed

Hamlin dormitory voted last week 106-14 to change the all-male dorm to co-ed for the fall semester of this year. The dorm, which started it's co-ed drive last November, will send its proposal to the Trustees for approval early this week.

Open House for interested female students will be held Wednesday and Thursday nights. 8-11 p.m. in the Hamlin lobby.

The committee at Hamlin will be accepting applications until April 17. Anyone who can't make the open house this week can call either Frank in 220 at 5-2932 or Don at 5-2720.

Schedule Changed

An adjusted schedule for Dick Gregory's visit to UMass tomorrow has been announced.

At 3:30 to 5:00 a reception open to the general University community will be held in the Colonial Lounge. The lecture will be at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. After the lecture Black students are invited to meet and talk with Dick Gregory at the Cultural Center in Mills House.

Board Denies Petition To Remove Fraternity

A citizen petition to oust a University of Massachusetts fraternity from residential area was denied by the Amherst Zoning Board of Appeals last night.

More than two hours of testimony was heard by the board on a petition of Robert McClung, Henry VanRoekel and Robert Whitney to overturn a ruling by the Amherst Building Inspector, which stated that the recent occupancy of the Elm St structure by a UMass. Fraternity was not in violation of town bylaws.

McClung contended that though they had lived in relative harmony with the fraternities in the past, its present use as such was "in violation of the intent and the letter of the bylaws," and that the structure should be returned to a residential zone.

The fraternity "works a serious hardship on the homeowners of the area and is detrimental to the quality of the area," McClung maintained.

He presented to the board a petition opposing the fraternity on the basis of its alleged violation of zoning bylaws, signed by 86 residents "of the immediate area."

She quoted UMass Dean William Field as saying that if the town didn't approve of the use, the lease held by the fraternity would not be binding.

Dean Field was also quoted as saying that there were many available rooms on the campus at the present time.

Speaking against the petition, George H. Reed of the Environmental Health and Safety Office at UMass said that the sprinkler system which had been recommended by his office was just that the not a requirement.

UMass Dean Field told the board that the university has the right to inspect the premises of fraternities periodically and that they expect to do it.

"If this is a legal location, I can't think of a better group of men than those in it now," Dean Field stated.

Julius Lester Speaks Here Tomorrow

Nationally known political activist and writer Julius Lester will meet with students at 4 p.m. on Tuesday, March 16th, in the Black Cultural Center at Mills House.

Lester, a former SNCC organizer and long-time activist among black people in the deep south, will be on campus in connection with a possible appointment to the Department of Afro-American Studies.

Lester's scholarly interests center around Black Culture and Political History. He is the author of a number of books in this area. Among his works are Look Out Whitey, Black Power Gon' Git Yo' Momma, To Be A Slave, Revolutionary Notes, Black Folk Tales and Search For The New Land.

He is also an interpreter of Black Music and has recorded two albums of folk blues on the Vanguard Label. His books have won a number of awards and have been translated into 5 languages.

Lester has spoken widely at universities in the United States and Africa.

Draft Fight Topic On Focus Tonight

Tonight at 10 p.m., WMUA's "Focus" program will highlight discussion of the growing anti-draft movement in the United States, as the time approaches for Congress to vote on draft extension. The Selective Service Act of 1967 expires on July 1, 1971, but a vote on draft extension in some form is expected before the end of March.

Moderator Ken Mosakowski's special guest on tonight's live, 60-minute forum will be UMass sophomore Arlen Brunson of the Western Massachusetts Committee to Repeal the Draft.

Areas to be covered in tonight's discussion include: arguments for draft repeal versus arguments for draft reform, the proposal for National Service, the positions of New England senators on draft appeal, present draft legislation in Congress, and lobbying tactics.

Interested persons are invited to tune in on "Focus" tonight at 91.1 FM and call in their questions at 545-2425 or 545-2876.

UMass Flying Club Announces Winner

First prize in the UMass Flying Club raffle was a round-trip for two to Nassau, Bahamas, won by Jack Appel of 18 Nutting Avenue.

The second prize was an added feature compliments of Mrs. Sue Stidham. She will be taking Carol Bowen of Williamsburg and two of her friends for a flight to any destination within an hour of UMass. Mrs. Stidham, who is a member of the Flying Club, will be using her own plane.

The Flying Club also announces the election of a new administration. John Hrenchuk was elected president, Jean Emery, vice-president; Dennis Klingelhofer, treasurer; and Tom Durso, safety officer.

In coming weeks the club will construct a Chanute-type glider that will enable one person to glide for approximately fifty feet under his own power.

The next meeting of the Flying Club will be April 7 in the Campus Center.

Listen for the sounds of love...

Where do you hear them?

In a plea for help from someone who needs it? In a dialogue between students and the Establishment? In a talk session for a marriage-on-the-rocks? At a Catholic Mass conducted in an Episcopal Church?

You'd be surprised.

The sounds of love are everywhere — anyone can hear them. If they listen.

The Paulists listen. But, like everything in life, the things that matter most are the hardest.

It isn't easy being a Paulist. But then, the best things in life never are.

Women Gymnasts Split Tri-Meet

The UMass Women's Gymnastics team suffered its second defeat of the season last Saturday to Springfield in a tri-meet held at UMass. In the same competition they came back to defeat Towson College.

A full capacity crowd was on hand to watch this exciting three way battle between three fine women's gymnastics teams.

From the outset it was clear that the meet would end up to be a closely fought battle between UMass and Springfield. UMass got off to a slim lead in the floor exercise, as Anne Burmeister of UMass came in first with 8.8 points, followed by Kate Rafferty and Judy Markell from Springfield College. The event score was UMass 24.85, Springfield 24.40 and Towson 21.90.

In sidehorse vaulting, Springfield more than made up the difference. Luci Miller from Springfield and Margie Combs from UMass tied for first with 8.9 points. Patti Corrigan from Springfield was third at 8.6 with Dotty Raugh of Towson fourth, 8.5.

At haltime Springfield was in the lead with 49.6 points, UMass was second with 48.5 and Towson was last at 43.15.

The balance beam brought several surprises. The usually steady and high scoring UMass girls had many major breaks which helped Springfield College increase its lead. The event was won by Miss Rafferty of Springfield with 8.4 points. Tied for second were Linda Seikunas of UMass and Miss Millers of Springfield with 8.05's.

Uneven bars followed the same pattern. Misses Burmeister and Combs took unexpected breaks and no girl on the UMass team moved above 6.8. The event was won by Miss Corrigan of Springfield who socred 8.7. Second place went to Miss Miller of Springfield and third place to Candy Normile from Towson.

The final score for the competition was Springfield 96.95, UMass 91.55 and Towson 81.70.

This loss gives the UMass girls a 6-2 record, Towson a 5-3 record and Springfield remains unbeaten at 6-0. The UMass girls will travel to Penn State this week for their last dual competition of the year.

From there the girls will advance to the Eastern Regionals where they will meet Springfield once again in a battle for the National Intercollegiates to held over Easter Weekend at Penn State.

Two years ago, UMass placed fourth in the National Collegiate Championships. Last year, though they were strong contenders for third place, the UMass girls were prevented from travelling to Utah due to lack of funds.

The scores earned by the UMass girls in the current season place the team in contention for third place again. Springfield College and Southern Illinois State College are strong contenders for the top two spots. Springfield College captured the National title in 1969. In all other years since the beginning of the championship meet the title has been held by the girls from Southern Illinois State College.

The UMass women's ski team took first place in the nine team Intercollegiate Ski Conference at Mittersill.

In the slalom Heather MacConnell topped all competition with a time of 46.23 seconds. Susan Arnold was next for UMass with a time of 55.2 seconds, good for sixth place overall.

The rolls were reversed in the Giant Slalom as Miss Arnold finished first with a 57.8 second run and Miss MacConnell finished sixth in the time of 59.36.

Gymnasts Third In Easterns

By MICHAEL CUSACK
MDC Staff

The UMass varsity gymnasts closed out their competitive season with a third place finish in the Eastern League, as the 44th annual Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastic League Championships were held in Curry Hicks Cage from Thurs., March 11-Sat., March 13. The three day season's finale decided individual champions, finalized League standings, and determined the League's representative to the National's, as well as selecting individuals from the East for the NCAA Championships to be held at the University of Michigan from April 1-3.

In the team championships, UMass performed as they have all season, as it scored 158.1 points, finishing behind Penn State's total of 163.55, and Springfield's 159.75. The Redmen bested teams from Army, Temple, Navy, Pittsburg, and Syracuse. As a team, UMass was a distant second to Penn State after Thursdays compulsory exercises, but finished well ahead of Springfield. However, only optional exercises were used this year in determining final standings as Springfield outscored the Redmen in this area, to give them a second place finish.

In the all-around competition, two of the six trophy winners were Redmen Tony Vacca and Norm Vexler finishing fourth and fifth respectively in this competition, as they continued to represent the Redmen well in this event. Both of these men have been a solid part of the Redmen lineup all season, as evidenced by their strong finish against established champions such as Penn State's Marshall Avener, and Temple's Ron Clemmer.

In the individual championships, UMass fared better than they have in the past as seven Redmen qualified for the finals, with four medals being won. Highlighting the individual honors for the Redmen was junior Dave Genest, who led all competitors on parallel bars with a final total of 18.15, for a first place finish. In becoming this year's Eastern League Champion, he qualified for the Nationals, and will travel to Michigan at the end of this month.

Other finalists for UMass were John Calabria on floor exercise, Danny Spier and Jay Aronstein on rings, Vexler on parallel bars, and Tom Myslicki on high bar. Vacca qualified for the finals in the long horse vaulting and horizontal bar events, but had to scratch due to a shoulder injury sustained the previous day in team competition.

Lowell Meek of Pittsburg won the floor ex title for the second year in a row, while Clemmer of Temple was second, and Springfield's captain, Ed Datti, finished third. Calabria, a junior from New York, performed consistently throughout the meet, as his 16.90 total earned him a sixth place tie with Penn State's Jerry Young.

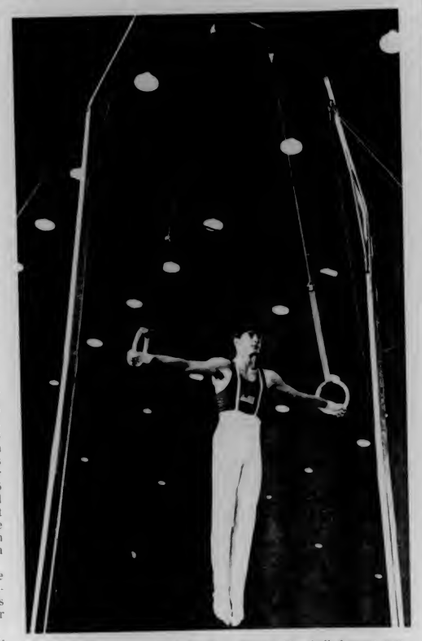
Side horse enthusiasts were treated to quite a demonstration of ability as Navy's John Worthington easily won first. His 9.55 score in the finals was high score of the meet. Tony DeStaphano of Syracuse was second on horse, while Penn State's Avener was third.

George Statter of Syracuse easily won the still rings title, as his well-controlled routines impressed judges and spectators alike. Bill Mitchell of Penn State was second, with Glenn Williams, also of Penn State, finishing third. Aronstein, a sophmore, missed qualifying for the Nationals by .15 of a point, as he finished fourth, right behind Williams. With two years remaining, Aronstein could develop into the top ringman in the East.

Penn State's Jim Kreust won vaulting with a total of 18.275. His teammate Avener was second, .2 of a point behind, while their teammate Mike Greene was off the pace by .225 points, and had to settle for third. Just for the record, Penn State also took fourth.

Genest, who brought the house down with his double back dismount, was the highest Redman finisher, as he won parallel bars. In the awards ceremony, he was flanked on all sided by members of Penn State's team, as they took second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth in the event.

Army's Dan Pillasch won high bar with a final total of 18.15. Finishing second and third respectively were Avener and Kreust. UMass' Myslicki turned in several of his finest routines of the season as his final total of 17.125 earned him fifth place.



Several outstanding Redmen just missed the right to be in the finals, as their totals were barely short of the qualifying point. Finalists were those eight men who had the top averages for their combined compulsory and optional routines. Jack Berner, an outstanding floor exercise man, finished ninth after two days of competition, as his total was .025 short of the necessary mark. Rick Riley, who had trouble with his compulsory routine, despite an outstanding optional exercise was 1 short of the mark. Norm Vexler missed qualifying for rings by .05 of a point. Jay Thomsen led all competitors in the optional vault with a 9.45 score, yet missed the finals because of some trouble with his compulsory. Finally, Vacca missed high bar by .475 points.

This marks the end of the competitive season for the gymnastic team, yet daily workouts will continue in preparation for next season.

Penn State dominated competition, as was expected, and Avener dominated Penn State, which was also expected. The Nittany Lions, under Gene Whettstone, have now shared or won the League title six times in the past seven years. This year, in addition to winning the League crown, and the right to represent the EIGL in the Nationals, Penn State took three of six all-around trophies, qualified for twenty-two spots in the finals, took nineteen medals, and won nine out of twelve event totals in the compulsory and optional scores.

If Penn State as a team is amazing, their top all-around man, Marshall Avener is more so. Whettstone, who is also coach of the U.S. National Team, has developed Avener to a point where he is one of the top gymnasts in the country. A strong candidate for the '72 Olympics, he was a member of the U.S. Team to last year's World Games, and a member of the U.S. Team which hosted the Russians in an international meet last month, as shown on ABC's "Wide World of Sports." Outstanding competitor of the EIGL Championships, he easily won the all-around total. He also took fourth on floor, third on side horse, second in vaulting, third on parallel bars, and second on high bar. Only a sophmore, he will be leading Penn State's attack for a couple of years to come.

Killebrew Leads Twins Over Red Sox,10-7

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP)— Minnesota's Jim Kaat and Eddie Guardado combined on a four-hitter, while Harmon Killebrew belted two homers, including a grand slam homer Sunday in helping power the Twins to a 10-7 exhibition victory over the Red Sox.

Rookies Paul Powell and Glenn Ezell also homered in the Twins' 11-hit attack against four Boston pitchers. Reliefer Mike Fiore and Rico Petrocelli connected for fence-clearing belts for the Red Sox.

Fiore, filling in at first base while George Scott recuperates from a virus, put the Red Sox in front with a long drive over the scoreboard in right field in the fourth. It was his fourth hit and fourth homer of the exhibition campaign. He broke the string by later getting a single.

The Twins erased the count in their half of the inning as Powell, a highly touted young outfielder, unloaded a hard spring home run. It was the only hit allowed by Boston starter Ken Brett, who faced just batters in four innings.

The Red Sox regained the lead in the fifth on a single by Don Pavletich, a pinch triple by Tony Muser and a sacrifice fly by John Kennedy. Petrocelli made it 5-1 with a two-run homer in the sixth before the roof caved in on Boston rookie Rogelio Moret.

With one out in the sixth, a single, a walk and a safe bunt set the stage for Killebrew, who leads active American League players with nine career grand slams. Killebrew ran the count to 2-2 and then sent a drive over the left field fence for his fourth home run of the Grapefruit League season.

Boston's Gary Wagner was nicked for a run in the seventh, breaking a tie, and the Twins wrapped up the decision with four runs against southpaw reliever Sparky Lyle's ineffective pitching in the eighth. The big blow against Lyle was a three-run blast over the fence in left center by Ezell.

The Red Sox made a mild threat in the ninth, getting two runs on a double by Billy Conigliaro, a triple by Jarvis Tatum and an infield out before Stan Williams worked out of a jam. Wagner took the loss as the Boston record dipped to 6-4. Minnesota is 5-3.

THANKS

From Athletic Dept.

As the close of our winter sports schedule draws near, it is timely to go on record as expressing our gratitude for the outstanding support extended all teams by Redmen fans — students, faculty, staff, alumni, and friends. But especially, and certainly with no intent to diminish the importance of other parts of the program, we single out our basketball and hockey fans. The space limitations of Curry Hicks Cage for basketball, and Orr Rink for hockey, are exasperating to us as to you. Your good natured patience is to be commended. That students have formed lines as early as 3:30 P.M. for an 8 o'clock varsity game speaks eloquently to your interest and forebearance. Thanks!

TA's Organize To Fight Cutback

By JEANETTE MARTINEAU
MDC Staff

The Graduate Student Senate, meeting last night, resolved to organize and inform all Teaching Assistants in every department to fight possible cutbacks in funds.

A fund for the organization of graduate students, and a decision to send a delegation, headed by Collins, President of the Graduate Senate, to present President Robert C. Wood with the Senate's resolutions, were made also.

Dean Arthur Gentile of The Graduate Center, and Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs, Robert Gluckstern met with the assembly of graduate students concerned. Collins tried to impress them with the "disproportionate 5-6% of the University budget cut by the State."

Collins explained that "TA's have no clearly defined role in University, that they are paid from 03 (i.e. for parttime help), and that State Legislation does not appropriate money for graduate education."

His recounting of his efforts to obtain a Day-Care Center was followed by a list of resolutions submitted by members of the Economics Department. Here are the motions as amended and voted:

(1) The maximum number of students per section taught by TA's should be 25.

(2) Each TA should be guaranteed at least $3200 per year.

(3) Graduate Students now affiliated with the University should receive priority in the allocation of funds for the next academic year.

Gluckstern then took the floor, citing that the 50% cut as "an incorrect figure, that it's too early to tell how the budget will fare in the Legislature."

Dean Gentile reinforced that: "The budget allocation decisions about the TA money are left up to the Department heads." He advised Departments to give the standard $3200 to as many TA's as possible, to which he quickly added "I'm not advocating what I said."

Collins insisted: "If there is confusion it is because the Administration did not inform the TA's. We should not compromise on the cut, and we cannot wait until the budget is drawn up and the cut is made."

Other graduate students felt that "TA's must act like other small interest groups, and TA's must get the support of undergraduates." That "petitions will mean nothing to the Administration", and "the teaching load should be equalized", were thoughts also expressed.

"TA's should not seek short-term goals, the University should have TA's under contract," one student said.

Collins empasized that: "Department heads should make commitments to TA's for next year. He concluded: "It is important that we organize around a few, fundamental issues. It's a matter of self-survival."

The next meeting of The Graduate Student Senate will be March 31st.

Student Trustees Approved In State Legislature

By ANNE STADNICKI
MDC Staff

The House of the Massachusetts State Legislature yesterday voted and passed House bill No. 4778 which would allow both campuses of the University of Massachusetts to choose one student representative as a full-time member of the Board of Trustees of the University.

John Olbrych, representative from Northampton, presented the bill and lobbied for it on the floor.

Little debate was carried on the issue, according to Northampton representative Edward McColgan, also a member of the Education Committee. He could not, however, reveal the exact vote count.

It was noted by Judy Gill, chairman of the USCC, that it was mainly through the efforts of Rep. Olbrych that there was so little opposition to the bill voiced at the meeting.

She said that the main concern of opponents centered about the fact that one representative to the Trustees would be allowed to each UMass campus. Several representative to the Trustees

She said that the main concern of opponents centered about the fact that one representative to the Trustees would have liked each of the State College campuses to have a representative, also, she explained.

The area of disagreement was resolved when it was pointed out that these schools have advisory commissions that meet with a Trustee member each week, Miss Gill said.

"It is unfeasible for the two UMass campuses to share one representative to the Trustees," Miss Gill said. "They have diversified problems."

Three Thousand March For Gay Law Reforms

By BOB NESTI
MDC Staff

A delegation of Five College Students attended a Gay Liberation march this past Sunday in Albany, N.Y. sponsored by the Gay Liberation Front of the Tri-Cities.

Three thousand people marched to show support for Homosexual Law Reform legislation now being considered by numerous state legislatures.

They marched the two miles from the Albany State University to the State Capital steps where speakers and a list of demands were heard, on Amherst Gay Liberation member said.

The demands called for a "repeal of the consentual sodomy laws", now being considered by the New York legislature; Enactment of Fair Housing and Employment for homosexuals, and repeal of solicitation, loitering, and impersonation laws.

Among the speakers was Kate Millet, author of "Sexual Politics", who said homosexuals were a "pariah class" in American society and called for a stronger feeling of gay pride. Also a California minister told of being removed from his position for being homosexual. A UMass student was among the many Gay Liberation groups who had speakers. He said, according to the GLF spokesman, that the laws in Massachusetts are much worse than those of New York.

The march occured without incident and with a fair amount of spectators. The GLF spokesman called the gathering "more liberal than radical" in its outlooks and said some of the Gay Liberation activists have stayed behind in Albany to lobby for the demands.

The GLF spokesman thought the march personally beneficial as he "completely lost" any stereotypes he had left concerning homosexuals and it gave him a "sense of pride."

Disappointing Turnout At Stockbridge Meeting

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

Only 35 students out of a total of 250 Stockbridge seniors class members showed for an open meeting called by Senior Class President Andrew Pyenson last night to discuss impending issues.

The first issue brought up before those attending was to decide whether the Stockbridge Students should have a graduation ceremony separate from that of the University. Those attending felt that a separate graduation of Stockbridge Students would be more personal than would be a graduation with 4,000 UMass students. The second issue brought up was the choice of a class gift given by Seniors to the School.

Due to the very small turnout of 35 people, it was decided that a representative of each major would distribute ballots to class members tomorrow so that a more representative number of students could vote on the main issues. Those attending favored a separate graduation but it was ruled by Pyenson that they would have to wait until tomorrow to vote.

Those attending cited several reasons for the low attendance at the meeting. One reason brought up was the fact that there is a lack of communication between students because Stockbridge lacks an adequate form of communication media. Another reason stated was that many students are apathetic, just as are members of the Senior Class of UMass. Last week only 9 members of the Senior Class turned out at a meeting to plan Senior Day.

At the close of the meeting, Pyenson said that he felt that Stockbridge should have a voice in the Student Senate and he was disappointed that their representation was taken away by the Senate at their special meeting Sunday evening.

Gregory Coffee Hour Postponed; Lecture On

Humorist Dick Gregory will visit UMass today to give a public talk in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m.

Due to attndence at the funeral of Whitney Young, Gregory will be unable to attend the afternoon coffee hours previously scheduled, but after the lecture he will meet with Black students at the Mills House Cultural Center.

A reception for the general Univesity community will be held on Wednesday from 10 to 11:30 a.m. in the Student Union Colonial Lounge.

The talk is sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program and will be broadcast live by WFCR (88.5) as part of its "Colors" program which brings its audience a reflection of the attitudes of Blacks. WFCR is the non- commercial public radio station of the Five-College Area (Smith, Mount Holyoke, Amherst, and Hampshire Colleges, and the University.

Littlefield Reveals Housing Study

By ANN GURNETT
MDC Staff

September of 1972 has been set as the occupancy deadline for ten new residence halls now being studied under the auspices of the Planning Office, according to H.S. Littlefield, Director of Planning.

The study, approved in January by the Board of Trustees, is being conducted by the Planning Office with assistance coming from an Advisory Building Committee composed of three undergraduates, two grad students, andseveral people from the administration, he said.

A student housing questionnaire, compiled last year, has served as one of the bases for the planning of the new residence halls, he explained. Students indicated in the questionnaire a preference for a new option in living styles, one not available in the 'housing index' at present. According to Littlefield, students showed a leaning towards a more personal, private environment, but indicated that housing costs should remain as fixed as possible, he added.

The PlanningOffice's answerto the problem consisted of three options, according to Littlefield. One possibility was an 'entry suite' style, similar to the Northeast dorms; another was a 'town house', with a full blown kitchen and common space; and the third was for a flat-type house, comprised mostly of singles, which would share a common kitchen with another similar house instead of relying upon a dining commons.

"Under active consideration"as the site for the new halls is Fraternity - Sorority park," Littlefield said. The park was originally planned to accomodate approximately thirteen houses, of which only three were built.

The site would be ideal because the utilities, etc., are already available for ten buildings, which would cut costs and construction time markedly, he explained.

Each building would house a maximum of sixty people, Littlefield said. Ninety five percent of the rooms would be singles or approximately 100 sq. feet. Five kitchens, each to be shared by two dorms, are also being planned, he continued.

FRATERNITY-SORORITY PARK-Proposed site for new residences.

Littlefield said the objective of the Planning Office was to create a residential rather than institutional living area. He also mentioned that he hoped that campus groups who wished to live together might gather enough people to occupy one building. This would help create a closer atmosphere than that afforded by the assignment method of housing placement, he said.

Transportation would be supplied through the campus transit service, which is expanding constantly to meet the needs of the University. Approximately 200 parking spaces, or one for every three students, have also been included in the plans.

Littlefield said that the target rent rates will be the 1970 rates plus a fixed dining commons fee. However, he added that if two houses sharing the same kitchen decided not to have a 'meal ticket' per se and voted on it, it would not be mandatory.

The proposed houses would have a maximum of three stories, with a pitched roof and a wood exterior. According to Littlefield, "taking the time frame and the housing inventory into consideration, this type of building was the most feasible."

Upon completion of this project, the Planning Office intends to study apartment-style housing for both married and single students.

Black Mass Media Services Expanding In Coverage

By BOB SCHEIR
MDC Staff

To fill the need for black-oriented programming and media training in the Pioneer Valley, Black Mass Communications is producing two radio programs and preparing additional media services for black people.

Black Mass Communications, currently housed at the WFCR offices in Hampshire house, presents two radio programs on local radio. One, Ujamaa-Drum is presented Monday, Wednesday, and Friday over WMUA, and Colors, which is presented on WFCR Tuesday and Thursday and Sunday at 7:30.

In addition to presenting it's regular programming of black music and news, the project has also broadcast speeches on campus live, such as the one by Mrs. W.E.B. DuBois, and will carry the tonight's Dick Gregory speech. It has also carried interviews with Angela Davis, and the Soledad Brothers.

The project, which began broadcasting last fall, has not yet received funding from the Student Senate, but is hoping for financial aid for next semester.

Lorin Moore, who with Gloria Bourne, Pat Gardner, and Danny Colelough produces most of the programming, explained that Black Mass Communications was designed to "fill a void in the Pioneer Valley, for news and programming designed for black people."

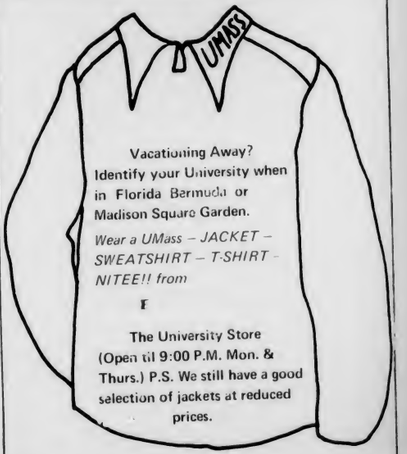
The six days of programming a week is now aired includes black music (including jazz as well as soul), coverage of the Ericka Huggins and Angela Davis trials, as well as the New Haven trial of Bobby Seale. The station has also presented specials on the racial conflict in Cairo, Illinois, with interviews with local officials and members of the Black United Front.

The project-which received help from a similar program presented on WBUR in Boston and the Roxbury community, is now working towards a tape library and a resources library to be set up at Amherst and Mt. Holyoke colleges. Eventually, the project is working towards a pool of resources and skills in broadcasting to fill a recognized need in the local black community.

What Do You Want To Get Married For?

Women's Liberation is planning to set up a discussion table outside the planned Bridal Fair at the Campus Center. This topic was the main source of debate at last night's Women's Liberation meeting in the Women's Center in the old bookstore.

Discussion also centered around the fact that new ideas for meetings are needed, along with more women to attend the meetings.



Women stressed the idea that any kind of demonstration against the Bridal Fair is not meant to ridicule their sisters, but merely to bring to their attention that companies who are sponsoring the Bridal Fair are not doing it for solely "altruistic reasons."

The next Women's Liberation meeting will be held the Tuesday after vacation at seven o'clock in the Women's Center.

Group Leaves Harvard Building "Get Them Out"

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)-The group of women's liberationists who seized a Harvard University building nine days ago ended their occupation at 3 p.m. Monday, leaving as Cambridge police prepared to arrest them.

There were about 50 women in the group, plus a handful of children. Some carried signs that read, "We couldn't wait for you cops."

The ownmen apparently were aware that Cambridge police had been ordered by Superior Court Judge Frank W. Tomasello to remove them from the building.

Police entered the building after the group left to assess whether any damage had been done.

Earlier Monday, Judge Tomasello angrily declared, "This is a matter for the police.. a crime is being committed."

The judge commented as Harvard officials asked him for renewal of a restraining order issued one week ago against the militant band.

"I demand that the police go in and arrest them," Judge Tomasello said. He said the women's actions in seizing the building and rebuffing all efforts to induce them to leave "constitute breaking and entering, criminal trespass and possible other crimes."

"Get those bums out of there," he ordered.

The women took over the building, an architectural workshop belonging to the Harvard Graduate School of Design March 6. They demanded that Harvard allow them to set up a day care and community center.

Prof. Archibald Cox, a Harvard law professor acting as Harvard's spokesman, went to the building Sunday night and met briefly with a few militant women who were wearing "war paint."

Cox told them that "women sympathetic to your objectives" had located space in Cambridge where a day care and women's center could be established and that a private benefactor had offered to pay the rent.

When the women rejected the proposal, Cox warned them for "the last time" that the group must quit the building "before the use of police authority becomes inevitable."

Cambrdige police throughout the occupation said they would not act unless requested to do so by the university.

Harvard issued a statement which said, "The whole Harvard-Radcliffe community is relieved to know that the women have left." Police action which was planned over the weekend will be dropped, the statement said, but the University will continue with court proceedings.

House Committee Supports SST

WASHINGTON (AP)-The much-disputed supersonic civilian transport aircraft was pushed a little closer to a test takeoff Monday with House Appropriations Committee support.

By vote of 26 to 15 the committee approved the entire Nixon Administration request for continued financing of the giant project at a rate of $289.9 million for the currnt fiscal year. That's $79.9 million above an initial allotment of $210 million in an emergency bill passed last January.

Opponents of the projected 298-passenger aircraft expected to fly at a speed of 1,800 miles an hour picked up a wee bit of support in the committee.

The latest previous test vote in the committee, in May 1970, was 26 to 13 in favor of continuing work on [illegible] models for which the government already has provided about $864 million. Private industry is expected to put up about $382 million of the development cost of about $1.5 billion.

The House will consider the latest financing bill Wednesday and Thursday, and current nosecounts indicate that the measure will be sent to the Senate without major trouble.

The Senate story could be different. That body has been reluctant to approve more money for the plane and rejected all funds last year. It finally accepted a compromise carrying the emergency $210-million allotment.

Replying to claims that the big plane would pose environmental hazards with its sonic booms, the Appropriations Committee said it had complete confidence that these problems will be solved.

But the committee made it clear that future federal funds may not be used to finance commercial production. It cited government statistics claiming that the federal investment would be more than recouped if and when the SST is ready for commercial use by the airlines.

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., a leading opponent of the SST issued a statement Monday asserting that the odds are far more than 100 to 1 against the airplane ever being successful privately financed aircraft.

Fourth Round SALT Talks Begin

VIENNA, Austria (AP)—U.S. and Soviet envoys met here Monday to start the fourth round of the strategic arms limitation talks-called SALT.

President Franz Jonas of Austria reminded them that their success would not only be important for the two big powers but for the entire world. At Key Biscayne, Fla., President Nixon said he was encouraged and heartened by these talks.

"For the first time, a realistic dialogue is taking place between the Soviet Union and ourselves about the management of our strategic relations," Nixon said. "The mutuality of interests which brought us to the table encourages our hope that the SALT talks will succeed. I am heartened by the work which has already been done and I am hopeful that the constructive nature of the exchange will continue in phase four."

The U.S. and Soviet envoys met in Jonas' ornate office in a wing of the former imperial palace. The meeting was friendly and courteous.

Jonas said: "The Austrian president is the spokesman of the many small countries which know exactly that the success of these talks could be of importance not only for the two powers, but for the whole world."

He noted that both the head of the U.S. delegation Gerard Smith, and Soviet delegate, Vladimir Semenov, pledged in their arrival statements to try to achieve a positive result.

It will be the 56th session between the two delegations since SALT opened at Helsinki, Finland, 16 months ago.

Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky gave a reception for the SALT delegations Monday night.

Tighter secrecy was expected at the SALT sessions. The Soviets have reacted angrily to leaks in Washington about the talks during the earlier phases, two of which were held in Helsinki, and one in Vienna.

Official American sources so far have made no disclosures about SALT, but information which seeped out showed that the two sides still disagree on several vital points.

The United States wants an agreement covering both defensive and offensive nuclear rockets, while the Soviets indicated they might sign an accord on the defensive antiballistic missiles-ABM-alone. This was rejected by Nixon.

The Soviets also want American aircraft stationed abroad to come under the agreement. The United States regards them as tactical, not strategic, and therefore outside the scope of SALT. The Americans want to include only long-range bombers.

The present phase was expected to last until mid-May, with two plenary sessions per week alternating between the two embassies.

HEW Charged With Buying Zoo

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Department of Health, Education and Welfare approved the purchase of a $15,000 mobile zoo and $300,000 in television equipment for school systems receiving funds from a $75-million emergency school-desegregation program, Sen. Walter F. Mondale, asserted Tuesday.

Mondale accused the department of ignoring congressional guidelines in dispensing the money to aid desegregating school districts. The Minnesota Democrat cited a Government Accounting Office audit which he said shows "applications were approved which contained proposals having nothing whatsoever to do with the problems of desegregation.

"School districts in clear violation of civil rights laws-districts that had demonstrated even on the face of their applications that they were ineligible for funds-were granted money."

The $75 million appropriated by Congress last year is the first installment of President Nixon's proposed $1.5 billion program to ease the transition to school integration. Mondale, chairman of the Senate's Equal Educational Opportunity Committee, said reports that the funds were improperly distributed prompted him to call for an investigation by the GAO, Congress' watchdog.

The GAO report said the Memphis city school system purchased a funds for "special curriculum-revision programs."

The report quoted the Memphis application that "many disadvantaged children are turned off by books and other school-type materials. From past experiences, teachers have discovered that students are very much interested in the daily newspapers."

A $165,247 grant to the Talladega County, Ala., school district was approved Nov. 5, the GAO noted. On Jan. 8, 1971 the Department of Justice filed a suit requiring reinstatement of dismissed teachers who allegedly had been discriminated against.

UM Prof Named For Presidential Commission

By LINDA A. BALICKI
MDC Staff

A UMass Sociology professor has been named by a Presidential Commission to prepare a study which describes and analyzes the ways in which policies of both government and private-sector organizations in the United States indirectly influence human fertility and population levels. Results of Dr. Edwin Driver's research will be incorporated in the report of the Commission on Population Growth and the American Future which was established by President Nixon in 1970.

The focus of Dr. Driver's study will be upon the statutes, administrative rules and private-sector organizations' regulations which are intended to accomplish other goals whose effects upon human fertility are largely, if not entirely unintended. It is his contention that many of the established rules and patterns of society, as well as many small everyday occurences, serve as an influence upon the women so that she is more inclined to continue her traditional role of wife and mother rather than engaging in outside activities.

"Wherever there are policies limiting the women's part in the labor force there is a fertility impact, however unintended it may be." Driver pointed to policies pertaining to employment as well as to policies which limit women's participation in education, the military, politics, as well as in career fields, as some of the major policies which will come under study.

As an example of the way in which policies work, Driver pointed out that while females outnumber males in the United States by a ratio of roughly 52 females to 48 males, in the educational system 61% are females. According to Driver, this serves as an example of how females have avenues for alternatives to parenthood closed to them and that they therefore turn to their traditional role.

Driver also intends to study such areas as the ratio of women participation in politics, sports and recreation as well as the impact which Selective Service requirements have upon fertility and population growth.

According to Driver: "The more equal the sexes are in status in all the different institutions of society, the less role differentiation between them will occur so that women will not view the maternal role as primary for her. Greater equality and participation will also lead to more equality in decision-making within the home as well as to less interest in the maternal role-both reactions which will effect population and fertility levels."

It is his hope that the Commission's report will make people more aware of the indirect effects of policies which are set up for other reasons have upon fertility and population rates. "I am increasingly interested in seeing the applications of social science research to major societal problems such as growth and distribution of human population and their consequences," he said.

During the past two years as a consultant to the Ford Foundation, Driver has been instrumental in developing programs of research on population policy for the social sciences and law. Reports on these programs have appeared in journals such as Demography and the Journal of Legal Education. At the annual meetings of the American Sociological Association in Denver September 1971, Dr. Driver will participate in a Symposium based on the preliminary report of the President's Commission on Population Growth and the American Future.

Sponsored by the Campus Center Program Council and Modern Bride magazine, the fair is open to the general public and admission is free.

Two Fashion Shows featuring the latest in wedding fashions will be presented by the Modern Bridal Shop of Indian Orchard at 3:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m.

Trousseau fashions will be shown by Sally Donovan, Inc. of Ludlow. Both trousseau and wedding fashions will be modelled by University coeds. Their escorts will wear men's formal wear from Harry Daniel's, Inc. of Northampton. Miss Janie Rearick from Modern Bride magazine in New York will commentate the show.

Fifteen models for the fashion shows were selected from approximately 200 co-eds at UMass on the basis of poise, modeling ability and physical appearance.

Father and mother of the bride will be Dean and Mrs. William Tunis. He is Dean of Admissions. Flower girl will be Charlene Korza.

Product displays presented by both local stores and national companies will be set up in the Auditorium. Local companies participating include Holowitz Photography, Mary Kay Cosmetics, and Frederick's Jewelers (all of Springfield), Regency Stylists, Chenna Boppa Soo, Lang's Photography, and Borders of Our Lives Gift Shop (all of Amherst), MacDonald Shoes and Wig Discount, Inc, of Northampton, and Town Products of Pittsfield.

Crystal, china, and silver for the bride will be shown by representatives from the following national companies: Fostoria, Pickard, Towle, Oneida, and International Silver Company. Gourmet cookingware and appliances will be featured in exhibits by Corning and John Oster. The Singer Company will show their full line of products. The Simmons Company will display sofa and hide-a-bed models. And the Pocono Honeymoon Resort Association will be displaying pictures and materials about a honeymoon in the Poconos.

Doorprizes from both local and national companies will be drawn after each Fashion Show. A grand prize of a one week honeymoon in the Poconos will be featured. In addition, every visitor to the Fair will receive a Modern Bride shipping bag containing booklets offering household planning tips and rules of etiquette for prospective brides.

The Oneida Community Service Award will be presented by Oneida Silversmiths to two women's organizations on campus who have given outstanding service to the community throughout the year.

The two finalists as selected by the contest judges with a brief review of their respective programs are as follows:

The women of GAMMA SIGMA SIGMA were selected for their continuous service to the university and community through such programs as the coordination of foreign student orientation, for their work with the patients at Kane's Nursing Home and Belchertown State Hospital, for their contribution to traffic control during the arrival of students in the fall, for their contributions to the Kidney Foundation and for their assistance through the Loan Closet and the Book Exchange.

Chairman for the Bridal Fair is Agnes Kilka, a sophomore nursing major at UMass. Program advisor is James Riley.

Modern Rome Still Struggling

ROME (AP)—It just wasn't Julius Caesar's day-nor Rome's-as the Ides of March rolled around once again.

The Ides of March-March 15-was the day predicted for Caesar's murder-thus it was regarded with fear and foreboding by the old Romans.

The ruins of the Roman Forum where Caesar won political triumphs before this assassination on March 15 in 44 B.C., were closed to tourists by a week-long strike.

The city which hailed him as military dictator fumed with dispute over a parade of rightists demanding that the military take over the government.

Modern Rome still was striving with many of the same old problems that had even Caesar busy, and some that Caesar solved were back again.

Traffic was in chaos despite months of experiments with an ever-changing system of oneway streets, pedestrian islands, bus and taxi priority lanes, and a sweeping ban on downtown parking.

Things had been bad, too, in the narrow streets in Caesar's time but he solved it by simply banning all chariot traffic from Rome in daytime.

In the midst of a two-month cleanup campaign to rid modern Rome of the odious title of dirtiest city in Italy, some newspapers doubted that the extra garbage trucks and litter baskets would do the job.

The garbage collectors have said they would not accept cartons of bottles in the trash. And it is a rare family of wine-drinking Romans that doesn't have at least one bottle a day to dispose of somehow.

There's a law against saving them up until New Year's Eve and then throwing them out the window into the street, but many Romans do it anyway.

Rome, which was in the hands of the money lenders even in ancient times, is now $2 billion in debt.

Seventy thousand shanty dwellers camp in the periodic protest against lack of housing while the city is bursting its seams after swelling from 1.6 million to 2.8 million population in 20 years.

While the site of Caesar's grave is not even known, unburied dead are stored in coffins at modern Rome's overcrowded cemetery awaiting permanent burial.

Rome moviegoers went through Sunday without a firstrun film because of a theater strike.

But several bouquets of carnations were left, by a few who remembered, around the statue of the stabbed Caesar outside the strike-closed Forum.

Wakefield Conference To Center On Ecology

An ecological conference entitled "Engineering for the Environment" will be sponsored mainly by the Commonwealth Technical Resource Service/School of Engineering on May 6 and 7 in Wakefield. As listed in yesterday's Collegian, other sponsors will be The Massachusetts Society of Professional Engineers the Massachusetts Audubon Society and the UMass Technical Guidance Center for Industrial Environmental Control.

Dick Gregory Live

Tonight on WMUA-FM there is a schedule change in order that the Black Mass Communications Project might bring you the Dick Gregory DVP address. "Drum" will be heard tonight from seven to ten p.m. The Young Socialist Alliance will be heard on Wednesday night from seven to eight. The new Classical program will be heard on Wednesday night from nine to eleven. All happens on WMUA 91.1 FM.

"It's For Security --- It Makes Us Feel More Secure"

Sunset in Marrakesh

My brother lives in Marrakesh. He's a lot older than I am and he lives there with his wife and his kids. He runs a bar.

Marrakesh is a beautiful place. I went there once to visit him and fell in love with it. It's hot and dusty but the sky is so clear it makes you feel good yourself. There's not much to do but hang around and live. That's what the people do instead of trying to kill themselves. I'm going to move there when I get out of here.

The place my brother lives in is an old adobe ranch house out from the city. It sits in the middle of an oasis-there's a lot of desert near Marrakesh-with date trees all around it. His bar is in a big old building in the center of the city near the railroad station.

I was little when he moved there. He's a lot older than I am and I don't remember too much about him. He writes once a year at Christmas time. Last Christmas he invited me to go and visit him and my parents said I could. They never talk about him much.

I went to Marrakesh last summer. Once you get off the boat there's a train ride of about 400 miles to Marrakesh. But I didn't mind because I like trains and there were a lot of interesting people on the train.

He didn't want to meet me at the station but said it would be better if I walked into his bar. He didn't want my first glimpse of him to be ruined because he wouldn't look natural in a train station. He wanted me to see him as he usually is behind the bar, himself and not someone waiting for someone.

Even so, he knew who I was when I stepped in the door. He shook my hand and looked me straight in the eye to see if I'd flinch. I didn't. Then he took me out to a back room and got me wrecked. Dope is kind of a funny thing in the United States. Over there it's just a part of life. People don't make a big deal about it. I generally don't anyway.

He was just about to close the bar so he did and then we went to his house. When it gets dark in Marrakesh it does it quickly. The sun sort of coasts to a stop just above the horizon and hangs there for a while before it drops suddenly. Then all of a sudden it's dark and it starts to get cold. We got to his house just before it got dark and parked under a tall curving palm.

There were little crickets chirping in the grass and from a pond behind the house I could hear peepers starting up. The sky was purple and little pinpricks of stars were beginning to show. The air was heavy but clean and it felt good to just stand and inhale deeply.

I was standing there making a fool of myself just absorbing everything when my brother laughed and said let's go in.

His house is one of those low, one-story deals with a big room at one end that has a huge fireplace. He had a couch in front of the hearth and a white and red Oriental rug on the floor. All around the walls were paintings that he liked. There were all kinds of things, spears, swords, animal horns and shields and a lot of other stuff he liked to collect hanging up.

He has a beautiful wife too but it figures. My brother always did things the right way. Everything worked out the way he wanted it to and he's happy about it.

I felt sort of strange being around him. He's very confident about everything and knows what he wants to do. I never had much of an idea of what I wanted to do. I used to be scared of being with people and I liked to be alone a lot. My brother thrives on people. He'd go nuts if he couldn't talk to people in his bar and see what was bugging them.

He knows there's something wrong with me. After we ate we just sat around and talked. It was almost like talking to someone who was grown up and wasn't part of your family. He sort of isn't anyway but there was a bond between us. Neither one of us felt like fooling the other. He told me a lot of things about people that it took him years to find out. He told me that people are better off not depending on other people because everyone has to watch out for himself first. If he doesn't then he's crazy and he's going to get hurt.

I didn't understand half of what he told me. But I sat and listened carefully because I think he knows what he talks about.

When I got back from Marrakesh I decided that I really had no idea what I want or even what I feel like doing. Things have broken down to that level-I no longer know, much less care, about what I really feel like doing. I don't mean what I'll do from 9 to 5 for the rest of my life. I don't know who I'll be or even why I should be one way and not another.

My brother has it all in hand though. He made peace with something or somebody a long time ago and he has it all figured out. If he doesn't then he puts on a pretty good show. But he told me that nobody ever knows, not even people who seem to and that worried me. That gives me nothing to stand on and I'll probably end up just like him-deluding myself into thinking that everything is what I want.

What Will The Fat Man Say?

Every morning I walk out of my room in Southwest and head off towards the Union. On my way I see many people. These people make me think of "The Times They Are A'Changing" by Zimmerman. It is all about how people have to change their way of thinking or they will be swept up when the revolution comes. I do not like to think of this happening because I think that people are not together enough.

Before we have a revolution I would like to see all the people in the world love each other to the point that there is no more war. Then we will be ready for a revolution. Right on. All power to the people.

Speaking of the people, did you know that you are one? Some people don't know this and don't act like people. That is too bad. You certainly wouldn't expect a guppy to act like a goldfish, now would you? I think you'll agree with me when I say that I think it would be a good thing if everyone acts like he is supposed to and not the way he wants to.

I don't hold out much more hope for the world than I already do. James Taylor sums it up just the way I feel about it: so does Elton John, Joni Mitchell, Perry Como, Laura Nyro, Lawrence Welk, Guy Lombardo, the Beatles and Mark Silverman in one of his more mellow moods.

What's Been Happening To US?

I was sitting in the Hatch last night, nurturing a cup of coffee and absently reading a book, when I noticed the people by the jukebox. They're always there, not necessarily the same people, but they're always there. Who they were doesn't matter; they had the familiar dazed look in their eyes as they sat soaking up the bennies of the box, singing and playing drumsticks to the beat They must be stoned, I thought; and then it struck me. It is not just the jukebox people; almost everyone around here is getting wrecked with some degree of regularity.

I remembered sitting in another cafeteria before another jukebox at another campus, long ago and far away from here. It was a pretty straight place: commuters, religious affiliation, working class, straight people. Could the change in view, in life styles - in "life form", as a friend likes to say - be because of the change in place or is it affecting everyone? I have not been back in quite a while, but I can't bring myself to bet against the latter.

Things weren't supposed to work out like this. We were supposed to replace armies abroad with peace corps engineers, doctors and teachers; a trade was to be worked out with both the black and the conservatives. We were finally to be able to study what we've liked, freed by the availability of jobs and money from the pressures toward business administration, engineering or science. It wasn't to be money which motivated our decisions, rather the significance and satisfaction of a particular kind of life.

"What happened to the Civil Rights Movement?" asks a recent essay by historian C.V. Woodward. In his answers are the beginnings to an answer of a deeper question: What happened to us?

After the second World War, the nation and its political leaders began ever so slowly to move towards what Woodward calls a Second Reconstruction. Confrontation, crises, marches resulted in civil rights legislation passed in 1957, 1960, 1964, 1965. The formal barriers of jim-crow began to fall in the South and the rest of the nation. And this time, the Reconstruction was headed and made up primarily by blacks and youth. Everything was looking up.

But in 1966, he writes, it began to fall apart. "Even before (then), problems of a new and disturbingly different character were demanding attention - things like slums, housing, unemployment, deteriorating school and family, delinquency and riots." These were right in the back yard of the same liberals who had supported philosophically, monetarily and bodily the movement. The problems were "tough and harsh and brutally raw.

"What's more they were national problems, not Southern, though the South faced some of them too. As soon as this came home to the North the great withdrawal set in. White congressmen from the Bronx and Chicago set up cries of anguish and dismay as bitter as the familiar chorus from South Carolina and Mississippi. Amid the clamor (North and South together) and Civil Rights Bill of 1966 for open housing and protection of Civil Rights workers (combining Northern and Southern issues) went down in crashing defeat."

Something happened in the late Sixties, not only to the white homeowner and the urban congressman, but to us, their children. Those of us who lived in cities found it hard to reconcile professed beliefs with the angry confrontations in our neighborhoods as the black population began exercising its right to live where it chose. Neighborhoods as we had known them disappeared: stores, friends, churches and synagogues with, which we had grown up were simply no longer there.

And there was an added element of fear. Blacks were not fooled by the tokenism which America offered them; they became angry. The fear we felt walking the streets of what used to be our home wasn't supposed to be in the dream.

In Southeast Asia the leaders failed us. They prosecuted a grim, nasty, brutal war and some of us began to die. To die. For what - for freedom and liberty? Give us a break. The ones didn't die often came back maimed physically or mentally and the uncertainty which the war thru into our lives ate steadily away at the dream.

The economy, perhaps affected by the war, also failed us. As more and more of our resources were diverted to the military effort, the more esoteric positions as teaching began to dry up; we scrambled to find the few which were available and held deferments.

Those of us who grew up touched by the dream have grown up to feel it turn into a nightmare. Too many of us gave up and now sit around smoking dope with little if any conception of a tomorrow - a tomorrow which once was eagerly awaited. Our younger brothers and sisters grew up and through the media of our culture, caught for themselves a bitter case of disillusionment. Perhaps as sometimes happens, the illness they caught was worse than the original.

Some day the war is going to end. Some day the Third Reconstruction of which Woodward speaks is going to bring this country closer to the dream we once (and I think still) had.

But the guys who sit there by the juke box, wrecked in more than one sense of the word, oblivious to so much besides the beat, will they be around to enjoy, let alone help bring about such a world?

Letters To The Editor

Too Many Lamps

To The Editor:

I resent spending time correcting the stupidity of people like Jim Mitchell. Obviously, it is up to the readers to try and correct this state of affairs.

I think Mr. Mitchell in his editorial, "The Light of Reason", (March 12) is guilty of employing the grossest kind of yellow journalism. By inventing facts and bending truths he is using the pages of the MDC to propagandize his own brand of sexist bigotry in the name of liberalism and law-and-order.

Quite obviously Mr. Mitchell wasn't on the scene. The New York Times, The Boston Globe, and the Boston Herald Traveler all had articles on the occupation. None suggested that a major objective or need of the group was to "use this property as a drop-in center for lesbians", a distortion that Mr. Mitchell uses as the core of his editorial.

He does not mention that the 100 to 150 women who occupied the building at Harvard University did so in order to draw attention to the fact that the building was scheduled to be torn down and replaced by a high-rise complex for married students and faculty members when there is an appalling need for low-rent housing for the entire community.

He does not mention that while occupying the building the women utilized its space to set up free services to women such as child care, health referral, legal aid, and self-defense.

Mr. Mitchell has employed information about the presence of lesbians to misrepresent and cast aspersions upon the needs to which the women were dramatically bringing attention.

"Among other things" I am a woman and a lesbian. I do not need Mr. Mitchell's sympathy. I don't care if he regards my "sexual activities as normal or not." I haven't the faintest idea what "real harm" I can cause society. I didn't know I was in the "gutter." Of all these things alluded to and implied by Mr. Mitchell, none happens to be relevant to the cause he believes those women at Harvard are espousing.

His concern that those women might "bemuddle their cause" (a cause he has entirely misinterpreted and misrepresented) "even further by getting on the wrong side of the law", might be thought of as touching by some. I see it as the basest hypocrasy to which a human being can stoop. If the "light of reason" he talks about ever comes, it will be in spite of, not because of, his actions.

In the guise of protesting illegal seizures of buildings, in the rhetoric of the liberal, Jim Mitchell has given voice to his own unenlightened views of the Women's Liberation movement in general and lesbianism in particular by convening a grossly inaccurate impression of what the purposes of the action were.

Mr. Mitchell, I hope your readers are better read than you appear to be.

All In Your Mind

To the Editor:

"If I hear another word about Sickle Cell Anemia, I'll go out of my mind." and "Out of all this redundancy, however, has come something almost worthwhile."

I use these quoted passages because they highlighted what would follow in your pathetic attempt at humor.

To consider the higher cost of licensing an unspayed female bitch as more important than an illness that affects thousands of human beings, is really too much. Or is it unimportant because this disease affects only Black people?

To my knowledge, there have been exactly two appeals for funds in the 2 1/2 years I have been on this campus. Both were in last week's Collegian.

If these two are driving you out of your mind, I suggest a daily printed solicitation in the same media to help matters along. It shouldn't take too long and the fund might receive the support it needs as a very worthy cause.

The sickness of your article only reflects the sickness of your mind and american society as a whole.

Mary Ellen Bias

Up Yours

To The Editor:

You go down to Mike's looking for something better to do and find dixie-cup smiles, drowned superegos, and turdular conversation. Just what a guy needs when searching for company-an empty room filled with people. All you want is to talk with someone a bit, gain a little recognition of your existence, possibly talk of the senselessness and laugh at it a little. Meanwhile, you get talked at, everyone listens to nobody, and you witness avoidance behavior. You've had enough...

So you go to the Drake. People are talking about those people who talk about other people who have their heads up their asses. The old "heads up their asses" conversation..ah yes. Six people with long hair and beards are discussing how people who go to Mike's have identity crises..Yup.

Now what do you do?

You'd go to the Pub-but they check ID's at the door.

You'd get stoned-but you already are.

You'd scream-but you're not certain anyone will hear you.

So you go home...and stick your head up your ass.

Mark Brenner

Letters to the Editor must be typed, double spaced, at sixty spaces and must carry the writer's signature, address, and telephone number (all of which will be withheld upon request). The limit is one page and the deadline is 5 p.m. the day prior to intended publication. The editors reserve the right to edit all letters.

The same rules apply to Editorial Points except that the limit of these is 25 words. No prizes will be awarded or gifts given out. This is not a contest. It's simply a forum for those of you who don't feel that writing a whole letter or who don't know more than 25 words.

Little Red Wagon

To The Editor:

Regarding your "Strawberry Fields Forever" article of last Thursday, it seems that I may have vaguely recognized one of the persons you attempted to caricature--me.

Thus, to "un-misinform" the readers, and maybe even help YOU out a little too, allow me to make the following corrections:

1) I do not wear a Brillo pad on my head. Do you wear an upside-down bowl on yours?

2) Haven't heard of the new easy-permanent wave-kit for Afro-hair styles. But I HAVE heard of a permanent straight-kit to be applied to the entire head—it's called cement.

3) One does not "while away the hours"; one WILES away the hours.

Also, because you seem to be doing a rather incomplete job of following me around, let me add that:

4) We did not go to Hardees after last week's meeting---we went to the Hatch.

5) I don't have a red Firebird---it's a red Duster.

6) I don't have a Chicago cartridge or tape deck in my car. The only connection between Chicago and me is that you might find me interviewing and promoting them because of my job as campus promotion manager of Columbia Records.

Finally, you might reconsider and retract your accustion of "white pseudo-radical" if you joined us at the next meeting of ASA---this Wednesday nite at 7:30 in Room 162 of the Campus Center.

And, if you'd like to get your facts about me as straight as your hair, you might join me in the Hatch over coffee (or at Hardees, if you prefer) after the meeting.

You can even ride in my red Duster!

Harold Koltin

Exceptional Chick

To The Editor:

In response to the letter entitled "Women Are..." which appeared in yesterday's Collegian (March 15): the person who wrote that letter is obviously quite mistaken in the theory about "vogue" chicks and "hippie vogue" chicks.

I do not start out each morning in front of the mirror to make myself "presentable." I do not adjust myself to look "in style"--by your standards, "unruly and unkempt just enough." I do not "saunter along" as I walk across campus. I do attend classes, but that is what I'm here for, right? I do not make myself "seen" in the Hatch every other day. If I "eagerly anticipate the weekend," it is because I look forward to having a good time with my friends. I never "have to endure the horror of a local Friday night party to obtain a Saturday night date." I guess I am an "exception to your rule." I know and see a lot of girls who are exceptions to your "rule." It is people like you who make the local Friday night party a horror. You fail to impress me when you classify your "stranger" as a "freak," and to make an impression seems to be the only reason why you mentioned it. If the kind of girls you mentioned are the only kind of girls you know and see, then it is your fault. And I'm not sorry for you at all, because you must not be a very desirable person to know. Is that why you had your name withheld?

Future University Testimony

You're Too Late

(Editor's Note-Sidney Finehirsh, longtime local anti-war activist, testified before the Future University Committee last Friday afternoon. The following are excerpts from Mr. Finehirsh's comments to the committee.)

Ladies and Gentlemen of the President's Committee on the Future of the University:

You have a most Herculean task in front of you: to study and report the whole future of the University.

But gentlemen and ladies of the committee, I must admit to you that I think you've arrived too late. You see, the future has been here and left. Of course it's expected back, for it obviously would not be that future if it wasn't expected back. What I mean ladies and gentlemen of the committee, is that during May of the Spring semester 1970, we here at the University lived the future. The May Student Strike is the future.

Perhaps you thought the student strike was past. Well it occasionally happens in history that for a short period of time the future will reveal itself early. Too early, however, for it to take root so that it dies out in order that it may reflower when conditions are more fertile.

One hundred years ago this month the working people of Paris established the most democratic government the world has ever seen. That government lasted a bare three months but gave a glimpse of a future revolutionary Petrograd thirty-eight years later. But even in Petrograd conditons weren't entirely fertile so the future wilted waiting to be given new life in Gdansk in 1970 and waiting to be given roots in the United States itself..

But I'm straying from the topic (but not straying very far) which is the future of the University. The future is the Strike. What was the Strike? The strike was the radical restructuring of the University from a war university to an anti-war university.

The war university is where young people are trained to become replaceable parts in the War economy; the giant corporations of the Military-Industrial Complex. The War university is where competition for grades, honor, and diplomas creates the conditions of a war of each against all.

The antiwar University was and will be where the university becomes a staging area to organize against the illegal, immoral invasion of Southeast Asia by the United States government. The antiwar University was and will be where students cooperate with each other and with faculty to learn what was relevant and germaine to them. The antiwar University was the will be where military-indust-rial recruitment and military training stops and police are disarmed or barred. The antiwar University was and will be where research is done for the economy of life.

I realize, gentlemen and ladies of the committee, that in many minds I raise the spectre of "politicized university." The truth is that the university is presently politicized and has always been politicized. In the words of Karl Marx we "have not invented the intervention of society in education," we "do but seek to alter the character of that intervention."

The antiwar University of last May is the future of the University. However, the future has more to offer than just an antiwar University. After all, imperialist war is only one part of the American reality which is enlisting the opposition of America's youth.

America is a racist society which breeds racism by the way it forces its people to compete for everything basic to life, when in fact those things basic to life could be produced in such abundance by the use of America's vast technological know-how that they could be supplied free. America prefers to use its technological know-how however, to kill Asian peasants.

The future of the university also holds continued and increasingly greater support for working people when they react to protect a decent standard of living through strike action.

In short, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, the future of the university is red--red because that is the color of sacrifice--sacrifice in blood and tears by the people who have always been called upon to make all the sacrifices:--the working people--who are forced to sacrifice whether the sacrifices are in their interests or not.

The red university will be an institution which fights in support of working people, GI people, Black people, Brown people, Yellow people, women people, homosexual people. In the process of that fight the University will become a truly educational institution and a truly democratic institution.

Thank you.

Draft Counselor's Corner

II-S May Be Abolished

By GILBERT J. SALK
MDC Staff

This column is basically a call to arms. If you are not particularly interested in changes in draft law, or if you don't believe that it is possible to have any effect on legislative processes, don't bother reading any further. But, if you are concerned about laws which may affect your life and will certainly affect the lives of your brothers, read and heed.

Last January, Richard Nixon requested that Congress give him a two-year extension of his power to conscript American youth into involuntary servitude. On the same day, Senators Stennis and Smith introduced Senate bill S.427, allowing him to draft until July 1, 1973. The bill also makes several important changes in Selective Service law.

If the bill passes, Nixon will abolish II-S deferments for undergraduates, except for those who were in school before April 23, 1970. This means that no new freshmen would receive student deferments, and that all of this year's freshmen would lose the deferments they now have.

The bill would also abolish the I-S (C) deferment which cancels an induction order for students currently enrolled until the end of the academic year. This would be replaced by a postponement of induction only until the end of the semester. Another essential difference between the old and new procedures is that the I-S (C) restored full appeal rights to the registrant. the new procedure, being only a postponement of induction, does not grant any right of appeal.

S.427 would also abolish the IV-D deferment for divinity students unless they were enrolled in seminary prior to Jan. 28, 1971. The exemption for practicing ministers would remain in effect, however. The bill would also make some favorable changes for aliens, as it would liberalize requirements for their deferment.

The statute of limitations for failure to register would be extended. Currently, a non-registrant is no longer liable to prosecution after he is 23 years and 5 days old. If S.427 passes, he could be prosecuted until he is 31 years old. This adds 8 years to the period of time he will have to avoid arrest.

In substance, then, this bill is generally a severely repressive measure, limiting the number of legal alternatives to the draft and increasing the likelihood of prosecution for failure to comply with the regulations. Thus, the draft will be even more coercive than it already is.

I strongly urge that you help fight this action. Write to your Representative and both Congressmen. Tell them that you oppose S.427, the continuation of the draft for any period of time, the ending of undergraduate and divinity student deferments, and the extension of the statute of limitations for failure to register. But also mention that you favor the relaxing of deferment requirements for aliens. Then write to your friends and tell them to do the same thing, and to put word of the changes in their local and/or campus papers. I don't know if this can be stopped or not, but I am sure that it will pass if we remain silent. It's up to you. PEACE

Vacation's Coming, Nassau Braces

The Ministry of Tourism in Nassau in the Bahamas has issued a summary of Bahamian regulations and laws, which apply throughout the Islands to citizens, residents and guests alike.

They ask that students who may be planning a visit to the Bahamas during this year's Spring-Easter recess please note the following:

—ANY POSSESSION of marijuana or other dangerous drugs, even without their use, is illegal and is punishable by up to one year in prison and/or a $1,000 fine. This law is strictly enforced.

—SLEEPING on the beaches at night is strictly prohibited.

—FIREARMS, even those registered in the United States or other countries, may not be brought into the Bahamas. The legal penalty for possession of firearms is up to two years imprisonment and/or a $500 fine.

—THERE is a $3 departure tax on all persons leaving the Islands.

—SPEARFISHING with guns is illegal. So is spearfishing with SCUBA gear. Only Hawaiian slings or pole spears may be used, and only with mask and snorkel.

—BECAUSE it is difficult to cash personal checks in the Bahamas, we suggest that you carry Travellers' checks when you visit the Islands.

—SHOULD you need information or assistance contact the Ministry of Tourism (telephone 23610), the Bahamas Police (telephone 24444, 23333), or the American Consul General (telephone 21181, after hours 23040).

Hollow Cactus

By ED JANUSZ
MDC Staff

One Way...or Another--Cactus (Atco)

What can you say? Loud guitar, leadfoot "heavy" rhythm, and total want of anything you haven't heard before from a group that includes two former Vanila Fudgers. The best thing about Cactus is that, for what they do, they are really a good band. The worst thing is that this type of music is just worn out by now; they apparently try to cover this up with a back-to-our-roots boogie and a set of strident and appallingly simple-minded lyrics.

The Hawk--Ronnie Hawkins (Cotillion)

Ronnie Hawkins is famous because the Band was his back-up group several years ago. He's pretty good on his own, too, on this ungimmicky rockabilly-style record. Most of the songs are famous old standards, divided about evenly between old rockers like "Lonely Weekend" and "Wine" and some softer ballads on which he's surprisingly successful (notably Tim Hardin's "Lady Came from Baltimore").

Bad Rice--Ron Nagle (Warner Brothers)

This record mixes up various trends in the field between country and rock. Some of the impact of the best songs is lost in the hodge-podge nature of the first side especially. But there is a lot of really fine music here, and Nagle as a singer is compelling, and he can handle just about everything he tries on here. This will be one of the finest unknown records of recent months.

Long Player--Faces (Warner Brothers)

Faces has gotten more versatile since their last record. There is more attention to harmonies and to the lighter acoustic parts, and Ron Wood is still digging into many different styles on guitar. Rod Stewart can still outsing almost everybody around, heading up a very tight band.

Ohio Knox (Reprise)

This is an eminently pleasant album. Ohio Knox plays good-time music, coming on like a bunch of dudes from the country, but they're really no great shakes as a band and there is little power to these performances. Maybe there shouldn't be with this type of music, but there really isn't much to recommend this lukewarm set.

Mack The Knife Is Back In Town

"Three Penny Opera", by Bertolt Brecht and Kurt Weill will be the spring production of the UMass Music Theatre. Performance dates are Wednesday through Saturday evenings, March 31 through April 3 at 8:15 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

"Three Penny Opera", first produced in Berlin in 1925, is a musical version of the exploits of the legendary villain, Mack the Knife. The action of the play centers around the low-life characters that inhabited London in the 1920's. Though "Three Penny Opera" was an international success for many years, it was not until 1954, when it enjoyed a long run in New York, that American audiences were introduced to the classic collaboration of Brecht and Weill. Since then, "Three Penny Opera" has been a favorite of theatre-goers throughout the United States, as well as being a staple throughout the world.

Reserved tickets for the four performances of "Three Penny Opera" go on sale on Monday, March 15th at the Fine Arts Council office, 125 Herter Hall. Reserved tickets are priced at $1.00 for UMass undergraduates and $1.15 FOR ALL OTHERS. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium Box Office one hour before each performance.

Summer School.

For those of you who don't want to give up one for the other.

Summer Sessions at the University of California offer college students and teachers a choice of courses for credit as wide as most colleges offer during the regular semester.

Each campus has the facilities and environment to which the most academic-minded student can relate.

There are 2 six week sessions at Berkeley, U.C.L.A. and Davis. And sessions of various lengths at Irvine, Riverside, San Diego, Santa Barbara, and Santa Cruz.

All of them start in mid-June, fees for each ranging from $125 to $160.

For an application and a bulletin on one or more campuses, just fill out this coupon and mail it to:

U.S. Gov't Source Of Many Jobs

The Student Senate Services Committee, working through the Placement Office, wants to inform students of the kinds of jobs available in the Federal Service. Administrative assistants usually would work in two or more of the following fields: budget and fiscal, personnel, management analysis, organization, supply and record-keeping. Budgets specialists work with the financial resources of an agency.

Federal Service can encompass almost any major from this university and provide him with work relevant to his interests. These have been just a few examples of available positions. The examination to qualify for Federal Service is given in Thompson Hall on March 20 at 8:30 a.m. For further information see the Federal Career Directory in the Placement Office Room 239 Whitmore.

UM Ruggers Open Slate, Jaunt at WOPE Today

Next week marks the opening of the spring Rugby season as UMass ruggers leave the snow-covered hills in Amherst to travel and play in Virginia. The Rugby Football Club faces experienced opposition against Washington and Lee, University of Virginia, and Old Dominion College.

The season opens in Lexington, Va., on Monday, a second game is played on Wednesday, and the trip closes out at Old Dominion in Norfolk on Thursday.

The New England season is slated to start on Sunday, April 4, when the UMass JV's take on the Hartford Wanderers at home. This spring's version of the Redmen ruggers does include a few veterans, such as Jack Long and Steve Wyeth, but many new names will appear in reports of games to be played this spring. Some like Hill Kesgen and Craig Lovell will be familiar to Redman sports fans, but many others will make their mark during the season.

Rugby at UMass is a club sport, and is open to undergrads, grad students, faculty, and staff. The club welcomes newcomers. Practice this week will be held on Tuesday and Thursday evenings at 9:00 p.m. in Curry Hicks Cage. Information about rugby can be had by calling 5-0245 (Bob Lawrence) or 549-0629 (Jim Tkacik).

The UMass girl's track club is sponsoring a two-mile open road race for all male and female residents of the campus community and 5-college area tomorrow at 4:30 p.m. at the Women's Physical Education Building.

The race will begin in front of Wope and will proceed up past Dwight and Mary Lyons dorms past the Worcester Dining Commons and on to the Orchard Hill area.

From there the course swings down into the Central area highlighted by a relaxing sprint down Baker Hill. A quick pass through the Central area and the rest of the course is down hill to Wope.

Individual and team entries will be accepted up to post time. Two miles, a scenic route, a good way to keep in shape. Tomorrow, 4:30 at Wope.

REECE REACTS-Vermont's brilliant netminder Dave Reece displays his All-American talents as he turns aside one of the numerous scoring bids the Redmen unleashed in an awesome display of offensive power at Burlington. But the Catamount's cat-like quickness in the nets fabricated one of the most brilliant net-minding efforts ever in Division II play-off action,. Unfortunately, UMass was on the receiving end of Reece and a heartbreaking 2-1 loss. (MDC photo by Dan Kamal)

MSG-Buses

As announced last week, the Student Senate Transit Service will sponsor buses to the NIT at Madison Square Garden. With the announcement that the game will be played at 11:00 a.m. on Saturday, March 20, 1971, the departure times of each bus can be established.

AMHERST: Price $7.50 round trip; bus leaves the Springfield Bus Terminal, across from the Hotel Charles at 7:30 a.m.

Springfield: Price $7.00 round trip; bus leaves the Springfield Bus Terminal, across from the Hotel Charles at 7:30 a.m.

Worcester: Price $8.25 round trip; bus leaves the Worcester Bus Terminal at Seven Hills Plaza at 6:30 a.m.

Boston: Price $9.00 round trip; bus leaves Park Square Terminal at 6:00 a.m.

Each bus will display an orange sign with the number which appears on the bottom of your ticket. Tickets are on sale in room 114 of the Student Activities Office, Campus Center, Ask for Blanche.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

One of Jane Withers', legendary child star, biggest thrills was a birthday gift from President Franklin Roosevelt. It was a horoscope for Aries-born Jane, which the Chief Executive commissioned. According to Jane everything that was stated in the horoscope analysis came to pass.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Financial matters command attention. Gain co-operation from Cancer-born individual. Spotlight on investments, basic security. Take nothing for granted. Check leases, fine print.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Go slow. Avoid any tendency to base actions on impulse. Key is to study various possibilities. Older individual may be ill-informed. Do your own investigating. Base conclusions on facts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A feeling of being "locked in" is evident. You want to break loose. Tendency is to lash out in many directions. Wise course would be to time your moves; measure actions.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Avoid extravagance. Means don't overspend money or emotions. Hold something in reserve. Special message could resolve dilemma. Be receptive.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Dispute among older individuals could involve you. Strive to be peacemaker. Maintain neutral stance. Home situation is spotlighted. Diplomatic approach gets good results.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Hold off on short journeys. Steer clear of disputes with relatives. Check message. Be sure your meanings are correctly interpreded. Gossipy neighbor is a menace.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Mate, partner could apply financial pressure. You are able to successfully utilize past experience. Allies come to your aid. Express confidence. You possess hidden assets. Act accordingly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Task you have neglected could haunt. Get facts together; synthesize information. Complete assignment. Mate or partner now requires special attention. Check legal aspects.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be daring enough to take new step. Set pace; shake off lethargy. Some fears are not founded on fact. Know this and express genuine needs, feelings. A timid friend is misguided.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Friends may try to involve you in dispute. Avoid being foolish in this area. Be co-operative, not aggressive. Share knowledge. Be wary of making promises which are difficult to fulfill.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Seek alternative methods. Highlight versatility. Don't feel you are confined to one area. Those who oppose you can be won over with humor. Avoid trying to force any issue.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You may find that communications are garbled. Check messages, directions, reservations. Not wise to take persons, situations for granted. Apparent minor matter could be irritant.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY new starts are featured. You get greater opportunity to show off unique abilities. You will, this year, make your own imprint. July should be most significant month. Let go of past; aim toward goals in future. One who was a friend becomes much more- be ready for adventure, love.

Redmen Draw No. Carolina

Tar Heels Rated Tops In Tourney

New York-UMass will face 12th-ranked No. Carolina in the opening game of the N.I.T. Saturday at 11 a.m. It's the second straight year that the Redmen have to face the top-ranked team in the tourney.

Final selection of No. Carolina, Louisville, Purdue and Duke, in that order, to fill the 16-team tourney, and the pairings, were announced by the N.I.T. committee at a press luncheon at Madison Square Garden Penn Plaza Club Monday noon.

UMass coach Jack Leaman attended the luncheon along with Asst. Sports Information Director Dick Bresciani, Jim Regan of the Springfield Daily News and Jerry Radding of the Springfield Union.

Other coaches attending were Dave Gavitt, Providence, Paul Westhead, LaSalle, Roy Danforth, Syracuse, and Frank Mulzoff, St. John's. Tom Ferrick, Dayton Athletic Director represented the Flyers.

Phone hookups were held with John Orr of Michigan, ex-UMass coach 1963-66, Ray Mears, Tennessee, Whack Hyder, Georgia Tech, Red Rocha, Hawaii, and George King, Purdue.

No. Carolian, 22-6, was regular season champ of the Atlantic Coast Conference but lost the league playoffs to So. Carolina Saturday for the right to compete in the N.C.A.A.

Jr. forward Dennis Wuycik, 6'5, who played with Julius Erving on the Olympic Development team last summer, paces No. Carolina with an 18.7 average and a 63% field goal mark.

Other Saturday pairings have P.C., 19-7, and Lousville, 20-8, at 1 p.m., Dayton, 18-8, and Duke, 18-8, at 3 p.m., Tennessee, 20-6, and St. John's, 18-8, at 7 p.m. and Georgia Tech, 20-8, and LaSalle, 20-6, at 9 p.m.

Sunday Syracuse, 19-6, meets Michigan, 19-6, in a 1 p.m. Television game, followed by St. Bonaventure, 18-6, and Purdue, 18-6, Hawaii, 22-4, and Oklahoma, 19-7, complete the first-round play Monday at 5 p.m. followed by quarterfinal games at 7 and 9 o'clock.

Quarterfinals will conclude with two games Wednesday and the semifinals will be played Thursday. The championship game will be at 1 p.m. Saturday with the consolation game at 11 a.m.

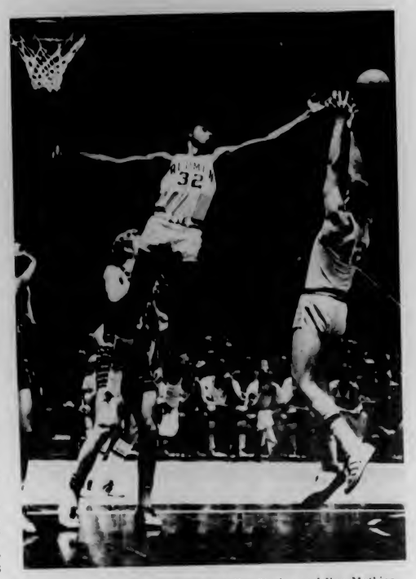
Ben Carnevale of New York U., president of the Metropolitan Intercollegiate Basketball Association which runs the tourney, said that Duke and Prudue were selected as independents among a final pool of 12 teams. Kentucky state, winner of the NAIA for the second straight year, was among those not chosen. He said top consideration in the pairings went to the A.C.C. and the Southeastern Conference in one bracket and LaSalle, the Big 10 and St. Bonaventure in the other bracket.

The coaches were asked to speak for their teams. Coach Leaman said, "It's a pleasure to come back to the N.I.T. and New York. We're a better team than most people give us credit for and are looking forward to the tourney."

Johnny Orr of Michigan, "It's a great honor for us. We're a young team led by sophs Henry Wilmore, 6'4, and Ken Brady, 6'9. We lost our first three games to Notre Dame, Kentucky and Duke but then won 19 of the last 22."

Ray Mears of Tennessee, "Jimmy England is the most complete player in the S.E.C. and our quarterback. We've averaged just seven turnovers per game and soph Mike Edwards has been really playing well."

Paul Westhead of LaSalle, "Ken Durrett is healthy again after being sidelined with strained lateral ligaments in his right knee. Rich Yunkus against Durrett should be a great match."



Red Rocha of Hawaii, "We've got four J.C. transfers who start. We run and play a pressure defense. 6'8 Bob Nash of Hartford, Conn. and San Jacinto J.C. in Texas is one of our best players."

George King of Purdue, "We've won the last seven games and 6'3 Larry Weatherford has been averaging 21 points."

Tom Ferrick of Dayton, "This is our seventh straight year in a post-season tourney. Ken May, 6'6, is our top player averaging 20 points."

Frank Mulzoff of St. John's, "Mel Davis has been great and is shooting really good from outside. We're healthy and think we can hurt Tennessee's zone defense."

If the Redmen can win Saturday morning they will advance to a quarterfinal game Monday night against the winner of the Providence - Louisville game.

Leaman, Alaimo Cop District I Awards

Jack Leaman of UMass and Jerry Alaimo of Brown have been selected as co-coaches of the year by a vote of the National Association of Basketball Coaches in District One.

Leaman guided UMass to a 23-4 record, the Yankee Conference championship with a 10-0 mark, the Hall of Fame Christmas Tourney title and the school's second straight berth in the National Invitational Tournament at Madison Square Garden. Leaman's five-year record at UMass shows 83 wins and 42 losses, including a 42-8 Conference mark.

Alaimo led Brown to a 10-16 record, the school's most wins since 1966-67 and the Gem City championship during Christmas vacation. Brown finished fifth in the Ivy League, beat Yale twice for the first time since 1910-11 and broke the school record for most points scored in one season.

Leaman and Alaimo will be honored along with the coaches of the other seven National Districts, at the National Coaches Convention in Houston, March 24 to 27.

Matmen Dominate NE Regionals; Wait For Upcoming Nationals

In what was billed as the New England Regional qualifications for the NCAA Wrestling tournament but turned out more like a dual meet as the UMass wrestlers qualified in seven weight classes for the National tourney later in the month at Auburn University.

The Redmen sent seven wrestlers to Harvard for the tourney and all seven came through, winning three weight classes and finishing second in four others. The first two place winners in each class qualified for the NCAA tournament. Winning individual titles for UMass were Dave Amato at 118, Dave Reynolds at 126 and Sheldon Goldberg at 134. Both Amato and Goldberg were uncontested in their classes, while Reynolds defeated Brown's Serge Brunner for the title in a reversal of their match a week earlier in the New Englands, when Brunner beat Reynolds in the semi-finals.

Because there was no team title at stake and because the tourney was limited only to university division teams, there was a definite lack of competition. Less than forty wrestlers showed up, as schools only sent those wrestlers who would have a chance of going somewhere in the nationals. The tourney was scheduled to be held on Friday and Saturday, but only semi-finals and finals were necessary and the competition was over by Friday night.

The other Redmen to qualify were Clay Jester at 142, Tom Young at 167, George Zguris at 190 and heavyweight Carl Dambman. Both Young and Dambman had finished first in the New England championships held at Lowell Tech, while Zguris had finished second and Jester third.

Young lost a tough 12-10 decision to Steve Schuldt of Brown in the 167 lb. final. Brown's Frank Walsh got revenge for a loss to Dambman in the New Englands by defeating the UMass heavyweight 9-3. Zguris lost a close 11-10 decision to Harvard's Richie Starr, while Jester was pinned in the third period by Pat Coleman.

Other winners were Don Stahlman of UNH at 150, Mark Fowler of Harvard at 158 and Larry Woods of UNH at 167. UMass, with seven qualifiers, was way ahead of Brown with four and UNH and Harvard with three. Dartmouth was the only other team to be represented in the nationals with one second place finish.

Summary:
118-Dave Amato (UMass) uncontested
126-Dave Reynolds (UMass) def. Serge Brunner (Brown) 8-5
134-Sheldon Goldberg (UMass) uncontested
142-Pat Coleman (Harvard) pinned Clay Jester (UMass) 5:19
150-Don Stahlman (UNH) def. Steve Morelli (Dart.) 8-4
158-Mark Faller (Harvard) pinned Charles Baurer (UNH) 1:16
167-Steve Schuldt (Brown) def. Tom Young (UMass) 12-10
177-Larry Woods (UNH) def. Charles Edmundson (Brown) 11-2
190-Richie Starr (Harvard) def. George Zguris (UMass) 11-10
Unl-Frank Walsh (Brown) def. Carl Dambman (UMass) 9-3

Hearings Open On Tuition Hike; Wood Opposed

By MDC Staff

MONEY, MONEY, MONEY-Hearings opened in the State House yesterday on the proposed tuition hike. The Joint Committee on Education, above, heard Senate President Kevin Harrington blame trustees across the state and President Wood oppose any hike. (MDC photo by Ann Gurnett)

BOSTON-Senate President Kevin Harrington (D—Salem) opened the public hearings on tuition for state schools yesterday on Beacon Hill by endorsing "the general concept" of increased tuition, claiming that the trustees of State colleges and Universities had shirked responsibility over the last ten years.

"Once again," said Harrington, the co-sponsor of a bill which would up UMass tuition by about $1000, "the buck has stopped at the legislature."

UMass President Robert C. Wood, speaking in opposition before the Joint Committee on Education to each of the three bills pending to raise tuition, warned the committee members of the "severe money bind already faced by students at state Universities and colleges.

The state's greatest problem, testified Wood, "is how to keep in school and find financial support for students for whom the present tuition and fees are already an almost insuperable obstacle."

The three bills under consideration are: Senate Bill 454 which would establish minimum tuition fees of six hundred dollars, House bill 2590 which would raise tuition and provide for the sharing of educational costs through loans and House bill 2594 that proposes tuition be determined by ability to pay.

Informed University sources claim that enough members of Education Committee appear to be leaning against the tuition hike proposals to "keep the bills from getting out of committee." The source did not rule out the possibility, however, of a bill coming up for consideration on the floor of the legislature itself.

Harrington said that much more attention should be drawn to supplement the state scholarship fund to help assist "enterprising young people obtain the education they desire". He suggested, this could be done by using the bulk of revenue derived from the tuition increase to supplement the scholarship fund.

Speaker of the House David Bartley, (D—Holyoke) commented that the Board of Trustees of various state institutions have been "ducking their legal responsibility" by asking the Legislature for higher tuition laws. He recorded himself as being "firmly opposed" to the proposed increase.

In reference to scholarship aid President Wood said "that this aid never materializes, or if it does, it never catches up with the need created by the new tuition—let alone the need that already exists."

Wood called for an "exploration" which would find ways "we can broaden the educational opportunity and help bring national resources to assure the preservation of private colleges and universities." If this is done, he concluded, appropriate tuition rates would occur.

Student Senate President Glenn Elters spoke for "the more than 14,300 undergraduate students" at UMass in opposing any tuition hike. He asked the legislators to oppose a tuition increase "on the grounds that it is a "regressive tax" which "would place an increasingly undue burden on students who generally are not well off financially."

"Tuition cannot, and indeed should not, be viewed as merely another method by which the Commonwealth can raise funds for the general treasury," Elters said.

He pointed to the report of Grabowski Associates, commissioned and published by the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education, which stated that "many students of the Commonwealth system of public education could not afford any tuition increase."

The Committee, chaired by Senator Mary Fonseca was to go into Executive Session to decide whether or not to pass the bills on to further legislative action.

New Fashions, Wares Shown in Bridal Fair

By LISA CHERNICK
MDC Staff

The Fifth Annual UMass Bridal Fair was held yesterday in the Campus Center Auditorium from 1 to 10.

Prospective brides, and not so prospective brides, were able to look over the product displays of local merchants and the silver, china, and crystal exhibits of national companies.

The highpoints of the day included the two fashion shows at 3:30 and 7:30, with UMass students modeling the latest wedding and trousseau apparrel. Dean William Tunis and Mrs. Tunis were featured in the fashion shows as father and mother of the bride, with Dean Tunis cheerfully bussing one of the brides before he sent her down the aisle.

Gamma Sigma Sigma, a woman's service sorority, was presented with a silver cube and silver coffee and tea service by Mr. Lou Maxim of Oneida Silversmiths at the evening fashion show. Gamma Sigma Sigma was this year's recipient of Oneida's Community Service Award in recognition of the outstanding civic and charitable achievements of college students.

Just before the beginning of the 7:30 fashion show a group of five people walked on the stage to announce a short guerilla theater. A mock bride and groom, minister, and flower girl were present. A spokesman for these people took the microphone to explain that they believed the Bridal Fair was a perpetuation of the sexist, stereotyped roles of our society and that the merchants present at the Fair were merely exploiting these roles for profit.

Agnes Kilka, chairman of the Bridal Fair and a student at UMass, took the microphone to explain that the purpose of the Bridal Fair was not to "dominate of liberate" but merely to put on a show.

Doorprizes were given away in the evening, as well as a one-week honeymoon in the Poconos.

Peoples' Peace Treaty Gains National Attention

The Peoples' Peace Treaty, a treaty of peace between the American and Vietnamese peoples, is gaining attention both nationwide and locally in the Springfield area and at UMass.

Nationwide interest in the anti-war movement, and in particular the people's Peace Treaty, has been increasing. Many notables, including about a dozen Congressmen and Congresswomen, have signed; also former Senators Charles Goodell and Eugene McCarthy. Student governments across the country have endorsed it. At conservative Florida State University, a student body referendum ratified the treaty by a vote of 5600 to 400.

In Springfield, some 400 people met in a church Sunday to ratify the treaty and begin circulating it. A Quaker from the American Friends Service Committee gave a report of the findings of 179 members of the pacifist group and of Clergy and Laymen concerned about Vietnam. They had traveled to Paris where they spoke with the negotiating teams about the prospects for peace. Almost unanimously the Paris group endorsed the Peoples' Peace Treaty.

During the Springfield meeting a priest expressed his feelings that although the treaty signing was good, he felt an urgent need to see the movement back in the streets to make itself better heard. He got a standing ovation.

The response at UMass has also been good. At last week's meeting about 30 people showed up to begin work on the treaty.

The Treaty has gained strength from its ability to draw liberals and radicals of various ideologies into a broad coalition to wage mass action for the common good.

In order to sustain interest in the treaty, and to prepare for immediate action after vacation, there will be a meeting at 9 p.m. tonight in room 811-815, Campus Center. Anyone interested but unable to attend is urged to call 546-5201 and leave their name and number.

Labor Antiwar Role SMC Lecturer's Topic

Carl Chiaretto, antiwar activist and member of I.U.E. Local #255 in Pittsfield, will speak at tonight's Student Mobilization Committee meeting in room 817 of the Campus Center at 8:00. He will discuss the role of labor in the antiwar movement.

A longtime activist, Chiaretto spoke last April 15 at the antiwar Moratorium. So successful was his appearance there that he was invited to return during the Strike in May. Speaking before some four thousand students on the Amherst Commons, Chiaretto expressed solidarity with the striking students, forseeing a coalition of students and labor "that will end this war."

Since then Chiaretto has remained active in the antiwar movement.

As a coordinator of the Connecticut Valley Antiwar Coalition (CONVAC), he has endorsed the antiwar demonstration called in Washington, D.C., on April 24. According to Chiaretto, "skyrocketing inflation and unemployment have brought this war home to the labor movement." The same construction workers who last spring attacked antiwar demonstrators in Manhattan, are this year opposed to the war in Southeast Asia because of war-related wage freezes, he said.

According to one SMC'er, "The antiwar demonstration called in Washington on April 24 has attracted labor support on an unprecedented scale. The Amalgamated Meatcutters of Boston, the United Auto Workers in Detroit, District 65 and 1199 in New York, the Teamsters in Los Angeles, have all lent active support to this demonstration. When labor decides to end this war, this war will end, they said.

Impact of UMass Growth on Amherst Is Women Voters' Subject March 30

"The Impact of the Growth of the University on the Town of Amherst" will be the subject of a general meeting open to the public on March 30 at 7:30 p.m. at the Amherst Regional Junior High School auditorium.

Amherst residents will have an opportunity to learn the State's plans and projections for higher education in the 70's as well as an opportunity to evaluate the aspirations of the town in order to understand the problems and goals of each

The League of Women Voters, sponsor of the meeting, hopes that there will be a large audience present to ask questions and join in the discussion with panel members

A recent study made by the Board of Higher Education forecast a shortage of 113,000 student spaces in higher education institutions in the state of Massachusetts.

It is possible that one of every five prospective students will be turned away through lack of space. With rising costs of private colleges plus the general economic squeeze, larger numbers of students may be looking for space in public institutions than originally estimated.

The present projection for the University is for 1000 more students added annually until about 25,000 students would be enrolled by 1975-76. By 1980 an increase in faculty to 2360, staff to 6750, as well as graduate students to 25% of the total student body--plus their families--will mean additional demands for town services and facilities to meet the increase in population.

The Amherst League has for some time been exploring local needs especially in the areas of housing, transportation, and environmental concerns.

The meeting on March 30 is an outgrowth of a series of workshops held last November called "Planning for Growth in Amherst."

The League is committed to the "development of quality higher education as well as to quality existence in the town of Amherst."

Great Decisions on WFCR Tonite

The University of Massachusetts Great Decisions program this week will focus on "Dissent, Public Opinion and Foreign Policy: How responsive is our system?" Radio WFCR (88.5 F.M.) will broadcast the program live from the Noah Webster House Lounge, tonight beginning at 7:30 p.m.

Moderator for the discussion is UMass Government Prof. Luther A. Allen. Panelists include Jan Dizard of the Amherst College sociology department; UMass faculty members David S. Wyman, history, and Edward E. Feit, government; and Thomas P. Jahnige of the Smith College government department.

The Wednesday evening sessions are sponsored by Apple Corps, a student organization from the Orchard Hill residence complex at the UMass Amherst campus. The public is invited to attend.

All-Volunteer Army Is Tentatively Dead

WASHINGTON (AP)—An all-volunteer Army bill was tentatively killed by the House Armed Services Committee Tuesday and a halt to student draft deferments was tentatively approved.

The committee voted also to extend the present draft for two years instead of four.

They were among the first votes taken as the committee began writing a 1971 draft bill and are tentative until a final vote on the completed bill, possibly late this week.

"We gave the Nixon administration everything they asked for," said Chairman F. Edward Hebert, D—La., said of the committee's action.

Peace Talks Topic On WMUA Viewpoint

Tonight at WMUA on "Viewpoint" from 6:30 to 7:00 PM Rudolph C. Praetz will be the guest. Mr. Praetz, from Springfield, was one of the 179 Americns who traveled to Paris last week to speak with the various delegations at the Paris Peace Talks. He spoke with them about what is needed for peace in Indo-China. Mr. Praetz, Chairman of the Springfield Bail Assistance Committee, and an outspoken critic of the war in Indo-China, will speak of his first hand experiences at the Peace Talks in Paris.

Dick Gregory Tells SRO Audience:

'Students Got A Big Job'

By JEFF THOMPSON
MDC Staff

"You students got a big job to use your power and stay as honest and ethical as you can," said Dick Gregory last night in the Student Union Ballroom to an audience of 2000.

Gregory, in a speech sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program, spoke about rightists in government administrations, the surgeon general, American inconsistencies, civil rights, and the "new niggers."

"Everything the rightists mess up, they don't want to look at, and make laws against it," said Gregory citing examples of poverty, black folks, Indians and male sex organs. "If I go out in 50 degree below zero weather with nothing but a pair of jockey shorts on, people just look and say I'm crazy; but if I go out with nothing on, I'm not crazy any more but get arrested for indecent exposure."

Gregory stated that senators must spend $2 million in campaigns to get a $50,000 job. He then questioned whether we really have a "nation under God" when the Indians who are harvesting our crops are starving.

"Last year a couple of congressmen drew up a list of radical speakers, but the Supreme Court declared it unconstitutional to publish. So these same congressmen, the law and order freaks, published it anyway," said Gregory.

"Since my name has been on the list for four months, I've received $100,000 more," he said.

Gregory examined our publishing priorities by saying that proof that coffee gives cancer of the stomach, and that nicotine destroys sex organs, is lying on the desk of the Surgeon General, but that it is not published because coffee and cigarette companies are too strong.

As proof for his claims, Gregory cited a law that forbids speakers to cross state lines to lie about a product. "If I an lying," he quipped, "I would have been busted eighteen months ago."

Gregory also asserted that in the national archives is proof that the CIA was involved in the death of John Kennedy, and that the material cannot be revealed for 100 years.

"Money is God," said Gregory. "If not, why are the churches locked up at night. Is 'in God we trust' written on our money or on the church?"

He said that had a German killed his father in WW II, Gregory would have gone 28 years without a father, and today that same German can come to the U.S. and move into a neighborhood that his father's boy couldn't move into.

"Everyone thinks niggers are crazy today and that they had sense a few years ago. Actually, they were crazy before but are smart today. White folks," he said, "can't understand us. We're only reacting to oppression. We won't try to stop the country from being racist as long as they realize we'll react."

He said that Angela Davis is in jail so that we could invite eleven white Russians "who don't give a damn about our system." He said that they wouldn't search the Russians walking into the courtroom but they'd search him every morning.

"Double barrel shotguns have been outlawed by the Geneva convention because they are inhumane. These guns couldn't be used in war but can be used on Black folks by the cops," Gregory said.

Gregory insisted that it is most insulting that the Constitution is used to protect white people, but to protect the Blacks there is an installment plan called the Civil Rights Bill.

He said that names we call white people are associated with places. Italian: Italy; German: Germany; Irishman: Ireland. But Negro? Slave crop raiser! At least with "Black" he said they could associate with night.

"Last night I learned that an invasion only occurs with ground troops," he said. "Any amount of air troops doesn't cause an invasion. What about the Japs in '41? We were so dumb and stupid we thought it was an invasion and declared war," he exclaimed.

He said that control of Black communities is very important to Blacks. At least with a black cop whuppin' him he wouldn't be called "Nigger".

"If you study America's history you're supposed to know where we've been, where we are, and where we are going. But if you knew history you'd understand our country. Look at our founding fathers who were a bunch of criminals the King and Queen took out of prison and put in a boat thinking they wouldn't arrive," he said.

Gregory said that in 1969 the Black people decided through Rap Brown and Stokely Carmichael that black is beautiful and that they wouldn't be the white man's niggers any more and that we had to start the '70's without a "nigger."

"We went through January, February, March and April without a 'nigger'. But on May 4, 1970 America found a new one: the students," Gregory said.

Now he said everyone is asking nigger questions about students such as "What's wrong with them"; "Who do they think they are"; "What do they want" and "They look so strange."

He concluded by saying that youngsters of today have the duty to write the history books about the Kent State tragedy. He likened it to the Boston Massacre in which two hundred years previously four people were killed by officers who no one believed would shoot. The people didn't want the officers around and a lot happened between 1770 and 1776. He said that between 1970 and 1976 we just might have the same degree of change.

Coolidge Lower Battles Lottery

By NANCY COSTA
MDC Staff

Last fall a program was developed which implemented a lottery to chose which dorm will be imposed upon in housing students who must remain at the University during vacation. Daniel Fitzpatrick, Associate dean of Students, said that they were having trouble finding space for these students. Coolidge lower was the first dorm chosen, and hopefully the last.

Because of their great opposition to this program, the residents of Coolidge lower suggested various alternatives to alleviate the present problem. In this policy guest students pay $2.50 a night to use the dorm. It was suggested that the Campus Center hotel be used to house students. However, the rate there is $16 a night and no way has been found to raise the additional money.

Their main goal, according to dorm president Nancy Zarrow, was to find permanent quarters other than dorms to be used in this situation. The present policy is felt to be greatly at fault by many. If Coolidge lower is open, the entire tower will also be opemed causing more security problems to arise.

Help from the Student Senate was requsted, but none has been received as yet. The Student Senate seems more concerned in supporting the administration, than in working for the students.

If Coolidge does win their fight, Emerson is next in line. The solution does not lie in transferring students from dorm to dorm. A new program must be initiated.

Academic Credit Proposed For Student Senators

By SUSAN WHITE
MDC Staff

Lee Sandwen, student senator, explained in an interview yesterday one of his recent proposals suggesting members of the Student Senate 'in good standing" be allowed three academic credits a semester from the Department of Government. The bill has passed through the Student Senate and is now in the hands of the Faculty Senate, the Chancellor, and the Government Department, he said.

Sandwen said that "all senators should be compensated in some way" for the amount of time they put in most of them work at least nine or ten hours a week, he explained" He feels that, were credit offered for this activity, more qualified people would run for the senate.

The bill itself states that the senate is "an educational experience in practical politics".

"And not only that," Sandwen added, "but a good lesson in dealing with the bureaucracy". He said that he hopes the passing of the bill will be a precedent for recognition of the many "relevant, educational experiences which don't take place in a classroom".

He stated that such experiences "deserve recognition from the University" and that "people should be made aware of them".

Poetry Reading Thursday

The next in a series of poetry readings sponsored by the M.F.A. Program in English will feature Giullianna Mutti and John Taylor. The reading will be held tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall Lounge.

After the featured reading an open reading will be held, and members of the University community are encouraged to bring their own poems to share with the audience.

Off-Campus Interns

On March 18 at 4:00 p.m., in Engineering East Auditorium, there will be an important meeting for all freshmen, sophomores, and juniors who anticipate an off-campus field experience some time in the future in either California, New Mexico, Arizona, Florida, Montreal, England, Scotland, Martha's Vineyard, or the Cape Cod area.

In The Nation And The World

Final Phase of Drive

S.Viets Pull Back In Laos

SAIGON (AP)-South Vietnamese troops moved eastward in Laos toward their own border Tuesday under mounting enemy pressure and the threat of more bad weather that has hampered U.S. air support.

South Vietnamese officers earlier had said this was the final phase of the drive that began Feb. 8 and cut across branches of the Ho Chi Minh trail to Sepone, a trail hub of Highway 9. Sepone, 25 miles inside Laos, was the deepest penetration.

It appeared that some heavy rear guard fighting was in store for the South Vietnamese before they finish their task of looking for and destroying North Vietnamese stores and returning to South Vietnam.

Field officers reported the 1st regiment of the 1st Infantry Division walked off Fire Base Lolo, nine miles southeast of Sepone. While Saigon denied this report, South Vietnamese and U.S. officers in the north said the regiment of 1,500 men walked out Monday night.

They said Lt. Gen. Hoang Xuan Lam, northern corps commander who directs the Laotian operation, had given the order to abandon Lolo and go to Landing Zone Brown, five miles to the east.

North Vietnamese gunners had opened up such heavy fire that U.S. helicopters could not supply Lolo. As one U.S. officer said: "It became an untenable position."

Six 105mm howitzers at the base were piked to make them useless to the North Vietnamese.

"It costs more to lose helicopters than to lose artillery guns," one U.S. officer said.

At Landing Zone Brown, the 1st regiment is 14 miles from there and three miles south of Highway 9, the main route for the incursion into Laos.

There the regiment is close to the 2nd and 3rd regiments of the 1st Division. The latter two are at Fire Support Base Delta 1, which is 12 miles from the border and four miles south of Highway 9.

From these positions the division is supposed to sweep south to Highway 914, a major eastwest road of the Ho Chi Minh trail, before returning to South Vietnam. But enemy pressure may change these plans somewhat.

Unfavorable weather, particularly early morning fog, hampered air activity. U.S. helicopters managed to get in nearly 800 sorties Monday. The number of sorties-one flight by one aircraft-have run as high as 1,200 to 1,300 on some days.

In its latest cumulative summary on the Laos drive, South Vietnamese headquarters said 8,914 enemy had been killed as of 6 p.m. Monday, and 159 had been taken prisoner. Government losses for the period were listed as 784 men killed, 2,950 wounded and 193 missing.

The command in the north said that activity in Laos consisted mainly of finding enemy bodies and damaged supplies resulting from earlier air strikes.

Little ground action was reported in Cambodia, where South Vietnamese forces continued a second operation against enemy supply lines. The U.S. Command said nearly 300 helicopter sorties were flown Monday in support of the Cambodian operation. There also were 90 tactical fighter-bomber strikes.

The pattern of fighting in South Vietnam itself continued as it has for several days with isolated but sometimes sharp skirmishes reported, most of them in the Mekong Delta region.

Laird Says Nixon Administration Committed To Increase Withdrawal

WASHINGTON (AP)—Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird said Tuesday the Nixon administration is committed to withdrawing an average of 12,500 troops a month from Vietnam, and indicated less than 50,000 would remain by the end of 1972.

"The President has told the American public that we will continue on that average rate, and the average rate is 3,000 weekly, or 12,500 a month," Laird said.

"We will continue at the present rate" and possibly increase it substantially later this year depending on the success of the U.S.—backed South Vietnamese drive in Laos, he said during an interview on CBS News.

Defense Department officials said they saw no inconsistency between Laird's forecast and a statement by Secretary of State William P. Rogers at a news conference later in the day that he doubt that President Nixon "has decided either on the level of withdrawals or the residual force."

Laird, these officials insisted, is aiming at less than 50,000 by the end of 1972.

"The training of the South Vietnamese is geared to this, and that's what we're going to do," they said.

In the interview, Laird agreed with the questioner's mathematics that the 12,500 average monthly rate he cited would leave fewer than 50,000 GIs in Vietnam by the end of next year. This, the defense secretary said, would be "in accordance with the president's time schedule."

At that rate, 184,000 troops would be left in Vietnam by the end of this year and about 34,000 by the end of next year. Troop withdrawals have averaged about 12,500 monthly since the pullouts began in June 1969.

Nixon has said he will announce in Mid-April a troop pullout as fast or faster in a withdrawal order expected to span several months. The current timetable calls for 284,000 GIs to remain in South Vietnam as long as Hanoi held American prisoners.

Rogers, although he did not say how large this force might be, said it should be "more than symbolic" to "make it clear to the North Vietnamese that we are very serious about the prisoners of war."

Embassy Officials Aid Russian Citizen After Police Attack

MOSCOW (AP) - U.S. Embassy employes rescued Tuesday a Russian doctor after Societ police had intruded on embassy grounds and seized his wife and two daughters. The embassy filed a vigorous protest. The doctor said he was seeking emigration information.

Guards tried to take the doctor, Vastily Nikitenkov, 43, but he locked his arms around an iron gate at the embassy entrance and shouted: "Help me! Help me!"

A dozen embassy employes rushed out, and prevented the police from taking the doctor into custody by swinging the iron gates shut.

His documents showed Nikitenkov is a non-Jewish Russian. An embassy spokesman said he told them he was from Klin, 72 miles northwest of Moscow and wanted to emigrate because he was dissatisfied with life in the Societ Union.

When Nikitenkov and his family approached the embassy Soviet guards tried to stop them. They pushed past and got to the embassy grounds with guards in pursuit.

The guards in a tussle tore the coat off the doctor's wife, pulled her and her two daughters, 5 and 9, out to the sidewalk and took them away.

Thompson R. Buchanan, the embassy's political counsellor, delivered a strong protest against police "violation of embassy territory."

Nikitenkov stayed in the embassy for 4 1/2 hours while the protest was being delivered to the Foreign Ministry. He told the embassy his wife was a psychiatrist-neurologist.

He asked for information on emigration. The procedure was explained to him and he was given a written invitation to return to the embassy later. Soviet guards usually honor such invitations.

When he left, Nikitenkov was given his wife's torn coat, picked up by an embassy employee.

A spokesman said he had no idea how many policemen had taken part in the incident. Ordinarily, three policemen guard the embassy but they had been reinforced.

On the question of Jewish emigration, reliable Soviet sources said the Kremlin has radically changed its policy and about 15 Jews are receiving exit visas daily.

However, in a rare response to foreign newsmen's questions, an official of the emigration and passport administration put the number of exit visas daily at 10.

The sources reported 150 Jews have left the Soviet Union within the past 10 days and that the decision went into effect "about 10 days ago." Informed diplomatic sources said the previous Jewish emigration figure was two or three daily.

A member of Moscow's Jewish community said neither he not his friends had heard of any official decision on Jewish emigration.

U.S. Ends Restrictions On Red China Travel

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United States Monday dropped its last restriction on travel by Americans to Communist China. The action was in line with President Nixon's pledge to remove "needless obstacles" to broader contacts between the Chinese and American peoples.

Restrictions continue in effect against travel to North Vietnam, North Korea and Cuba.

A State Department spokesman said there is little expectation that ending the 20-year-old travel ban would result in any spurt of travel immediately to the Chinese mainland. Peking has granted visas to only three of the 1,000 Americans whose sports have been validated for travel to that country, including 270 whose travel was approved in the past year.

It is widely expected that a current review of U.S. — China policy will also lead to an easing of the trade embargo which likewise has been in effect since 1950 when Communist China sent its volunteers into the Korean war.

HEADLINE HIT PARADE...this collection appearing in the campus press tells it like it may be...

SCHOLASTIC of Notre Dame depicted a face smoking up a storm, over the line, "better living through chemistry."

And Prexy R.M. Nixon has been getting it in the campus press, too, with editorial commentary from the nation's mini-journalists. The UCal-Riverside HIGHLANDER has urged, "Impeach Nixon"; while the DAILY EVERGREEN of Washington State opines, "Nixon 'laosed' up."

Meanwhile, THE DAILY TEXAN of UTexas carried recently a copyrighted essay on "The public's right to 'No'."

* * * *

SCHOOL OF ED, where are you?...the DAILY REPORTER of Mankato (Minn) State fired up the English faculty with this misspelled headline: "Student teacing offers new learning experience."

A NEW TWIST to mailing letters to the editor has been reported by the OKLAHOMA DAILY, which received one written on a brick tile heaved at its office window.

The window was closed, naturally.

Engraved on the title was a protest against a controversial cartoon character. It read: "Negroes are loving, docile and kind. Heaven help us if they change their minds."

The tile shattered without breaking the glass.

Which proves that window glass is better than it used to be.

FROM HOME BASE comes this intelligence, reported in the minutes of the Feb. 8 session of the UMass Faculty Senate.

"Professor Olin, although he was not sure his concern would come within the purview of the (library) committee, wished to express his dismay at the lack of courtesy displayed by some students working in the library and even by some librarians.

"Professor Clay indicated that he would be happy to know of any such occurrences..."

TWO OF A MIND is what a survey about coed dorms revealed at Louisiana State, last month. In a DAILY REVEILLE story, Steve Smith revealed that "An overwhelming number of men students (99 per cent) are in favor of coed housing..." In a similar poll of women, 89 per cent said they were in favor.

And when it came to committing themselves as to whether they would actually live in such a dorm, 88 per cent of the men replied yea; 67 per cent of the women were of a like mind.

MONEY FOR EVERYONE...A cash register in the Oregon State Student Union is open with the signed invitation: "Our money, take what you need -- give what you can."

Since 10 students pooled $15 in change for the initial kitty, the register has contained from a few pennies to a $20 bill (which didn't last long.)

The moral? It happened.

MEANTIME, a new kind of generosity was volunteered by students for the faculty of the City University of New York.

The Student Senate there called on faculty and administrative staff to give up $25 million in negotiated salary increases for the coming fiscal year.

The student proposal charged that "the majority of this faculty" was mediocre and not worth the present pay.

Which is the direct approach, for sure.

"WHEN APATHY REIGNS, IT POURS" is the headline the DAILY ALESTLE of Southern Illinois U. put on a recent editorial discussing reaction to a proposed tuition increase.

Of 12,521 students on the campus, the paper said, only "30 people cared enough to send their very best" letters to their state legislators.

FOOD SERVICE GETS IT AGAIN...a letter to the editor of the Texas Tech UNIVERSITY DAILY proposes the award of The Fickle Finger of Fate to the dieticians on that campus.

"They hit upon a winning menu about two decades ago. They decided to stick with a good thing so they have continued with this menu..and continued...and continued...and continued...and continued..."

ANOTHER AWARD, for "undistinguished service", this time, has been proposed by the UWisconsin OSHKOSH ADVANCE—TITAN to "the University's crack snow removal crew, the men from Buildings and Grounds... for greatest persistence in the field of procrastination."

The newspaper announced its award as "a new feature -- the A-T non-awards for particularly undistinguished accomplishments. The non-awards will be presented on completely irregular basis as circumstances warrant."

Environmental Politics Is CEQ Lecturer's Topic

Miss Marion Edey, chairman and national coordinator for the League of Conservation Voters, will give the third Distinguished Ecologists Lecture of the semester in Thompson Hall 106 Wednesday, March 17, at 8 p.m. on the topic "How to Turn the Environment from a Campaign Slogan into a Real Political Issue." The lecture is open to the public free of charge.

MARION EDEY

Miss Edey, who has been concerned about the environment since childhood, was educated at Reed College in Portland, Oregon. She majored in political science for the purpose of becoming a conservation lobbyist, and wrote a thesis on the predator control activities of the Division of Wildlife Services in the Department of Interior.

Starting in January 1969, Marion became a Legislative Assistant for Congressman Lester Wolff (D., N.Y.). While working in his office, she first thought of starting the League of Conservation voters as a non-partisan campaign committee to help environmentally concerned candidates.

The League of Conservation Votes began as a branch of Friends of the Earth (FOE) and was later set up as a separate organization which, however, maintained close ties with the parent body.

The League maintained a conspicuous presence in the 1970 campaign. Its heavy clout was felt in the Maryland Congressional campaign with the unseating of Congressman Fallon in the primary and the defeat of incumbent governor Don Samuelson in Idaho. Both had poor environmental records which the League exposed in intensive educational campaigns.

Miss Edey's appearance on the campus of the University is being sponsored by the Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ).

OnWMUA

On Wednesday night from nine until eleven WMUA will feature its weekly Classical music program.

The Young Socialist Alliance program will also be heard tonight from seven to eight PM this week only.

Protest Called For Against Agnew

BOSTON (AP)-Spokesmen for a group of antiwar organizations Tuesday called for a mass meeting to make plans for some kind of demonstration against the Boston appearance of Vice President Agnew.

City authorities refued to permit an antiwar, antiadministration protest parade and rally near the hotel where Agnew will speak Thursday.

Spokesmen for the Greater Boston Peace Coalition and the People's Coalition for Peace and Justice, two local antiwar organizations, said those at the mass meeting Wednesday night at Boston University would decide by vote whether to attempt the rally despite the ban or to accept alternate proposals.

Agnew is to speak to a fund-raising dinner of the Middlesex Club, a local Republican organization.

Meanwhile, an attorney for the Boston Traffic Commission told those at a news conference called by the protestors that the city "is very willing to negotiate" with the antiwar groups on an alternate site.

On Monday the commission met with representatives of the rally organizers and then voted to deny a permit for a march from Copley Square to the Sheraton-Boston Hotel near the Prudential Center. The decision also refused permission for a rally on a nearby street.

The commission's attorney, John Fiske said the Massachusetts Building and Trades Council, representing construction workers, had als applied for a parade and demonstration permit but later withdrew the application.

Stuart Singer, who said he was coordinator of the Greater Boston Peace Action Coalition, claimed the "hard hats'" application had also been refused by the traffic commission.

Traffic and Parking Dept. Commissioner William Noonan said the permit was denied "because we don't believe there is any way to maintain access to the buildings, and because of the disruption it will cause to the traffic pattern."

He also referred to a similar march following a recent antiwar rally on the Boston Common, saying "it cleared nothing but chaos."

William Troy, of the People's Coalition, sad the proposed demonstration would be "legal and nonviolent" and added, "We don't understand why a permit cannot be granted for that type of thing."

Spokesmen for the city and the protestors indicated they would continue to discuss the matter Tuesday afternoon, but Singer and Troy suggested city proposals to permit the rally on the Boston or Cambridge Commons would be unacceptable.

Alternate H.S. Meeting Tonight

There will be a second meeting for those people who are interested in organizing and teaching at an alternate high school on Wed. night at 8 p.m. in the 9th floor lounge area in the Campus Center.

Bob Aelman a grad student in Philosophy who is organizing the plans for the school said the school will be concerned with people from 13 to 18 years old who are drop-out, or people who have been thrown out of school for breaking the rules or whose parents don't wish to send them to the traditional high school.

The plans call for 4 or 5 people who want to teach in a freely structured environment. No special degree is required. The school should open in Sept. 1971.

People who were not at the first meeting or people who just want to share their ideas or experiences are urged to come. If you cannot come to the meeting, Zelman can be reached by telephone.

Germaine Talk

The "plight" of the Teaching Assistant Graduate Student at UMass became a center of controversy when the Chancellor announced that the University could committ itself to only 50% of the T.A.'s presently employed. Although the figure of 50% is pessimistic, and will probably be raised over the next few months to a level of 100%, there is a fundamental question being raised about the "plight" of undergraduate education here at the University.

The Teaching Assistant is the product of large classes and required courses, like the rhetoric courses in the English department with about 120 sections. The Graduate Students slip very comfortably into these slots, and now, as recent meetings of the Grad Senate indicate, they are having something of an identity crisis; their means of support is in danger of drying up.

There are three alternatives to be considered when approaching the present relationship between the T.A.'s and the University. Two have already been opted: the President of the Graduate Student Senate, Daniel Collins, took one by proposing that "all members of the academic community" share the burden of a financial squeeze and the T.A.'s organize to fight for their money; the Administration has categorically fallen back on the argument that money is tight and everything depends upon what happens in the State House.

Collins' narrow interest view is exactly the way to proceed if Grad Students want to alienate most of the potential support amongst the faculty. Other ideas emanating from the Grad Students along the lines of acting "like other small interest groups" and getting the "support" of undergraduates are equally foolish.

The Administrative reliance on the omnipotent specter of the legislature's allocations is unreasonable in that it does not either consider the worth of the T.A.'s or the ability of the University to present its budget requests on a priority basis.

The third alternative should be that the governing bodies representing the Grad Students and the faculty will meet with the Administration's Academic officers to decide what exactly the University needs Teaching Assistants for; what is the necessary number of T.A.'s to allow for effective teaching of large undergraduate courses; and whether or not the University should place money for T.A.'s high on the list of priorities.

There has been little dialogue on these matters outside of the incessant banter of people looking out for their own self-interest. For Grad Students, self-interest means that they have a living wage. For Faculty members, self-interest is in the area of keeping teaching loads at a reasonable level to allow time for other required scholarly pursuits. The Administration has satisfied its self-interest if it can avoid the brunt of any attacks from the State legislature for irresponsible spending and from its own community for neglecting vital interests.

We would urge the Grad Students, the faculty, and the Administration to start taking a broader view of the ends to be served by having Teaching Assistants. A good case could be made for the T.A.'s by pointing out the number of teaching assignments to be covered on the undergraduate course level. Surely there are departments which would not be able to provide the quality teaching required by undergraduates without use of large numbers of T.A.'s.

Nobody's interest's are served by saying that T.A.'s should be kept on the payroll because they need the money, even though that is a legitimate plea from a Grad Student. The undergraduate student's vital interest's are not cared for by faculty members who aren't carrying even minimum course loads. (The State Legislature also doesn't appreciate that.)

There are ways in which most of everyone's needs can be provided for; the Legislature will usually give money for things that are presented to them in a well documented and rational method. That is the Administration's duty after those involved on campus in undergraduate education realize that, what their needs are dependent upon, ultimately, is the requirement for a sound quality education for the undergraduates here at the University.

As next year's budget shapes up, the University will be able to commit itself to more of the T.A.'s (at present, the Chancellor has no legal right to commit anything to next year's budget.) The discussion that would now be germaine centers around what T.A.'s will be doing, along with faculty, to give the students the best education possible.

That is what the State Legislature will be most concerned with and they have all the money.

A Shortage Of Speakers

WASHINGTON—My friend S.J. Michelson, a registered ghost writer who works out of New York City, has just added a new terror to those that have been predicted for the 1980s. S.J. predicts that in 10 years from now there will be a famine in speakers the likes of which the United States has never seen.

S.J. told me: "This country is using up rhetoric twice as fast as it can be reproduced, and if we keep wasting our speakers as we are doing now, we could find ourselves speechless by 1985."

Citing scientific data S.J. said, "There were 11,198 prepared and extemporaneous speeches delivered last year in New York City not counting TV appearances by Mayor John Lindsay.

"Ten years ago there were only 4,506. By 1980 the demand for speeches by Rotary clubs alone will be 23,897. Even with a new crop of politicians, radical students and Women's Lib activists, it will be impossible to supply one quarter of the requests for speakers in 10 years from now."

I asked S.J. how he explained the escalating demand for speakers.

"This is a country that thrives on meetings. Three Americans can't have breakfast, lunch or dinner together without booking a speaker to address them. We are holding more conventions, more protest meetings and more fund-raising events than any time in our history. People have no solutions to any of the problems we face so they demand supposed experts to solve their problems for them.

"Unfortunately the more complicated our problems become, the more meetings we hold and the less experts we have to go around.

"For example, in any given night in this country there are 5,679 Republican fund-raising dinners going on. At the same time there is only one Spiro Agnew. Everyone knows you can spread Spiro Agnew just so far."

"But surely there must be a lot of new speakers coming up to fill the needs of the country," I protested.

"That's just the point. The younger generation which we were counting on to help out can't talk."

"What do you mean they can't talk?"

"The new generation can't verbalize. They've been listening to rock music since they were born and watching television since they were 3, and it's impossible for them to complete a sentence, much less deliver a speech. The reason so many of your radical students use four-letter words these days is that they don't know the correct word to use in expressing a thought."

"But surely the government can supply speakers to prevent this catastrophe," I said.

S.J. shook his head. "Unfortunately no one believes anything anyone in the government says these days. They won't even book someone from the government for prayer breakfasts any more."

I told S.J., "You paint a bleak picture."

"It's even worse than I have painted it," he said. "Because of the economic squeeze the networks are replacing more and more of their entertainment programs with talk shows. Every speaker in this country will soon be booked for television to plug his book and will be unable to take any speaking dates."

"What can we do to stem the tide?" I asked.

S.J. said, "The only answer is to send all able-bodied persons on welfare out on the lecture circuit. If they want to eat they should be able to sing for their supper."

The New Way Of Walking

I suppose what with all the really eye-bulbing issues at stake today, you, Collegian reader, will say I should have something better to do than write columns like the one you are about to receive. However, just as we should all be concerned for the beauty of the walkways, so I am concerned for the beauty of those who walk on them. What I am talking about is THE NEW WAY OF WALKING. It seems that farmers and farmerish behavior has become the fad now. Every mother's son who has been patient enough to grow shoulder-length hair can now do this walk. The walk is somewhere between the old basketball-player's bounce and farmer John's cowplop-dodging side swaddle. To prepare for walking-this-walk, the impressionable guy who wants to immitate the real "nasty", rebellious types must first somehow get greasy hair. The rebellious fist-shakers, fingergivers-to-the-press, you see, are in jail too much to clean themselves. Then he has to take an enema to give himself that strung-out paleness. Then he walks right down the middle of whatever it is and shakes and bobs his head all the way.

The shaking and bobbing has two purposes not already stated. One, it clears the hair from his eyes, so that, two, everyone can see how he is frowning. Discontent, you see, is on his mind. Is it the war, the bomb, the senate pay referendum which has him so totally desolate? Why not ask him, he'll tell you.

Question: "Why are you so down today?" (exquisite frown. His face has a dramatic paleness now. Our need to know his reasons becomes intense.) He says, "Like because....uhm...like you know what it is, MAN."

Thus we have not only the new way of walking but THE NEW WAY OF TALKING! It features the word LIKE and the new language formula for all questions: "LIKE, I dig it." is positive. LIKE, I didn't dig it." is negative. All others can be answered with "Like MAN." What wonders these are, and what an improvement over the shallow, smile-pasted, suited-and-tied saddle-shod, complacent college student of ten years ago. Very good! Now we have, like, frowning manure-dodger replacing cliquish, smug frat rat as No. 1 idol to youth. I guess because we live in these isolating dorms our short walk before each others eyes is worth the energy. Still it looks like a bad TV show.

"Kill It — It Looks Dangerous To Me"

A swan dodges
cruel children
yawns its petals
blossoming flight

The snake sleeps inside the egg feeds itself to life on yolk and absinthe

Blue cranes on one leg motionless

Hungry, a cat's eyes
jewel in the light and are gone

Something white-canes itself
across the garden

An End To Athletics

To the Editor:

And the Student Senate again shows that it will resist by any means necessary the right to be called a responsive representative body. The elitists did it again Sunday, by voting to recommend that the portion of the vending machine revenue, now going to the Athletic Department, go somewhere else.

It was another ludicrous self interest move by your student government, as it is affectionately termed. The amount in question is about $50,000. Now, contrary to many people's ideas, the Athletic Department is not endowed with bushels of money. The Athletic Department is in fact running on a threatening deficit. And while people complain about the Yankee Conference 20 scholarship limitation, the cruel fact is that UMass does not have enough money to give out the 20, even if they wanted to.

The Senate's action would in effect end intercollegiate athletics on campus. Perhaps this was the design of the Senate. After all, if 30 or 40 of them don't like athletics, why should anyone else. Why should the 1200 varsity athletes, the 7000 intramural participants, the thousands of students that have supported UMass athletics, have an athletic program if the senate doesn't want one?

You see, the Senate hasn't learned the basic rule of plurality of interests. They will not allow room on campus for any divergent interests.

Hopefully, the administration will ignore the Senate's request. And hopefully the athletic program, which at times is one of the few unifying elements on campus, continues to exist.

Labels Don't Fit

To the Editor:

I have a few words for the author of "Women Are..." in Monday's Collegian who so bravely withheld his name. As I tried to point out in a previous article, I don't enjoy being stereotyped--especially when the end-product is putting down the group to which I have been "assigned." I do not consider myself to be a particularly radical advocate of Women's Lib, as you might suspect. I realize that some girls on this campus do fit into your neat little categories, but I do not. And I don't appreciate being regarded with that attitude.

It appears from your article that you place too much value on appearances. If you made an effort to get to know people as individuals rather than putting them into categories and pushing them aside as "amusing" or perhaps "not worth your while," you might even find that some of your labels don't fit.

I could find a category for you, too, but I don't believe in doing that. I do not like to pass judgement on other people--especially ones I don't know. Maybe you ought to try it some time.

Meaningful Gift

To the Editor:

The question and concept of love has touched the senses of all mankind throughout its existence. Love has been discussed in many imaginative and abstract forms, yet many of its allegorical implications have succumbed to its exploitation from all those who deny it has ruled them. It is both profound and simple, and though I am not qualified to state "love is...." I can express an aspect of love as stemming from a universal self-love.

This same self-love, which is an evident form becomes displayed as conceit, pride, or related abstraction, is the parent of that love which one gives to another (whether it be to a human, a vegetable or abstract). Stephen Stills and Neil Young have manifested this thought in "Everybody I Love You":

"You expect for me to love you when you hate yourself my friend"

To open oneself to this idea allows one to perceive that one person loves another because this other person is good for the first in the first's own way. This could include sadists loving sadists or a sadist loving one (or many) who can simply help him in his own way.

This does not restrict loving, but promotes it. It does not ridicule marriage but it acknowledges that one person can love many people at the same time. All of his loves (all stemming from self-love) may be to different degrees or for different reasons, but to say that they can not exist is too restrictive. Many decide finally to apply all their love to a single mate and the products of this love (i.e. children, status, etc) and this is their choice. Security is often involved in such instances and although it is not synonymous with faith it is good for many. The spreading of love is also a gift, however, and can also bring happiness. It need not be reciprocated yet it should be received with respect as it is a meaningful gift. It is truth in essence.

Some might resent this and that is good, for they have their own view of things. This is part of mine and what I wanted to express.

Gallic Logic

To the Editor:

I have just seen that some august gentlemen have discussed the University of the Future: pass-fail system, counseling for freshmen, and that sort of thing.

Very good, but how can one discuss the University of the Future without defining the Society of the Future? Logically, it would seem that one would depend on the other. All over the dorms, I see posters announcing new societies based on Marx, the Bahai faith, the Second Coming of Christ, and God knows what. Let us find out which of these, if any, has the greatest chance of materializing; then we shall see how universities ought to adjust themselves in consequence. In other words, let us convoke a symposium to discuss, in broad outline, what the Society of the Future will be like.

Or is this a too Gallic, and too un-American, way of doing things?

Tainting The Facts

To the Editor:

Unlike Kay Raymond, I do not resent spending a little time to correct her in an obvious attempt to cast an aspersion of doubt on the validity and documentation of a column I wrote last Friday (March 12).

Miss Raymond stated that I invented facts and bent the truth to "propagandize my own brand of sexist bigotry..." Later she claimed that, "The New York Times, The Boston Globe, and the Herald Traveler all had articles on the occupation. None suggested that a major objective or need of the groups was to 'use this property as a drop-in center of lesbians', a distortion that Mr. Mitchell uses as the core of his editorial".

Let us see who is really tainting the facts with lies in the name of truth. The Boston Globe, March 8 reports, "The women were united in support of each other because they collectively felt that women should have a community center where they can get together with other women, including other "gay liberated women".

"Although some of the women inside the building were not lesbians themselves, it was clear to everyone present that a prime function of the women's center would be 'a place where lesbians can get together'."

If you interpret the column as the bending of truth, I offer my sympathy to you once again, Kay. I will grant you that I omitted the other needs that were stated such as child care, legal aid, self defense classes, etc. However these have no bearing on the thrust of the argument as stated, and I will stand on my position. Regardless of how important they may think their grievances are, we cannot allow a small group of individuals to dictate and force their wills upon the rest of us through intimidation and seizure of private or public property.

It would be nice if we could create facts to suit our own personal needs in persuasive journalism. Since we can't, opinion can be substituted as long as the two aren't confused. You are more than welcome to take issue with the opinions I may express on these pages. But if you want to dispute facts, you should try making at least a feeble attempt to research your sources.

Jim Mitchell

A Little Kindness

To the Editor:

I would like to address myself to the author of a letter that appeared in the March 15 issue.

Alex Wenner, (like any human who mirrors the world he serves) you added nothing to the "daily collection of bitterness"--but bitterness.

I suggest you become a free-lance reporter, whose only job be to fulfill the desire to find and report, (to the Collegian) acts of kindness--preferably perpetrated by yourself.

At last, the skeleton in the closet of the US Postal Service is out! At three p.m., March 16, 1971, the shuttered windows of the sub-post office in the Student Union proclaimed that the intrepid mail men were "On coffee break. Back at 3:40."

Who ever said "the mail must go through" from the UMass campus?

Caffeine trips apparently do what "Neither wind, rain, snow sleet nor hail" can do - "stay these couriers from their appointed rounds."

Turning Out The Light

I had been studying unusually late, so I reached my class half sleepy. I wanted to make it to class, because I really like the subject matter of the course, which is an advanced level course in 'Reason through irresponsibility.' Taught by two eminently 'concerned' professors, Barry Rubenstein and Mitchell (for reference see MDC March 12 '71.)

The contents of the lecture startled me and I was forced to pay attention. Incidently both professor Rubenstein and professor Mitchell reside near the university in 'Animalsfield'. Apparently from their lectures it seemed that they share each others thoughts about the condition of the 'Animal-Farm!'

"Unspayed female dogs of the world unite", roared professor Rubenstein. For a moment it seemed that a 'marxist' of the 'animal world' had risen to the surface at last. I did not know whether to ascribe this innovation to Marx or to professor Rubenstein. In any case I listened more attentively.

"Obviously some kind of a canine conspiracy exists---and it is this group that has caused the unspayed females to be priced out of dog market." Professor Rubenstein was flashing his insights into the conflicts of the male and female dogs. I was really getting impressed with the extent of his understanding. The professor continued,

"I am fed up with Ali-Frazier, Calley-Medina and if I hear another word about sickle cell anemia, I'll go out of my mind."

After heaving these words which sum up the professors' views, his prejudice, his bias, and his concern for his fellow man, I don't blame him for retreating into the 'animal-world', before he hears about the doings of Nixon and Laird. It was a wise step on the professor's part because nothing is more important to any person than his own sanity. He surely would have lost his mind if he realized that Nixon's State of the Union address originally included research plans for sickle cell anemia but it was dropped at the last minute without any explanations. Black people also lost their minds when they heard this. However, the professor and these black have become closer to each other now having lost thier minds on common grounds, than they would be otherwise. Ignoring a problem that we collectively shoulder does not eliminate the problem of the society we live in. It shifts the burden to the future generations whose job would be tougher, because we did not do our share when we should have. Living in a farm house does not qualify one to comment on problems that exist outside of it.

This leads us into the talk given by Professor Jim Mitchell. By this time I was getting used to startling revelations. While labelling the Womens Liberation movement as mostly 'lesbianism', he added:--"However the importance of their cause not withstanding, we cannot allow individuals to trespass on and seize private property to make a point." In other words the sacredness of property rights are higher than the individual rights of the women who occupied the Harvard building.

Is there no distinction between individual human rights and property rights? If a non-violent method of civil disobedience like occupying the building illegally is not to be tolerated than aren't we in essence pushing the 'concerned' individuals towards the use of 'violent' methods of making a point. Most reasonable and responsible men would again agree that only be channeling legitimate grievances through 'non-violent' means can we save society, whose very nature is violent, from destruction. Perhaps Professor Jim Mitchell has also forgotten the property rights of thousands of civilians of South Vietnam, Cambodia, and Laos whose houses are burnt to the ground so that the U.S. soldiers do not have to take the trouble of searching them again.

Professor Mitchell summed up his position about the women liberation problem and the society by letting society--"feel its not being forced and harrassed into acknowledging new and changing morals then it surely will in time come to a decision under the light of reason". I must say that I found the 'light of reason' model very intriguing. I seems to suggest that society is separate from those who take part in demonstrations. And what the latter does will in time be accepted by society by a method of some 'divine revelation.' According to Mitchell, this momentous task of bringing harmony in society will come about by the 'light of reason' gradually creeping into the 'non-demonstrating' members of society' as long as they are not harrassed. Granted harrassment does not bring the desired fruitful results, but there is also such a thing as a "deliberate effort' on either part to get its point across by means of education and debate. If this does not achieve the correction of glaring inequities in society such as racism, sexism, oppression, etc., and time does not help in being the best healer, then more drastic measures for change becomes absolutely inevitable. I am sure neither my Professors nor I desire to see that state.

Out of class we found ourselves in the elevator facing each other again. I heard someone say, "Would you press the button for the top of the Campus, please."--'PEACE'.

TAKE TWO

Integration Of The Heart

"A Pregnant Black was Heart Donor. Recipient in Capetown A White Ex-policeman." (New York Times headline)

Detroit is going up in flames,
The snipers rule the street;
But listen closely through the din
And hear her black heart beat.

The cry is "Freedom, Freedom now!"
The mobs are running wild;
But who will cry for a corpse unknown,
Bearing an unborn child?

Doctor Barnard, Doctor Barnard,
Lay down your knife and weep;
Your work is going all for naught,
The world is still asleep.

Somewhere in a Capetown alley,
A cop beats a black to death;
While ex-constable Smith receives a heart
To give him another breath.

Will your thoughts be deeper now,
With a heart from the "inferior race?"
Will you take the time to ask
The questions that you'd never face?

Doctor Barbard, Doctor Barnard,
Give up your knowledge for tears;
The world you're trying to save is gone;
It's merely a matter of years.

Now we have the final sin,
The oppressed are no longer contained;
So please don't revel in the news;
"Circulation is being maintained!"

No. Her heart will never stop,
Its beat a billion strong;
The deafening sound will drown the world,
And right what has been wrong.

Doctor Barnard, Doctor Barnard,
Go hold her dusky hand and pray;
You must find a way to transplant love
Before the white man's final day.

John Taylor

Hell No!

We have all heard about it: in fact the whole world heard about it. Joe Frazier defeated Muhammed Ali on March 9, at Madison Square Gardens. A barrage of punches to the body followed by a thunderous left hook that smashed into Ali's jaw sent him crashing to the floor. Yes, the champion went down. His enemies roared with delight. They thought that it was the end of the champion. They thought that they had finally succeeded in crushing him. But no, the champion was up in a split of a second; demonstrating to them (his enemies) that no matter what they do they just can't keep a good man down.

The end came, the decision was read. It was unanimous in favor of smoking Joe Frazier. We (Ali's People) were all surprised, because we knew that 2 out of 15 cannot be unanimous. Smoking Joe won two rounds, so even though he floored Ali, the decision should be in Ali's favor. But they gave it to Joe, believing in their envious heart that they had succeeded in silencing the man who dared them; the man who cast off the name that was given to him by his slave master, the man who told Uncle Sam that he would not join his army and then to be sent to Vietnam to be killed or kill innocent people, people who are fighting to liberate themselves. To these people (they who want to see Ali go down) I think I would be safe in using Stokely Carmichael's cryptic phrase in answering these questions, "hell no!!" Yes, they wanted Ali to lose. Why? They said he talked too much. They said he was ego tripping. They said he is too educated. They said that he doesn't fit a stero-type boxer. They said he is a rebel. They even said he will not permit them to control him. Yes; they said all this. But; is that all.

I am a Muhammed Ali follower, I was terribly hurt when I heard the decision, but after reviewing the fight over and over in my mind, I can't help but conclude that Ali just didn't want to win. I have suspected that Ali is under a considerable amount of pressure, but by whom I won't say. I'll let you all figure that out.

Many people have said that Ali's ego has been crushed. They said that Ali is depressed. They also said that we won't hear from him any more. But is it only Ali they don't want to hear? What about the black race whom he is speaking for? Don't they know that when they hear Ali they hear us? When Ali was ego tripping as they said, don't they know that it was not for himself. Since they don't know I would like to tell them that it was for us. His people. His people whom the man has been controlling ever since we were kidnapped from Africa and were brought over here in chains. Ali is proud. He is proud not of being a boxer, but for being a man. A black man who can make his own decisions. A black man who will stand up for what he believes in no matter what the consequences might be. Yes he lost on Monday night, but what the man stood for is far from being lost. Ali has just began to open the eyes of the people. His people. Us.

Martin Luther King had a dream. He died but his dream didn't die with him. Brothers Malcom and Rap. When they were alive and were teaching, they were not appreciated. Now it is Brother Ali. Maybe his dream was not fulfilled while he was the world heavy weight champion, but certainly his dream will come through.

He has opened my eyes, and I know he has opened others.

A Reader Responds:

Dear Sir:

I have a question to ask you. Why doesn't UMass also pull a first and make the Daily Collegian a co-op newspaper, instead of an undergraduate newspaper. Many of the graduate students come to UMass from a large cross-section of the U.S. It would be good to know their hometown background and the goals of the graduate students. That's why I propose a co-op newspaper divided into two parts, the undergraduate and graduate section. There are many graduate students at UMass who would like to formulate opinions. I also hope that the CEEBS program will expand and black students from places like Washington, D.C., Pittsburgh, Pa., Cleveland, Ohio, Newark, N.J., Long Island, San Francisco-Oakland, Los Angeles-Watts and rural south will be admitted to UMass. If UMass can get students from these areas it can bring diversity to the UMass campus.

Keep your column going and going.

One more thing. I was listening to WBAI-radio free in New York and they taped a speach made by Eldredge Cleaver. Cleaver says that the black panther party was formed by the constituents of the black people. Not people like Huey P. Newton or Bobby Seale who are using the party for their own purposes. Cleaver says the panther party belongs to the people and that it will perge from bottom to top, if necessary by cleaning house. He went on to say that a rude awakening will take place and people like Supreme Court Judge Douglas will be dealt with, if they try to stop the movement. The names of David and June Hillyer crops up because they play a major role in the party solidarity that is attainable.

Best wishes and right on.

Junior Year in New York

Washington Square College of Arts and Science of New York University sponsors a Junior Year in New York.

The College, located in the heart of the city, is an integral part of the exciting metropolitan community of New York City—the business, cultural, artistic, and financial center of the nation. The city's extraordinary resources greatly enrich both the academic program and the experience of living at New York University with the most cosmopolitan student body in the world.

This program is open to students recommended by the deans of the colleges to which they will return for their degrees.

There are strong and varied offerings in many areas, such as fine arts, urban studies, languages including non-European, mathematics in the College and at the Courant Institute, psychology, and others.

A qualified student may register for courses in all other schools of the University, including the specializations in Commerce and Education.

The University sponsors programs in Spain and France.

From 'Titles' To Books on Brewing

By GILBERT J. SALK
MDC Staff

Today's topic is false idols--the figures of authority who rely on titles to influence the people around them. (I should also note no, before you lose interest in the major topic, that there will also be some reviews of books dealing with home brewing. So don't go away.)

There is a mystique of titles which has grown in our society over the past several decades, until it has now reached dangerous proportions. It is virtually impossible for the "average" man to relate on a human level with people with titles. This is partly the fault of the titled individual, who imposes an arrogance of power or supposed knowledge between you and himself, usually as a means of security. It is also the fault of the untitled commoner, however, for he allows himself to be cowed by the other's arrogance.

For example, conside the difference in the way you usually relate to a professor who lets you call him by his first name and one who insists upon being called "Doctor". The artificial barrier of the title gives the professor a supposedly superior position from which he is able to relate "down" to you. Because he has a title and you don't, you are practically forced to relate "up" to him. Because you are in a psychologically weaker position, it is nearly impossible for you to relate to him as an equal, even in areas where his training is no different from yours.

The same thing holds true with administrators, be they in business, education, government, or whatever. You would of necessity relate to Oz Tippo in different ways than you relate to "Dr." Tippo or "Chancellor" Tippo. Dick Nixon, if he were called that by the nation and the media as a whole, would be a very different type of individual than is "President" Nixon. "Treasurer" Johnson can hide his seeming dislike for students behind his title; Ken Johnson, on the other hand, would have to reveal his disdain, if it exists, as a personality trait, thus making it a different matter to deal with him with regard to room rent increases or other similar matters.

If physicians were called by their names rather than their titles, it would be far easier for most people to demand that drugs be prescribed by their generic names, or attempt to negotiate fees, or ask for explanations about things they don't understand. Many doctors are truly humanitarian, but there are some who are purely businessmen. It would be easier to sort these out if the "doctor mystique" were to be shattered.

These are just examples of a pervading problem. The overriding principle is the same in all cases. The fact is that in all too many cases people with good ideas never get heard because they don't have titles, people with valid criticisms to make are effectively shouted down by the verbosity issuing from a titled mouth. ("Transportation Secretary" John Volpe "defended" the SST by saying that we don't have inconclusive evidence that it will cause the problems the environmentalists warn about; he said nothing about evidence that we really need an SST in the first place. He was on national television, his voice loudened by his title. Those who object must fight for local television and newspaper space.)

The examples are countless. The result is that we now have a very real aristocracy, although the Constitution forbids the granting of titles. What would happen if the countor culture demanded a democracy-in-practice and refused to use titles under any circumstances? Try it. You may find that it will bring you one step closer to freedom. Equality is sometimes nothing more than a state of mind. PEACE

BOOK REVIEWS

1. An Essay on Brewing, Vintage and Distillation together with selected Remedies for Hangover Melancholia or How to Make Booze by John F. Adams ($.95, Doubleday & Co., Inc. Garden City, N.Y.)

2. Home Brewing Without Failures by H.E. Bravery ($.95, Arc Books, NYC.)

3. How to Build a Still by Don Balliett, Norman Gibat, and Albert Rauscher ($1.00, Wyne Table, Norman Okla.)

Essay on Brewing has good information on home-brewed beer, hard liquqr, honey mead, and wines. It has an excellent but brief chapter on hangovers and how to deal with them. It is hurt by not having an index, thus making access to information somewhat difficult.

Home Brewing covers beer, cider, and mead making. It does have an index, but is somewhat complicated by the fact that it utilizes British Imperial Gallons for measurement. This changes recipe requirements. However, the information given in the book is valuable. It provides good general advice, and excellent suggestions on how to test your product, when to decant it, and easy-to-follow recipes.

How to Build a Still provides essential information about laws and taxes regulating home brewing, so you will know what you're fighting. It gives simple directions for building several different kinds of stills, and has a good list of recipes. It, too, is troubled by a lack of indexing.

Check out one of the three. If you get interested, you'll probably want all of them.

Girl Gymnasts 2nd In Easterns

After a long and exciting weekend, the UMass girl's gymnastics team returned with one dual meet victory and a second place trophy.

The dual meet victory came over Penn State, where UMass scored 92.05 against Penn State's 71.45. The second place trophy was won in the Eastern Regional Gymnastics Championships for Women, held at Baltimore, Maryland, over the weekend.

According to the coach, Mrs. Kitty Kjeldsen, the team performed very well at the Regionals and came within 2.05 of winning the championship. However, the weakness in the parallel bar event that has plagued UMass girls all year was evident once again, and the first place went to Springfield College, for the fourth year in a row. UMass came in second, also for the fourth year in a row.

Team results were:

1. Springfield College	98.80
2. UMass	96.75
3. Towson State College	92.30
4. South'n Conn.	89.25
5. West Chester	85.45
6. Clarion State	84.80

After the preliminary competition, Linda Seikunas stood third in floor exercise and balance beam, Marina Rodriguez was tied for the lead on the beam and Margie Combs had placed in the top ten in every event, including a second place in sidehorse vaulting. Miss Combs also earned third place honors in the All-Around Competition, nosing out Patti Corrigan from Springfield by .10. After the finals the individual places had changed somewhat.

Miss Combs held on to second place in sidehorse vaulting, scoring 8.95. The event was won by former Olympian Cathy Gleason from Buffalo who posted a 9.35.

Miss Rodriguez lost the first place standing on the balance beam to Diane Chapela from Clarion and came in second with 8.7. Miss Seikunas tied for fourth in the same event and Miss Combs came in sixth. Cathy Gleason and Miss Corrigan tied for first in uneven parallel bars with identical 8.95-s. Miss Combs scored 8.65 in the finals, but only 7.75 in the preliminaries and therefore did not place as high as expected.

Anne Burmeister fell off the beam both in the preliminaries and finals, placing lower than she is capable of. She also sustained a knee injury in floor exercise preliminaries and had to scratch from final competition. Laurel Milch, Judy Cardozo, Heidi Armstrong and Chris Kopf did well in the preliminaries but did not earn a position for the finals.

The most outstanding gymnast in the competition was former Olympian Cathy Gleason, from Buffalo State, who won 3 out of 4 first places and placed first in the All-Around. She was closely followed by Miss Chapela from Clarion State College and Miss Combs from UMass. Both girls made the finals in all 4 events. Patti Corrigan from Springfield came in fourth, making the finals in two events. Although UMass girls qualified for National Championships at Penn State, there remains the annual problem of getting money for the trip.

Southern Illinois, Springfield and UMass are the favorites for National Championship. It has just been learned that Southern Illinois girls were disqualified from the meet due to problems with athletic scholarships. This puts Springfield, UMass and Sacramento State College in contention for the Championship crown. Will our girls have enough money to go this year? Is the student body interested in having a potential National Championship team on the campus? The next few days will tell the story.

NIT Buses

As announced last week, the Student Senate Transit Service will sponsor charter buses to the NIT at Madison Square Garden. Buses will be scheduled as follows:

AMHERST: Price $7.50 round trip; Peter Pan Buses leave Campus Center Bus Stop at 7:00 A.M.

AMHERST–BOSTON: Price $10.00 round trip; special arrangements will allow students to take the 7:00 A.M. bus from Amherst and return to Boston after the games.

SPRINGFIELD: Price $7.00 round trip; Peter Pan Buses leave the Springfield Bus Terminal, across from the Hotel Charles at 7:30 A.M.

WORCESTER: Price $8.25 round trip; Wilson Buses leave the Worcester Bus Terminal at Seven Hills Plaza at 6:30 A.M.

BOSTON: Price $9.00 round trip; Wilson Buses leave the Park Square Trailways Terminal at 6:00 A.M.

Each bus will display an orange sign with a number which corresponds with the number circled on the bottom of each ticket. Buses will leave Madison Square Garden about 5:30 P.M. or thirty minutes after the third game.

Tickets are on sale in room 114 of the Student Activities Office, Campus Center. Ask for Blanche. Ticket Deadline is noon Friday.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Tarheels Pose Big Challenge

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

For the second straight year the UMass basketball team has drawn the top-seeded team in the opening round of the National Invitational Tournament. Last year the opponent was Marquette. This year it's the Tarheels from North Carolina.

Picked in pre-season for either the cellar or the middle of the standings in the Atlantic Coast Conference, North Carolina came on strong as the season progressed and won the regular season title only to be defeated in the three day league tourney by South Carolina, 52-51, on a tough luck play.

On this play the Tarheels were beaten on a jump ball, as Lee Dedmon, their 6'11 center, who had an eight inch height advantage over all-American John Roche of South Carolina, tapped the ball into the hands of an opponent for an easy layup and the one-point victory for South Carolina.

The Tarheels have been perenial NCAA tournament competitors during the last decade and only this miscue kept them out of it this year. Their top seed in this year's NIT came as no surprise.

They play a tough schedule and come from probably the toughest basketball league in the country. Every game in the ACC is a war and coming out on top is a big accomplishment. Outside of its conference the Tarheels have only lost two games in a schedule that was far superior to that of Marquettes one year ago.

In the past teams in the ACC had problems in the NIT due to the fact that it was held just a couple of days after the league playoffs which is a tremendous drain both physically and mentally on the ballplayers. Last year North Carolina came to the N.I.T. right after the tourney and was defeated in the first round by Manhattan.

This year though they will have a week to rest up and this will pose a problem for UMass. In preparing for the Tarheels the Redmen will have their difficulties as North Carolina does a great deal with the ball on the court. In its league a team has to do a multiple of things to survive.

Coached by Dean Smith, who is one of the best in the naton, North Carolina starts a big team with outstanding personel both on the court and the bench. All of the players were past high school all-staters and play a fine brand of ball.

Up front the Tarheels have Dedmon at center with Bill Chamberlain, 6'6 and Dennis Wuycik, 6'5 at the forwards: Dedmon is a 6'11 "ballplayer" who can handle himself well on both ends of the court.

Wuycik is the top scorer, 18.8 points per game, and the spark for North Carolina. He played with Julius Erving on the Olympic Development team that toured Europe last summer and is currently the top field goal shooter in the country with 63% from the floor. To top these credentials off, he was selected to the ACC all-conference first team which is quite an honor with the calabre of play in the league.

Chamberlain has been averaging 13 points a game and is a solid performer up front.

In the backcourt will be George Karl and Steve Pervis, both 6'2. Karl is the quarterback of the club and was picked to the second all-conference team. Both he and Pervis are exceptionally quick and hard to handle.

On the bench North Carolina has a group of players who could probably be starting for many other schools in this country. During a game coach Smith goes to the bench often and with confidence. During the league tourney he went to 6'7 Dave Chadwick and he responded with a clutch effort. The Tarheels play at least eight to ten players a game.

On defense North Carolina presses all over the court after all baskets and foul shots and plays a pressure man-to-man defense if the press is broken. The two guards are the key to the press with their size and quickness. The pressure defense is one of the Tarheel strongpoints.

On offense North Carolina does an awful lot with the ball. It runs a double pivot, which UMass saw against B.C., it plays a one-three-one offense, runs cut-off series and uses a four corner offense, which UMass uses as a stall, for an offensive set play.

To analyze this team, one word is needed: tough. It does many things its played a rough schedule and it

The Tarheels now stand in the way of the third Redman goal of this season and that's winning a game in the NIT. They present the biggest obstacle a UMass basketball team has ever had.

On Friday this page will take a closer look at the game and analyze what UMass will have to do to reach its third goal.

HOOP NOTES—Another 2500 NIT tickets have been received at the Boyden ticket office and will be on sale today and tomorrow from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m...Julius Erving received the highest vote total ever in the balloting for the UPI all-New England team.

Skiers Capture New England Championship

By NANCY MARTIN
MDC Staff

Undefeated in the Osbourne Division, UMass ski team, led by Jerry Curran and Chuck Walker, captured the New England championship title this past weekend at Wildcat and Cranmore in N.H.

The meet consisted of the top four teams in each of the three leagues, the Osbourne Division, the Northern Division, and the Thompson Division. UMass was competing against the very best skiers the East has to offer, and yet because of their excellent training and natural born ability, were able to surpass all other teams in over all team and individual performance. The Osbourne Division has usually been placed as the under dog in this annual event, but after this weekends past performance by UMass., the division has aquired a new place of honor in the top position.

SKIING TO THE TOP-UMass ski co-captain John Gray charges through a gate on way to a fine performance in the New England's over the weekend. He and his teammates went undefeated this year and won the N.E. championship.

Saturday's slalom race was hosted by the N.E.I.S.C. (New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference) and consisted of two 60 second runs. The course was extremely difficult due to the over abundance of gates placed in a tightly arranged pattern and most skiers were hard pressed to finish the course without either missing a gate or falling.

The UMass skiers had some difficulty manipulating the latter part of the course and because of this, placed third behind strong first place Franklin Pierce College and second place New England College. Fairly happy with their performance of placing in the top three, however they still realized that in order to win the combination weekend, they had to strengthen the team effort and ski like they've never skied before.

After Sat.'s race, they were behind by a large ten second margin. They realized at this point that a championship team consists of each individual member working for the good of the whole and in order to win, they had to become a stronger team unit. They had thus far been an undefeated championship team in their league and their desire and determination from this had carried over into this all out event.

Two of UMass's strongest skiers, John Gray and Jim Latimer, both co-captains, were disqualified after the first run for missing a gate. This unfortunate incident put additional pressure on the remaining members of the team.

Ted Martin, one of the five senior members racing for the last time in their college careers, had difficulty in the course and hooked a gate, putting additional unwanted seconds on his score.

Jerry Curran, finishing the season with a perfect record of no falls and no missed gates, had the fastest time for the team and was the biggest determining factor in securing the third place position.

Following close behind Curran, Chuck Walker another veteran and highly respected for his great endurance and dependability, put in an excellent time to place second for the team and boost UMass's chances.

This year marked the first time in the history of the league that freshmen were allowed to compete. Curt Sayre, a freshman, with consequently little experience as compared to his senior teammates, put out a tremendous performance to place third for the team and give Coach MacConnell confidence and insurance for an excellent team in the future.

Sunday's Giant Slalom was held at Cranmore and hosted by B.U. The race consisted of one 90 second run and the winning team was judged on this sole performance. The UMass team knew what they were up against and knew what had to be done in order to bring home the trophy. After an all or nothing effort by Coach MacConnell's boy's, UMass won Sunday's race over Franklin Pierce second and Babson third.

Latimer, retaliating after Sat.'s race, fired through the course with his usual fine speed and agility to place first for the team and fourth in the individual standings for the day.

Gray, also retaliating from Sat.'s mishap, put out a tremendous performance to finish second for the team and seventh in the individuals.

His outstanding time was followed by two of equal importance. Curran and Walker, racing in the latter part of the day, had to contend with softer snow and consequently a slower course. However, this in no way affected their style or their times and because of their outstanding performances, they are ranked as probably the two most valuable members of the team. Curran placed twelveth and Walker thirteenth.

Martin had an excellent day and ended his career with an impressive run to strengthen the team position and likelihood for the trophy.

Sayre, a strong addition to the team this past weekend, gave the team the needed depth and stamina to out ski all their opponents and put down their biggest competitor, Franklin Pierce.

For the two days combined, the individual standings read Curran fifth, Walker ninth, and Martin fourteenth.

Team and individual awards were prsented at Sat. nights banquet and Sun. afternoons buffet. UMass was presented the Osbourne Division trophy and the New England championship trophy. Jim Garstang, last years co-captain and receipient, presented the Good Sportsmanship Award to Butch Mowers of Northeastern and the Top Banana Award (for the hottest ticket) to Rojer Rhodes of Amherst.

This past weekend was a fitting ending for the three years of racing that seniors Walker, Curran, and Martin devoted to the team and the two years that seniors Latimer and Gray likewise devoted. Coach Mac Connell will be missing five irreplacable members from the original team that worked so hard and well together to become UMass' first undefeated ski team and in addition, go on to capture the New England Championships. In Coach's own words at the Saturday night banquet, "The other competing teams will be happy to know that our team is losing five of the greatest skiers the league has ever seen."

Senate Votes 13-33-8 To Keep Index Alive

By BETH GOODELL
Senate Reporter

The Student Senate last night defeated a Budgets Committee motion to strike the entire $93,000 budget request for next year's Index. Had the motion passed, Index could not have received even a reduced budget from the Student Activities Tax. The defeat of the strike motion means that the yearbook will be given at least a portion of its budget request, an amount still to be determined by the Senate.

Other action taken by the Senate last evening included a vote of approval of the budgets prepared by the Interim Coordinating Committee, and the Seniors' Committee for the class of 1971. These are the committees which control expenditures of the Class Tax, now that class government has been abolished.

In debating whether or not to eliminate the Index budget for next year, several Senators questioned the expenditure of nearly $100,000 for what they deemed to be a publication of limited interest among many members of the student body.

Thomas Leavitt, editor of the Index, retorted that he has recruited a diversified staff and that, using the results of an opinion poll taken of students last year, his staff has worked hard to make this year's edition relevant to all segments of the campus social and political spectrum.

Some Senators suggested that the yearbook should be made self-liquidating, paid for by subscription instead of compulsory student tax. Students now pay $6.25 each per year as the portion of their Student Activities Tax which goes to the Index budget. Leavitt, however, explained that a subscription system would cause the price to rise to approximately $25 per copy, because the reduced number of copies ordered would raise the technical costs of production.

The roll call vote on the motion to strike the budget was defeated by a [illegible] vote. Many of the Senators voting against striking stated they personally disliked the budgeting of [illegible] but that they felt it would be completely eliminate the budget because [illegible] of the Index.

[illegible] budget for next year [illegible] Senators and will be considered by the Budgets Committee in a [illegible] this evening.

The Interim Coordinating Committee's budget approved by the Senate details the expenditure of the nearly $27,000 turned over to the committee from the class taxes of the classes of '72, '73, and '74. Basic expenditures in the budget include $17,000 for the purchase of talent to perform at free concerts to be held May 2 and 9, operational expenses, and alumni fees.

The Senate meeting was still in progress at the time of this writing and was expected to last considerably later than the usual 12 p.m. adjournment. Scheduled for consideration were next year's budget requests of Free University, Afro-Am, Drum (a publication of the Black community), Rapline, and the Learning Resource Center. Watch tomorrow's Collegian for more complete details on the meeting.

About War

Chiaretto Urges: Learn and Educate

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

"You must work slowly and thoughtfully to swing peoples' ideas about the war, especially labor workers". These were words spoken by Carl J. Chiaretto, an antiwar activist and a member of I.U.E. Local 255 in Pittsfield. And to do this a good propaganda campaign must be established; according to Mr. Chiaretto the only way to do this is by organizing a good leafleting campaign, since all the other means of communication, radio, newspapers, magazines, and television are dominated by the Establishment.

Speaking before a MOBE meeting of about 25 people, Chiaretto said that if the war in Vietnam is to be stopped, a majority of the people must take part. The unions, he said, contain a majority of this power and if they strike they contain such a large number of people that the leaders in the Government would be forced to listen.

Chiaretto, who has been in opposition with the war since 1955, said to the audience that he felt greatly encouraged when students became active in opposing the war. He stated that opposition to the war through the peace movement has changed the atmosphere of the government but that it hasn't moved them enough to stop the war.

He noted also how public sentiment against the war has increased. He stated that 2-1/2 years ago, the locals of the AFL—CIO all over the country were sent a letter by George Meaney asking them to stand behind Johnson's policy in Vietnam. Out of a hundred members, Chiaretto stated that he was the only one in opposition. Today if the same thing were sent out, he said the amount of people in opposition would be much greater.

In the Wednesday night speech Chiaretto said that he is afraid that the number of people concerned about ending the war don't know quite where to go from here. Demonstrations help rally people, he said, but they aren't enough. Violence, he added would not be effective because it would be opposed by the Military. He said that people are sitting back out of frustration and that people must be effectively organized against the war.

He stated that the country has been turned against the leadership of the anti war movement, the youth. This situation must be corrected, Chiaretto said. People in factories, schools, and at home must be reached and educated with the plain simple facts concerning the war. Leafleting he said, is the way to do this.

Before Mr. Chiaretto arrived to speak, a short talk was given by Mr. Rudy Praetz, who was a member of a 170 man party which went to Paris to find out what is holding up the peace talks.

In his closing remarks he urged those attending the meeting to learn about the Vietnam situation and to go out into the community and educate people as to what is going on. He told them to write to the officials in Washington stating their feelings on the war.

Praetz Names Withdrawal As Key To Asian Peace

By JEANETTE MARTINEAU
MDC Staff

Last night at the second meeting of the Students for Peace, Mr. Rudolph Praetz, a delegate to Paris from the American Friends Services Committee, The Fellowship of Reconciliation, and the Clergy and Layman Concerned for Viet Nam, spoke of his own meeting with official delegations to the Peace Talks, earlier this month.

Mr. Praetz said that the meetings left us with a deep sense of frustration, there seems so little ray of sunshine for peace because of one intransient position. The most important point is the U.S. Withdrawal from South East Asia."

"We can be neutral," he continued, "when the U.S., the CIA, and other interests promote the war." Mr. Praetz emphasized, "how delicate peace negotiations are. They are a matter of life and death. The U.S. must name a date for a withdrawal of troops before there will be any negotiations for a cease-fire.

He also elaborated on the matter of POW. "If you look at any war in history, the Peace Treaty has always been signed before the release of the prisoners." "There have been more than a hundred My Lais", he continued, and supported the "elimination of the Thieu-Ky-Kiem Regime."

Mr. Praetz went on to explain the requirements for Presidential candidacy in South Viet Nam; "first, he must have lived in South Viet Nam for 10 years; second, he must petition for thirty signatures of officials in the Saigon government, or forty signatures from neighboring chieftains; third, he must pay one million piastres (80 piastres equal one dollar); and the fourth requirement has to do with repression: the candidate must have no record of ever having been a Communist, or in any way, having ever spoken out for peace."

The last act of Mr. Praetz delegation while in Paris was to send a telegram, as yet unanswered, to President Nixon, which pleaded for peace. About the People's Peace Treaty, he said: "I endorse the People's Peace Treaty. It is a consensus, a first step. Our fight is not with the American delegation, but with Washington. People are so hung up with a law that says that 'No individual can make peace with a foreign government'.

"We can't emphasize enough that each individual must make his influence felt with Kennedy, and Brooke, and Nixon. The U.S. should examine its conscience," he concluded. "What the government does, it does in our name. It was Eisenhower who once said: 'There will come a time when people will make peace, and when they do, the governments had better get out of the way'."

Allen Fisher, one of the Students for Peace, then took the floor, "If the government doesn't stop the war, we must stop the government." The People's Peace Treaty was then discussed, funding proposed, and the spring demonstration in Washington further explained.

"The emphasis will be on timing", Fisher summarized.

The Students for Peace, now an official recognized student organization, plan to meet again shortly after the vacation.

American Student Association Seeks 'Big Name Group' Concert

By DAVID CASTALDI
MDC Staff

About 20 people met in the campus center for a meeting of the American Student Association (ASA).

The group, under the direction of Harold Koltin, has three major objectives. The first objective is to get some big name groups up here such as Santana, Poco, or Chicago, for a series of free outside concerts in May.

Members of the group feel that the administration doesn't want to take the risk and that students on the concert committees don't seem to be making any progress in this issue. ASA feels that students on this campus can handle a series of free concerts without any major difficulties.

The second objective of the group is to put the campus center in the hands of students. The campus center was originally built with the intention of serving the interests of students, supposedly. Students not going home for vacations would be able to stay in rooms in the campus center at the rate of 2.50 per day. It seems however, that the administration has all of the rooms in the center booked for the upcoming vacation.

Students not going home for spring vacation will be forced to stay in the rooms in Coolidge lower. The girls in this dorm are objecting to such a policy, however. About 95 girls petitioned to have their rooms remain closed throughout the vacation.

If necessary, the girls plan to stay in their rooms for the first few days of vacation.

The third goal of the group is to form a body of representative activists--that is, the members of ASA feel that Student Senators and "Collegian" editors are unresponsive to student needs, and do not truly represent them.

Poverty Fighter Richards To Speak Friday On Poor

"Hunger in the Arkansas Delta" will be the subject of a discussion and slide presentation Friday at 8 P.M., in Room 163 of the Campus Center.

The speaker will be former VISTA worker Eugene Richards of RESPECT, INC., a private social service agency in West Memphis, Arkansas.

RESPECT, INC., was founded in May, 1970, by Richards and other former VISTA volunteers who had worked primarily in the Arkansas Delta. RESPECT was incorporated in July, 1970, its two goals being the organization of a bi-weekly newspaper, Many Voices, written for and by the blacks and poor in eastern Arkansas, and the establishment of a Community Information Center in West Memphis.

Eugene Richards will speak tomorrow on "hunger in the Arkansas Delta".

RESPECT also serves as a welfare referral service for many of the thousands of poor people in the Arkansas Delta. Nearly 60 percent of the families in the region earn less than $3000 a year; 25 percent earn less than $1000 a year. Yet welfare presently reaches only 14 percent of the poor population. Per pupil expenditure for education is half the national average. A medical care crisis exists. 80 percent of the housing is substandard.

Friday's presentation, sponsored by the UMass Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs, is open to the public free of charge. Further information may be obtained from Ann Nichols at 546-7234, Arlen Brunson at 546-5371, or Ken Mosakowski at 545-0279.

Coolidge Opposes Senate Dorm Ruling

By ANN GURNETT
MDC Staff

Residents of Coolidge Lower, going on the premise that it is wrong to force a dorm to accomodate non-resident students over school vacations, have opposed a ruling of the Student Senate made earlier this year dealing with the problem.

The ruling, made last semester by the Student Senate and the Housing Office, set up a system by which dorms used to house students in over vacations would be picked by lottery. The measure also contained an option open to all dorms which would allow any dorm to volunteer its rooms, with the approval of house residents, to be used over vacations. The dorms would then be paid $2.50 per night for each student present, the regular rate in use now.

Official notification of plans to use Coolidge Lower over the Spring vacation was given to the dorm two weeks ago. One week ago last Thursday, Coolidge told the Administration that it did not intend to comply. Coolidge was then given the option of finding another dorm to stay open in its place.

The main argument of the residents was that security problems would be too complicated. The general feeling was that student possessions would be endangered if others were allowed to stay in the rooms; also, the girls would be inconvenienced by having to remove their valuables to places where they could be locked up.

One of the biggest student objections to the use of dorms during non-academic periods has been the presence of the Campus Center Hotel. The residents of Coolidge wanted to know why the Center could not be used instead of individual residence halls.

This problem had been discussed in the Senate when the whole vacation residence problem came up earlier in the year. It was decided that the Hotel would be used during the Christmas vacation but would not be utilized at other times.

The reasoning behind this decision was that the Hotel would not be large enough to house the many students who stay up on certain vacations. I was also decided that the Hotel would be losing money, that it might have previous commitments, and therefore, since its purpose is to provide revenue to help pay for the Campus Center, that it would not be feasible to use it to house students.

Coolidge wants a permanent quarters for non-resident students to be established. However, while a search is in progress to find such a place, Coolidge will remain open for the vacation. Other dorms in Southwest and on campus (ex. Cance) will be open to residents for the duration of the vacation.

Marion Edey speaks in Thompson on turning the environmental issues into political issues. (MDC photo by Tim Fagan)

CEQ Speaker Calls For Lobbying Power

By CYNTHIA SWINDELL
MDC Staff

"The aim of the League of Conservation Voters is to supply political muscle and political threat against environmental enemies" stated Marion Edey in her lecture "How to turn the Environment from a Campaign Slogan into a Real Political Issue" sponsored by the CEQ last night.

The League of Conservation Voters states that it is not sufficient to only draw attention to an issue, but that it is necessary to "find those who are to blame and find how they can aid in the solution of the problem," she said.

Miss Edey stated that in the last election the League of Conservation Voters located those in office who were "vunerable but powerful" and applied pressure in order to oust these environmental enemies. The League accomplished this task by "creating a terrible image around the candidate and then donating money to the opponent."

By utilizing these tactics the League was able to prevent the re-election of Congressman Falon from Baltimore, who was strongly against environmental control, she stated.

Miss Edey emphasized the fact that industrial lobbyists "outspend" all efforts of environmental lobbyist, have the potential use of the majority. Miss Edey stated that environmental lobbyists can effectively utilize this strength of majority if the majority can be sufficiently concentrated.

The League is making a continual effort to expose the difference between "political rhetoric and real political policy," said Miss Edey. In an effort to do so the League has printed voting charts of the voting record of Congressmen and Senators on major environmental questions, she added.

Miss Edey also stated that the interest of the League is "significant in a life and death survival and that the movement cannot be isolated as Kooky or Freaky, and therefore is supported by a large majority."

Miss Edey explained that one of the main goals of the League is to give monetary support to environmental candidates. Miss Edey stated that the main source of income of the League is private contributions.

Following the lecture Miss Edey conducted a question and answer period, in which she outlined those in Congress who support and oppose environmental questions.

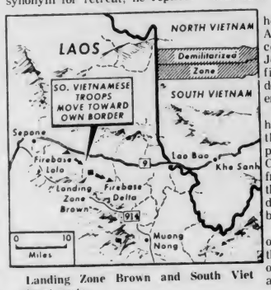
Key Base "Doomed"
South Viets Falter Under Enemy Gunfire

SAIGON (AP)-American pilots reported some South Vietnamese forces in Laos were retreating Wednesday and enemy gunners poured artillery, mortar and rocket fire into Landing Zone Brown, an important base 14 miles from the Vietnamese frontier. Pilots said the base was doomed.



The U.S. Command said the North Vietnamese fired three surface-to-air missiles at U.S. B52 bombers flying over Laos, but missed.

In South Vietnam, enemy artillery hammered the main American support base at Khe Sanh for the fourth straight day Thursday. It was the most sustained attack since the base was reopened Jan. 30 to support the South Vietnamese drive into Laos. The heavy pounding was reminiscent of the 77-day siege of Khe Sanh in 1968.

Enemy gunners slammed 100 rounds into the base at daybreak Thursday, bringing the number of rounds Khe Sanh has taken in four days to about 400. No casualties were reported and damage was light because helicopters are moved out of the area until daylight operations begin.

South Vietnamese headquarters insisted the pullbacks in Laos were tactical, but the pilots said fighting was severe in some areas. They noted the South Vietnamese have abandoned two of their four fire bases south of Highway 9, the main Laos incursion route, and fallen back 15 miles in the past few days.

The South Vietnamese statement was supported in Washington by a Pentagon spokesman, Jerry W. Friedheim, who said the South Vietnamese troops are engaged in "mobile maneuvering" and were proceeding "according to plan." Asked if the maneuvering was a synonym for retreat, he replied: "No."

Landing Zone Brown and South Viet retreat route.

The heaviest fighting raged around Landing Zone Brown, one of the bases th South Vietnamese 1st Infantry Division had planned to use for raids southward against a branch of the Ho Chi Minh Trail before heading for home.

Reports from the northern front said the North Vietnamese, while keeping up a barrage, launched ground probes against Brown. U.S. helicopter gunships were called out for missions after nightfall to try to beat back the attackers.

"It looks very bad," a helicopter pilot told Associated Press correspondent Holger Jensen. During the severe fighting all correspondents are forbidden from entering Laos.

"They can talk about helicopter mobility all they want," said one pilot, Fred Few, of Chattanooga, Tenn., "but from where I'm flying there's only one way to describe it-retreat, and a bad one."

South Vietnamese officers in the field said the defenders pulled out of Brown Tuesday night and the North Vietnamese moved in, only to be hit by U.S. air strikes.

When the South Vietnamese returned to Brown Wednesday morning they said they found 80 enemy bodies and some of their own ammunition blown up. The South Vietnamese reinforced and the enemy resumed a methodical shelling.

One American pilot said the base had to fall because "they're hitting it around the clock."

Some of the defenders at Brown were troops of South Vietnam's 1st Division, who reached that position after pulling out of Fire Base Lolo, five miles to the west, late Monday and early Tuesday.

There was no firm report on casualties in the fighting at Brown. South Vietnamese headquarters said government forces had lost 16 men killed and 190 wounded in three days of fighting around Fire Base Lolo.

Angela Davis' Bail Stalled; Judge Disqualifies Himself

SAN RAFAEL, Calif. (AP)-Angela Davis' effort to win dismissal or at least go free on bail, on charges of kidnapping and conspiracy was stalled when the judge hearing the black militant's case disqualified himself, postponing the case indefinitely.

Miss Davis, 27-year-old former UCLA philosophy instructor and advocate of Communism, is charged along with Ruchell Magee, 31-year-old black convict, in the Martin Courthouse escape attempt which took four lives last Aug. 7.

Magee, chained to a chair bolted to the floor because he disrupted previous hearings, demanded that Superior Court Judge John P. McMurray disqualify himself.

After a long recess and consultation with attorneys for all parties, Judge McMurray declared, "I'm going to allow Mr. Magee's affidavit for cause. It disqualifies me to act further in this case."

Howard Moore Jr., chief counsel for Miss Davis, asked the judge to consider her petition for bail.

Magee said, "I object. Any further proceedings by this judge at this time would be a violation of my rights."

"I will refuse to act any further in this matter," the judge ruled, adjourning court indefinitely.

McMurray, 26, was assigned from sparsely populated Inyo County in southeastern California after all Marin County judges had disqualified themselves because of friendship for Superior Court Judge Harold J. Haley, killed in the August break. Two black convicts and an accomplice also were killed. Magee himself was wounded seriously.

The California Judicial Council now will have to find a new judge to start all over.

Attorney Moore said he intended to ask the Court of Appeals and possibly the State Supreme Court and federal courts to try to get bail for Miss Davis.

Moore insisted there was "no split at all" between the defendants, although Magee had stalled her bail hearings and at Tuesday's session had shouted sarcastically to her, "You're a real friend!"

Magee is under indictment charged with actually killing Judge Haley and also jointly under indictment with Miss Davis, who is accused of masterminding the escape plot and furnishing the four guns that were used.

Beatles Vie For Limelight

LONDON (AP)-Three of the squabbling Beatles are fighting for supremacy in the British pop records charts.

George Harrison, youngest and quietest of the Beatles, topped the charts for seven weeks with his pop hymn, "My Sweet Lord." World sales now exceed three million.

This week Harrison was ousted from top spot by fellow Beatle Paul McCartney, whose "Another Day" was written with his American wife Linda Eastman, Paul says. Meanwhile, John Lennon and the Plastic Ono Band have clocked into the charts in 195th place with "Power to the People."

Harrison was always in the shadow of the gifted Lennon and McCartney, the song-writing team that set a new style. Now he has become an international star in his own right.

He still tops the lucrative long-play records charts with his triple-record album, "All Things Must Pass." It has sold more than two million copies throughout the world.

For the past two months alone, Harrison's earnings as a solo artist total $2.4 million.

Under his contract the money is divided five ways, so that Harrison gets only a fifth, but meanwhile of course he gets a similar rakeoff from the other Beatles' individual earnings.

The Beatles' musical links were broken a long time ago in arguments involving and jeaousy and pride. Their financial links still hold, but that could change.

Social Security Benefits Up 10%

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon signed into law Wednesday a bill boosting Social Security benefits by 10 per cent across the board, but he called on Congress to vote the money now to pay for it.

Nixon said the rise in benefits is urgently needed, but he said in a statement that increasing them without providing the financing could be inflationary.

"If these urgently needed Social Security increases are enacted but the means to pay for them are currently defaulted, we are faced with the very real prospect of increased inflation," the President said.

He urged congress to act promptly on a proposal to raise the annual tax base on which Social Security benefits are paid from $7,800 to $9,000.

Congress approved that increase in the tax base, but delayed the effective date until Jan. 1, 1972. This was in line with the recommendation of Arthur F. Burns, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, and Private economists.

Nixon also called on Congress to approve a cost-of-living escalator clause in Social Security benefits, a proposal he included in his budget for the 1972 fiscal year.

Nixon sought a 6 per cent increase in Social Security benefits tied to an automatic cost-of-living increase.

"Only if such a provision is included can we overcome the rigidity of the Social Security benefit system, and the long delay that ensues before senior citizens receive the real benefits of a system that mose have supported by their contributions throughout their adult lives," he said.

The bill, rushed through Congress, also raises the national debt limit by a record $35 billion to $430 billion. It also allows the Treasury Department to exceed the 4 1/2 per cent interest rate ceiling on $10 billion worth of bonds.

SST May Cause Skin Cancer

WASHINGTON (AP)—House deliberation on the U.S. supersonic jetliner's fate began Wednesday with opponents bringing in new scientific contentions that the plane could cause an increase in skin cancer cases.

At the same time, Sen. William Proxmire, D—Wis., charged that White House intervention gagged a government scientist who claims the skin cancer increase could range from 23,000 to 103,000 cases in the United States alone.

A House vote on keeping SST development alive with $290 million is set for Thursday with leaders guardedly confident the money will be approved.

"It's going to be tough," Democratic leader Carl Albert of Oklahoma told newsmen. "We're not going to get as many votes percentage wise as we did last time."

The Senate is expected to vote next week on whether to continue to finance development of two SST prototypes for flight tests now scheduled to begin in March 1973.

Commission Urges Population Control

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Commission on Population Growth and the America Future recommended Wednesday that the nation develop an explicit policy on population control.

The recommendation for adoption of a national population-control position is contained in the commission's interim report to President Nixon summing up its first year of work.

"Despite the pervasive impact of population growth on every facet of American life, the United States has never developed a deliberate policy on the subject," the commission report says.

"There is need today for the nation to consider population growth explicitly and to formulate policy for the future," the report states.

The commission headed by John D. Rockefeller III notes that at times a low birth rate is a problem and at other times population explosions cause concern.

"The tension between population and the economy, population and the environment, population and government services, is with us at all times in different forms and degrees," the commission says. "Whether we wish to alter it or to live with it, we cannot afford to ignore it."

The commission, which has another year to run, plans to offer specific recommendations on just what the policy should be in its final report. But the panel says the nation probably will grow to 300 million population regardless of any policy that may be established, with the real queston whether it would level off there.

"Whether we add that fourth hundred million may be determined by what Americans do about family size and population in the next couple of decades," the report says.

While staggering figures could be projected for the future, the report says, they can fluctuate broadly through only small changes in family size.

If families in the United States average only two children and immigration continues at the current level, population would still reach 266 million by the end of the century, the report says. If the average family has three children, it would reach 321 million. "One hundred years from now, the two-child family would result in a population regardless of any policy that may be established, with the real question whether it would level off there.

Mount Holyoke Faculty Proposes Winter Term

The Mount Holyoke College faculty has augmented the possibilities for departmental, interdepartmental and personal exploration by passing legislation proposing a winter term at Mount Holyoke.

The inclusion of the winter term offers several calendar advantages. By starting the first semester a few days earlier, final examinations for the fall term will be over before the Christmas vacation period. The vacation will be followed by the winter term offering in the month of January, and the spring term will begin about February 1. In adopting the new calendar Mount Holyoke is the first college in the Valley to alter its schedule to conform with Five-College recommendations.

Some courses will pinpoint a problem and delve into it. Others will take a broader view and attempt to correlate disciplines not usually allied. Experimentation will be encouraged on the part of both faculty and students. A Winter Term Committee consisting of three faculty members will coordinate the winter curriculum with students invited to appoint a parallel committee of the same size to consult with the faculty committee.

Students may elect, in the course of their four years, to take winter term offerings without regard to major, course of study or class. Many courses will be kept at seminar size and individual programming will be a large factor in the January segment. There will be no grading system attached to the winter term and successful completion of the term will depend neither on grades nor standing in class.

Although a student shall, in order to graduate, be enrolled in and complete two winter terms, they may be taken during any two winters the student selects, and should she wish to do so, she will be permitted to take more than the required two terms.

A faculty member "shall be expected to participate in the winter term in a manner to be agreed upon by the Winter Term Committee in consultation with the appropriate department, but in no more than two of each three winter terms."

Course Offered On Joint Waste Treatment

Joint waste treatment, an economical and effective method of treating sewage and industrial wastes together, will be the subject of a short course at UMass on March 22, 23, and 24.

The course is for industrial and municipal officials, consultants and all others concerned with waste treatment and water quality. It is sponsored by the Division of Continuing Education, the Environmental Engineering Program and the Water Resources Research Center.

Full information on registration, fees and the program is available from the Division of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center, UMass Amherst 01002.

Soviet Union Accuses Peking Of Playing "Dangerous Game"

MOSCOW (AP)—The Soviet Union, breaking a long silence in its ideological warfare with Communist China, accused Peking on Wednesday of playing a "dangerous game" by trying to improve relations with the United States.

In an almost simultaneous attack, Peking charged that Moscow was stepping up the arms race to "oppress the broad masses at home and maintain their colonial rule abroad."

The sharply worded attacks ended nearly two years of relative verbal peace and confirmed the belief that the signs of better relations between the two Communist powers are strictly superficial.

Using a new review of Chinese foreign policy as a forum, the Kremlin maintained that the Chinese have "reached an understanding" with Washington to stay out of the Vietnam war as long as American ground forces stay out of North Vietnam."

It accused Peking of obstructing Soviet aid to North Vietnam and helping to create favorable conditions for the United States to widen the war in Southeast Asia.

Peking's "tendency to improve relations with American imperialism, while sharpening relations with the Socialist community, are the two sides of this dangerous game the Maoists are playing in the world arena," said the 192-page paperback book published by the Soviet Academy of Sciences and available in Moscow bookshops this week

The book was published too late to take into account the latest U.S. gesture toward Peking-the lifting of restrictions on American travel to Communist China-a move to which China has shown no willingness to respond.

Peking's attack described the Kremlin leaders as "the worst enemies of the people-wolves in sheep's clothing," and was sharply critical of the Soviet-bloc invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968. The criticism was contained in editorials published in three newspapers in commemoration of 100th anniversary of the Paris commune, the insurrection of 1871. Text of the 15,000-word article was broadcast by Peking and monitored in Tokyo.

It called on world Communists and the "revolutionary people" to keep on criticizing Soviet revisionism or the leadership through to the end, and declared this struggle is a protracted one and is by no means over.

Fall Room Choosing Slated April 20-23

University residence hall room-choosing will be held Tuesday, April 20 through Friday, April 23. The room-choosing process will be split into three periods the Housing Office announced. On Tuesday, April 20, students who wish to remain in the same room they are now occupying for the Fall Semester will reserve their rooms; on Wednesday, April 21, students who wish to move to different rooms within the residence hall in which they are presently residing may register; on Thursday and Friday, April 22 and 23, students who wish to move to available rooms in any dormitory throughout campus may sign up, they said.

Heads of Residence will provide assistance in this process each day after 7:00 p.m., according to the Housing Office.

Dance Group To Present Master Class

The Alvin Ailey American Dance Theatre will present a special master class at 10:30 a.m. today, and will also provide a lecture/demonstration at 3:30 p.m. as part of their three-day visit to the University under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council.

Both programs will be offered in the studio of Women's Physical Education Building, and are open without charge to those holding tickets to either of the company's two evening performances in Bowker Auditorium.

The Ailey Company performed to two sell-out crowds in Bowker Auditorium (Tuesday and Wednesday).

Waste Of Time

The nation's leaders were being called "unresponsive". The President was asking the nation to lower its voices. There was an uneasiness in this country which pervaded every phase of life. That was America in January of 1969.

It is now a little over two years later. The Student Senate on this campus is being labeled "unresponsive". The President of the Senate, in a letter in today's COLLEGIAN, emplores his fellow students to "stop screaming." There is a certain sense of uneasiness evident all over campus.

The similarities between the two periods can be easily drawn but this serves only as an exercise. The differences can be seen just as easily. What is more important than carrying out the comparison, however, is determining what can be done on this campus so that what emerges from this situation will not be the same as what has developed nationally. In other words, the problems must be solved.

It seems that "the" thing to do these days is to chastise the workings and actions of the Senate. This trend has developed since the recent pay raise controversy and has gained momentum with the problems of Coolidge Lower and the vending machines.

There are a few things worth remembering, however. The Senators who populate that legisiative body are elected by the students and may be recalled by them at any time. They are supposed to serve the interests of their constituency and, if they are not accomplishing this end, should be removed.

There is a major difference between the legislative situation on campus and nationally; here the students are the majority. It is your voting power which decides the issues. It is not a matter of going out canvassing to convince voters that your position is just and right. You are the voters.

Sure the Senate makes mistakes and many times is guilty of elitism. The charges made within the last few weeks are not totally without foundation. Yet if the students have learned one lesson in the last few years, it should be that yelling and screaming achieve nothing. Find out how your Senator has voted and if you discover that he is "unresponsive" to the desires of the student body, remove him. If we can't make the system work here, any nationai movement is a waste of time.

"It's Not All Profit, You Know — We Spend A Lot On Political Contributions And On Campaigns To Propagandize You"

Richard C. Hanson

A Man Who Knows

He was a beautiful man, that Dick Gregory; "Brother Dick Gregory."

People who crowded their way into the Ballroom saw him stomp all over the bad things in life and felt the warmth of the "universal" truth pouring from his heart, because Dick Gregory cares about the way people are living their lives.

"Coffee causes stomach cancer..nicotine destroys the sex organs," he said, not concerned with whether you smoked or drank coffee, but more with the way the Federal Government doesn't give people "informaton you can use."

Bitterness cut through his humor when he mentioned the politics of America, despair carried his pleas about the way people are living. Gregory feels the pain of what "man has dirtied up."

His mockery of social and legal norms of our society prompted a story about when he was in Africa; "There is no homosexuality in Africa...men walk down the street holding hands."

A sharp pain of anxiety ran up the spine when he ended the story by saying that "the only place our hang-ups are legal is here." Dick Gregory is right about us all, including himself. The foundations on which are morality, and ways of relating to other people, are based have left us as shells of what human beings can be. We are a society that has "dirtied" everything from our own sexuality ("We use our ability to create life, for recreation... and only with the lights out.") to the way we keep ourselves alive ("how many poisons are there in the food you eat?").

* * * *

The crisp cool air rushed into my room, as I opened the window. Already, early in the morning, the sounds of trucks and cranes swept in with cool air. i took a deep breath of it all.

Down at Tilson's farm, I remembered someone telling me, all the animals don't smell like animals; the pigs are clean and the sheep are numbered, in small pens. Everything is sterile down there, the people are manufacturing animals.

The cold air gave me a pleasant feeling of being alive for a moment. Somewhere in the distance, amongst all those buildings, I could hear the harsh whine of a hydraulic life. I breathed that in, too. Then closed the window.

When Dick Gregory predicted that "in 18 months to two years" the United States will become a dictatorship, he was referring to the fearful growth of our military and its activities, including keeping files on one out of every eight Americans. When he alleged that "the C.I.A. was involved" in the death of President John Kennedy, the point was that the government has decided not to release any vital information on the Kennedy assasination for 100 years.

The society that Dick Gregory weeps for through his humor is one which doesn't let people be what they can. It is a society that won't be honest with itself, and in turn which produces individuals who have a hard time being honest with themselves. It is a whole country just full of people who don't know why they hate each other and don't understand their own bodies.

It isn't hard to see why present day America is capable of indiscriminate bombings or, for that matter, massacres. The American growing up, is presented with a world full of onesided truths and moralistic perversion. It is a struggle to emerge from everything you have been taught and expected to feel to be a human being. It is difficult to make yourself emerge as whatever you can be.

"Students got a big job," Gregory said, methodically. He knows what the struggle is like.

The Dropouts

WASHINGTON–It's become quite a fad for young folks to drop out of society and "return to the land." Everyone is very sympathetic to the poeple who reject the society they live in, but the big question is: How many people can a country afford to have drop out?

If everyone drops out, this is what could happen in a few years:

Myra Landon and George Coleman, two students fed up with fighting in a world they never made, decide to leave college and join friends who are working on a wheat-germ farm in Florida. But first they must rent a U-haul trailer to take their belongings. They consult the yellow pages of the phone book, call several companies listed, but get no answer.

So they get in George's battered car and drive to one of the U-haul lots. The office is padlocked. A bearded fellow sitting there whittling says, "Ain't nobody there. They took off for surfing in Hawaii 'bout six months ago. Said they'd had it."

Myra and George drive to several other trailer companies, but find they are also closed down. By this time their radiator is steaming, and they stop at a gas station. A man comes out and George says, "The car seems to be overheating, and we have to drive to Florida. Could you fix it?"

"Don't have anyone to fix it. Last mechanic I had went off to India to find the secret of life."

"But couldn't you do anything?" Myra asks.

"Don't have no spare parts," the man says. "Haven't been able to get any for 14 months. Nobody works in the auto parts factory any more. Everyone left to do his own thing."

"Well, could you at least give us some water for the car?"

"Don't have no water. All the mains are broke, and we can't get anyone to repair them. Water company says it won't get to this are for another five months. I'll sell you a gallon of gas if you want. Have to ration it."

"A gallon of gas!" George says. "We're trying to get to Florida."

"I'd like to oblige but we're on strict rationing since all the oil workers decided to quit and go on welfare."

Myra and George start to get hungry. They walk over to a coffee shop which is locked. So is a hamburger stand and a pizza parlor. So they find a supermarket. They walk in and all the shelves are bare.

An old man sitting by the cash register says, "You folks looking for something?"

Myra says, "A loaf of bread?"

The man laughs. "I haven't seen a loaf of bread in months. The last bakery in the state shut down in July. All the employees took off for a rock festival in Mexico City and never came back. Got some pickles back there if you want them. That's about the only food left. As soon as I sell them I'm going on Social Security."

"But we haven't eaten since yesterday."

"I appreciate the problem. But we just can't get any food. You would think with all the young people going back to the farms that there would be a surplus. But they just say they want to grow enough for themselves, and not make any profit for a capitalistic society."

Myra says, "It's not fair. I think the government should pass a law allowing only a certain number of people to drop out every year."

The old man says, "I couldn't agree with you more. It sure takes the fun out of dropping out when everybody decides to do it at the same time."

Baseball Addicts

Winter pushes Spring upon us and trees start to dress for the season. Their long, cold, limbs are quickly and beautifully covered with gay colors ranging from a scolding scarlet, to a gleeful gold.

Buds in the branches strain and strain until the blossoms can no longer hold themselves back and they are forced to array themselves by the thousands, looking like colored confetti being strewn across the countryside.

The cold, hard, ground gradually relaxes beneath the gentle nudging of the sweet Spring sun. The ice-patched paths and flower-filled fields are gently being replaced by soft, squishy grass.

The rains come regularly with rhythm to wash the heather and the hills and the flowers and the fields. Nature's spring-cleaning is complete.

Animals and insects, great and minute, venture into the open, omnipresent odor of delicious, clean, clear, fresh, Spring air.

Spring means many things to many people. To the Bastions of Baseball, Spring means soft ground to caress active feet. It means fine, firm sod to brace one best against the pinch of sharp, stabbing cleats which regularly impale themselves in the soft grass or ground. Sweet Spring sings the song of the sneakers, and beckons to boys for bats...and baseball!!

Basketball hoops are laid to ret as baseball mitts are resurrected. Rubber-soled shoes stand solid against the sure sod and well-worn wool socks caress the convex calf. Artificial lights are to be replaced by the long, lingering light of Old Sol, himself.

The chameleon, "sport", is also adapting itself to the season.

The elephantine sphere becomes the lilliputian orb. Men who formerly succumed to the lure of the court, now turn their all-consuming interest to the diamond. Baseball woos.....and wins!

Visors snugly hug furrowed brows and gym shorts are lengthened into nickers. Smoke-filled courts are replaced by clean, clear, sweet, fresh air. Heat induced perspiration become wind-cooled sweat.

Breathing becomes slower, and more relaxed. Five becomes nine, and the whistle becomes a signal. Fast dribbles turn into slides, and the dirt-scarred uniforms replace smooth, slick floor-burns.

Spectators adjust quickly to the outdoor move. Cheers and jeers, easily heard in the enclosed arena, now increase in volume and intensity.

Threats become more and more vehement as the innings pass. Team loyalty has long been infused throughout the bleachers. Grandstand authorities argue over was-he-safe-or-was-he-out. And from the pop fly, the fists fly.

Each win is like a shot in the arm. Each loss is like a drying-out period. Like morphine and alcohol, baseball too, has its addicts!!

Letters To The Editor

Lower Your Voices

To the Editor:

The Student Senate has been receiving an undue amount of criticism from those who seem to have vested interests on campus or who are merely in disagreement with certain resolutions of the Senate. There are several comments about the Senate in yesterday's Collegian that I would like to respond to. Firstly, allow me to observe that the Senate is a democratically elected body and is only as good as those elected to it. There are now vacancies in the Senate and one of the reasons for these vacancies and this lack of interest is the apparent belief by some students that the Senate is to be ignored and if ignored it will have no effect on their lives; this is obviously not the case, nor should it be the case. Secondly, it is frustrating to debate and then pass or defeat legislation only to have students who were too lazy and apathetic to become involved in the entire process stand up and decry that the Senate is a monster and must be stopped.

In yesterday's Collegian there was a news story (actually it should have been considered an editorial) about the lottery system for use of dormitories during vacation periods and the attempts of Coolidge Lower to defeat this system before it is even implemented.The statement was made that the "...Senate seems more concerned in supporting the administration than in working for the students." That is complete absurdity. There are students who cannot go home during vacation periods and they should not be discriminated against. Under the Senate lottery system each dormitory will be used during a vacation period once every fifteen years at the most unless they volunteer to house students more often. This certainly is not that great an imposition and is certainly a great improvement over previous methods.

I also feel compelled to comment on a letter written by my good friend Peter Pascarelli in regard to the Senate position on the use of vending machine profits. It must be understood that many dormitories have petitioned the Senate within the past two years requesting that they should be able to own their own vending machines or that they should be allowed to receive the profits from vending sales. It is true that the Athletic Department built up the vending machine business on campus and it is also true that these profits go toward athletic scholarships, but this topic was also discussed at this years SWAP Conference and there was general agreement that the receipt of $50,000 by the Athletic Council from vending sales should be phased out and those monies should revert to the dormitories in which the vending machines were located. This topic has been discussed for a long time and the Senate finally made its decision.

This is where I personally resent the remarks made by Peter Pascarelli. There was no "self-interest" involved; the dormitories want this money, not the Student Senate. We have always attempted to protect minority rights without prostituting the majority, especially when funding organizations. The Senate helps fund the Rugby Club, it bought the shells which the Crew Team uses, it funded the Flying Redmen until they could fund themselves. We have been open and have represented students to the best of our ability.

The officer pay bill this year was an instance when the Senate was apparently out of line with the feeling on campus (at least out of line with the vast majority of the 9% of the student body that voted). I feel that the student body was wrong, but the Senate does not doubt the right of the student body to be wrong and make their decision binding. Peter's letter is alarming when it points to the end of intercollegiate athletics; something which is not about to occur or to be caused by the Senate. At least not from past actions.

I for one am tired of people who do not agree with the Senate always screaming that we in the Senate are "elitist". If the people who sit in the dorms, fraternity houses, and the Campus Center and watch the "Newlywed Game" or who go out and drink or smoke themselves into oblivion every night would just get involved in a few activities on campus and do something before the fact rather than bitching after the fact, maybe we all would be better off.

So, to Nancy Costa who wrote the article on Coolidge Lower, and to Peter Pascarelli, I say thank you for being involved and for raising issues, but fuck you for biasing those issues. If more people would talk with the Senate rather than screaming at us there would be a better student government.

Glenn Elters

Fun In The Future

To the Editor:

Ladies and gentlemen of the committee, the future University is the Fun University of last spring's strike. The Fun University will be one where students need not worry about courses and grades, because fascist teachers who required such things will be banished. (They are not fun people).

Over 100 years ago the students at the University of Paris gave us a view of the future when they established the most fun place in the history of man. It lasted a bare three months. But like the "Titanic" it was one of a kind. The strike was the radical changing of the university from the work to the fun university. The work university was a place which trained people so they could get jobs and not be a burden on anyone else.

The Fun University was and will be the staging area for all night parties. The Fun University was and will be a place where students and faculty get together and teach each other how to have a good time. The Fun University was and will be the place where the packies make 24 hr. deliveries. The Fun University was and will be a place from which no one will ever get a job. (But you'll be having such a good time you won't want to leave).

The Fun University will be a place where in the words of Alfred E. Newman, "The Chicago 7 will be a race like the Indy "500", the Watts Festival will be an annual celebration at the G.E. Light Bulb Division, and at a pot party, dinnerware will be sold."

The future university is red--red because that's the color of your eyes after an all night bash. The red-Fun University will be a place where no one gets up before noon, a place better than an expanded School of Education. In the process the University will become a truly sincere cushion for those who can't face life.

Mark Johnson

Majority Rule

To the Editor:

As a result of Student Senate bill 71-S70, Coolidge Lower was chosen through the lottery system to stay open for Spring Vacation. Residents of Lower, Middle, and Upper overwhelmingly supported petitions objecting to the absurdity of making a twenty-two story tower vulnerable to vandalism and destruction by keeping it open during the vacation. These petitions were submitted to Tom Trotman, Associate Dean of Students.

Our Head of Residence was assured of support in our movement to keep Coolidge Lower closed by the Asst. Area Coordinator and the Area Coordinator for Hampden area, and by Mr. Trotman. Then, on Tuesday, March 16th, three days before vacation, we were informed that even if we did decide to stay closed there would be a very good chance that our dorm would be opened up and our rooms used anyway.

We were told we had not taken the option of finding another dorm to volunteer in our place and stay open for the vacation. This is not true. We wrote to every Head of Residence, by means of a circular, asking if they would volunteer their dorm for spring break. Miss Pat Beharry, vice-president of the Student Senate, informed us that we had written to the wrong people. Great!

Our "responsible, representative," Student Senate passed bill 71-S70, which states: "Whereas all dorms remaining open presents security and financial problems and...Whereas we likewise recognize the concerns of students over the involuntary use of their rooms during these (vacation) times," a dorm would still be open during vacation periods. (Sounds a little contradictory!) We feltthat if the Student Senate was truly representative of the feelings of the students they would have passed a motion voicing their opposition to the policy that the university reserves the use of students rooms over vacation periods. They did not and that is all in the past.

As for the present, we are writing this letter to explain some of our views. We do not wish to screw our fellow students who are forced to stay here over vacation. However, majority rule has often been a power in this country and right now all the present residents of Coolidge Lower refuse to accept the responsibility forced on us by our "representatives."

COOLIDGE LOWER WILL BE CLOSED FOR SPRING VACATION

Concerned Students of Coolidge Lower

Editorial Points

If Coolidge lower doesn't have to remain open during vacation, then why should any other dorm. Then again, there has to be a dormitory open for those students who don't have any place to go. How about every administrator and faculty member taking a student home for vacation.

I don't want to be around when sweet Peppermint Patty discovers that Chuck, who she thinks "kind of likes me", can't stand her. Well, such is life.

Pure Democracy

To the Editor:

1) In response to the Collegian article titled "Coolidge Lower Battles Lottery": The Student Senate voted before Christmas this lottery system as the fairest method of sharing the obligation of providing housing for students who must remain on campus during vacation periods. Miss Costa's article is hardly a news item; not only does she live in Coolidge, the dorm in question, but she shows her ignorance of the entire issue and past administrative and Student Senate actions.

2) In response to "An End to Athletic's" by Peter Pascarelli, I'm sure Peter believes in the pure democracy of local control over dorm life, so I assume his tirade against the Senate's attempt to give to the dorm's the control of its vending machines and the profits derived from them is due to his ignorance of the issue. Peter does not pay a "tax" on the coke in his freezer to support the Athletic Dept. (he lives off campus). The Senate, and I personally felt that the issue was not athletics: yes or no. It was whether dorm students should support athletics against their wishes. If a separate dorm wants to give these profits to the Athletic Dept. that's fine; but it should be a dorm decision!

I think this is one time the Senate was representing the interests of the individual student by attempting to give him more control over his own life and life style.

Have A Fruit Salad

To the Editor:

Right now, there is a long term referendum occurring in all Dining Commons on this campus. This referendum is to determine whether students will support the migrant farmworkers in the United Farm Workers, even if it means some slight inconvenience. The Administrtion has agreed to label all lettuce served in the DC'S, and to stop buying scab lettuce if it goes uneaten. That means that students have the power to drive scab (non-UFW) lettuce off this campus, just by refusing to eat it. When the sign on the serving line says non-UFW lettuce, just pass by the lettuce bin, take a fruit salad or cottage cheese, but please don't take that scab lettuce.

Sound inconvenient? Well, if occasionally avoiding lettuce is too great an inconvenience for you, just stop yourself and think about it next time you start talking about ending poverty in this country. Sound trivial? I rather doubt that the migrant farm workers whose average annual income falls below $2000 per capita, would consider it trivial.

Please, boycott non-UFW lettuce, eat only lettuce picked under legitimate union contracts.

Look At The Record

To the Editor:

Politics has become a great source of apathy in America. Rightfully so, because it becomes extremely difficult to determine who is sincere as opposed to one who is out to get votes only. The only safe way is to study the candidate's voting record and actions over a lengthy period of time. We challenge anyone to study George McGovern's voting record and actions over the past ten years and say that he is not sincere. On September 23, 1963, Senator McGovern stood up in the Senate floor and denounced our involvement in Vietnam, which at that time was only slight. He has had an Economic Conversion Post-War Bill in the Senate for many years, which is still to be voted on. Furthermore, Sen. McGovern has co-authored the McGovern-Hatfield Bill to have all American troops out of Vietnam on or before Dec. 31, 1971. In 1967, he voted against an extension of the present Draft Law and needless to say, is opposed to this year's extension of the Draft.

Current polls have Sen. McGovern behind Sen. Muskie who is still unannounced as a Presidential candidate. A careful study of Muskie's record will show that it is only recently that he has become a peace candidate and his consistency is questionable. Must we be deceived again into thinking a man is a peace candidate when his actions show otherwise? Sen. McGovern is sincere and needs our support.

Letters to the Editor must be typed, double spaced, at sixty spaces and must carry the writer's signature, address, and telephone number (all of which will be withheld upon request). The limit is one page and the deadline is 5 p.m. the day prior to intended publication. The editors reserve the right to edit all letters.

The same rules apply to Editorial Points except that the limit of these is 25 words. No prizes will be awarded or gifts given out. This is not a contest. it's simply a forum for those of you who don't feel like writing a whole letter or who don't know more than 25 words.

JUST SWORN IN—Joyce Ann Jacobs of Natick was sworn into the United States Army Nurse Corps by her father, Lieutenant Colonel Joseph P. Jacobs (U.S. Army retired) recently. Presiding at the ceremony held at Dickinson Hall, were Colonel George I. Connolly, Jr., Professor of Military Science, and his staff. She is presently a second semester senior nursing student at UMass. After passing the UMass nursing state board exam in August, Joyce will be assigned to San Antonio, Texas for an intensive army orientation course.

Recruiting Reported Down; Beginning Salaries Affected

Not only is college recruiting activity down this year but the dollar value of beginning salaries offered to graduates is beginning to be affected, according to a survey taken at mid-point in the current season at the UMass and 139 other institutions.

The rise in beginning salaries, usually at the rate of 5 percent to 6 percent per year, had continued unabated during the past decade but this year it's a different story, according to the College Placement Council's second Salary Survey report of the season. Reporting on the survey is Robert J. Morrissey, placement director at the University, one of 140 selected institutions participating.

I.E. Accounting Up

At the bachelor's degree level, only one curriculum realized a gain of 3 percent or more in dollar value since the close of the last recruiting season. Industrial engineering went up 3.3 percent to $877 per month. Last year the largest percentage increase in the comparable period was 8.5 percent for accounting. This year the accounting increase since June was 1.7 percent to $850.

Three curricula recorded dollar averages slightly below last year's closing figures--business, $717; marketing and distribution, $676; and the chemistry-mathematics-physics group, $794. The remaining bachelor's curricula covered in the on-going study experienced modest increases ranging up to 2.9 percent.

Chemical engineering at $928 continued to command the highest dollar average at the bachelor's level, followed by metallurgical engineering at $890, and mechanical engineering at $886.

MBA Holds Up

At the master's level, the MBA category held up better than most curricula in the number of offers reported but it failed to show its usual strength in dollar average. In fact, its dollar average at mid-season was 3 percent below last year's closing figure. Although known to be a slow starter, last year at this time its dollar average was 4 percent above the close of the previous season.

MBA candidates with a technical undergraduate degree still received the highest average offers at $1,075, although this was a drop from $1,112 in June. Chemical engineering majors were next at $1,055, a gain of 1.8 percent over $1,036 in June. MBA candidates with a non-technical background had an average of $1,018, down from $1,044 in June.

Data for this on-going study by the College Placement Council, limited to male students, cover actual offers made by business and industrial firms as submitted to February 16 by 140 representative colleges and universities from coast to coast. The council issues three men's Salary Survey reports a year-in January, March, and late June-and a report on women's salary offers in July.

Accounting Firm Aids HRA Seminar

Six specialists from the international accounting and management consulting firm of Laventhol, Krekstein, Horwath and Horwath are participating this semester in the senior seminar of the Department of Hotel and Restaurant Administration at UMass.

The lecturers are traveling from the firm's New York City office to the Amherst campus six times to provide students in hotel and restaurant administration information on the latest developments in the hospitality industry, and to provide instruction in areas ranging from the status and future of the resort hotel to the utilization of feasibility studies, according to Dr. Donald E. Lundberg, head of the department. Two sessions have already been held. Rocco Angelo provided an assesment of the resort hotel aspects of the industry and Iain Christie presented an analysis of the supply and demand of tourist services on both a domestic and international scale.

On March 19th, John D. Lesure will discuss the interpretation of hotel financial statements, while on April 9, Robert T. Leone will consider the development of franchising. Others scheduled are: April 23, Joseph Varge, "Hospitality Industry Feasibility Studies" and May 7, Anthony G. Marshall, "Forms of Ownership."

Contact with those participating in development of the hospitality industry is an excellent opportunity for hotel and restaurant administration students to gain valuable insights into the problems, trends, and procedures of the industry, Dr. Lundberg said.

The senior seminar is conducted by faculty members George R. Conrade, Albert L. Wrisley, and Charles E. Eshcach. It studies developments both within and without the industry of major importance to students about to take employment with hospitality industry companies.

American Oil Company

"Still here are you?" Paul Tauger, Socrate's most able student, (left) sets a precise aim as Charles Howland as Amynias (right) balances for the painful results in the UT production of The clouds. The revel with music will give two return performances, March 29 and 30, in Bartlett Auditorium.

You Don't Need A Weatherman

The Clouds, presented by the University of Massachusetts Theatre, has been chosen as one of ten finalists from 240 college and university entrants, in the American College Theater Festival and will perform at the Ford Theatre in Washington on April 3 and April 4.

Prior to the Washington performances, the University Theatre will present two special performances of The Clouds in Bartlett Auditorium on March 29 and March 30 at 8:00.

Tickets for these performances are $1.00 and can be purchased at the door only. Doors will open at 7:30 p.m. The Clouds is a good-natured but penetrating attack on intellectual pretention. Socrates, Athens' number one intellectual, is portrayed as a humbug fool whose major academic preoccupation is the intestinal tract of a flatulent gnat. The Gods (Goddesses) are capricious and more than a little dotty. Even the so-called normal types-who hunger after sophistic and philosophical learning - are decidedly sub-human, preoccupied more with cheating, lying, and obscenity than with intellectual achievement. The emphasis is on broad farce, gross satire, and often obscene buffoonery.

Orson Welles Films Tonight

By MARTIN PURVIS
MDC Staff

This week in Thompson 104 Cinemung will present films of Orson Welles, America's most individual and misunderstood director. In 1941 Welles, fresh from a series of stage successes (including the notorious "War of the Worlds" radio drama), stormed into Hollywood and, at the age of twenty-five, made Citizen Kane--voted the greatest film of all time by an international poll of critics in 1962. Since Kane Welles has never again been granted total directorial autonomy and has acquired the reputation of being a difficult and capricious artist incapable of making commercially viable films.

Presented tonight will be:

8:00 A TOUCH OF EVIL (1958) After a ten year hiatus in Europe, Welles returned to America to make the financially disastrous but critically well-received, A Touch of Evil. Fortunately this is one of the least interfered with of Welles's films and features Marlene Dietrich, Charlton Heston, Joseph Cotton, Zsa Zsa Gabor, Mercedes McCambridge, and Janet Leigh -- each of whom is cast in a very uncharasteric role. Welles uses his famous floor-based lighting and camera positions to render his grotesque vision of the venal, raucous American hick.

10:00 MR. ARKADIN (1951-55) Welles surreal variation of the theme of Citizen Kane. Often mistakenly called an innovator, Welles simply assimilated all existing cinematic technique and used it more boldly than any of his peers. Welles uses a Hitchcock-like visual shorthand to identify characters but the motif on which the character is based is invariably some horrendous grotesquery. This is surely the least understood of all Welles's films.

Mass. Licenses Conversion To Photographs Now Complete

Registrar Richard E. McLaughlin announces that as of March 1, 1971 all Massachusetts Driver's Licenses have been converted to the new photographic license. It took two full years to complete the conversion of more than three million licenses, he said.

Every licensed operator has now received this new license with the exception of military personnel who are still on active duty.

During the cycle of conversion, license renewals were processed for two, three and four year periods in order to spread them evenly over a span of four years. All renewals as of March 1971 are for four years. The fee remains at $2.50 per year or $10.00 for the full four-year term.

Registrar McLaughlin said, "Applicants for licenses have been pleasantly surprised by the simple, fast and efficient method used to provide a complete photo license in a matter of minutes."

The security in the new license is ensured by several features: the color photo of the driver, signature of the individual, personal information and the Registrar's validating signature combined into a single photographic image which cannot be altered without the license being destroyed.

For added protection the print is laminated with a special plastic with a bond so strong that any attempt to peel it off, also destroys the license. The laminated print is then sealed in a vinyl pouch.

The use of this license as a means of identification is so positive that merchants should have little fear of its use by criminals for the cashing of stolen checks, minors purchasing liquor and the use of stolen credit cards etc.

WMUA To Rebroadcast Gregory

Due to the popularity and importance of the address given by Dick Gregory on Tuesday night in the S.U. Ballroom, in keeping with its duty, the staff of Cyclebreaker has decided to rebroadcast the speech in its entirety on Thursday night beginning at 6:30 P.M.

Beginning at nine and running to eleven will be Firesign Theater, a collection of recordings by Firesign that will not be released to the public, that have fallen into the grimey hands of WMUA, 91.1 FM.

'Charlie Brown' Music Sited

Poor old Charlie Brown continues to pick up nominations and awards in many fields. The song score from the feature film, "A Boy Named Charlie Brown," has been nominated for an Oscar by the Motion Picture Academy; and the album from the film has been nominated for a Grammy Award by the Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences.

Previously, the Charlie Brown TV shows have won an Emmy, a Peabody, and 15 other Emmy nominations. It looks like Charles Schulz is going for a grand slam this year. The newest PEANUTS TV show will be seen March 28 on CBS—TV (7 p.m. EST) and is called "Play It Again Charlie Brown."

Immunization Clinic Hours Announced

Due to the increased volume of immunizations given during the spring months, March 31 to May 27, the immunization clinic hours will be Wednesday 1:00 to 4:00 p.m. and Thursday 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. and 1:00 to 4:00 p.m. During this time period visits to the immunization clinic will be by appointment only. Call 5-0057.

Time Tax Refunds

BOSTON...It usually takes five or six weeks for the IRS to issue a refund if your tax return is correctly made out and filed early, Elmer H. Klinsman, Acting District Director for Massachusetts, said today.

If you do not receive your refund within this period, you should wait at least ten weeks after filing before writing the IRS. Writing earlier may only delay processing, he said.

To avoid refund delays, Mr. Klinsman said, check your return for accuracy and completeness. You should check to make sure all W-2 Forms are attached, the name and address and Social Security number on the name label are correct, and the return is signed.

Yellow fever immunizations, as usual, will be given only between 2:00 and 3:00 p.m. on Wednesdays.

UMass Junior Receives Purina Scholarship

Clifford Barry Starr, a Junior at UMass, has been selected to receive the Ralston Purina Scholarship Award for 1971-72, according to an announcement made in St. Louis by George H. Kyd, Director of Public Relations of Ralston Purina Company.

The Purina Scholarship amounts to $500. It is awarded each year to an outstanding junior or senior in the state universities and land-grant colleges in each of the 50 states, and in three Canadian agricultural colleges and in Puerto Rico.

Winners are selected at each college by a faculty scholarship committee on the basis of their scholastic record, leadership, character, ambition in agriculture and eligibility for financial assistance. Starr is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Myer Starr, Canton, Massachusetts.

Skiers Review Undefeated Season At Varsity M

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

Skiing coach Bill MacConnell recapped his teams drive to the New England championship yesterday at the last winter sports luncheon of the UMass Varsity M Club at the Newman Center.

"We do our thing at least a hundred miles from the campus, sometimes two hundred and not many people go to see us. To be exact there are only two spectators that attend our races," commented the coach.

"We've had an extremely busy and successful season behind us," he added. Busy was the right word as his skiers travelled weekend after weekend to different mountains around the New England area competing in alpine skiing against the best team around and in the end satisfaction for all this work came in the form of the New England title.

MacConnell gave a brief summary on the alpine events, "The downhill is the premier ski event with the object to get from the top of the hill to the bottom as fast as you can. Skiers reach speeds up to 80 miles per hour.

Slalom requires quick knee turns and the giant slalom combines high speed with quick turns with the skiers reaching speeds in excess of 40 miles per hour."

In competition six men perform on the hill with the best four results added up for the final score. Throughout this season MacConnell's skiers have been consistent in having five or six men finish the course every meet. "Our team strength is in our team skiing," the coach pointed out.

Last season the Redman skiers won the league championship and had the same men returning this season. For this reason MacConnell was pretty confident when he said he felt before the season that his team could win big this year.

The season got off to a big 17 second victory at Middlebury and from there on the margins of victory increased as the Redmen ran up an undefeated slate in the Osborne Division of the New England Intercollegiate Ski League.

This past weekend the skiers went to Wilcat and Cranmore Mountains for the New Englands and after the first day of competition they were ten seconds behind the team leader.

But on the second day the story was different as they put together their best team performance of the season and moved into first place by some 20 seconds for the title.

After the coaches comments, each member of the team had a few words with the general theme being praise to both the coach for the work he put in and praise for one another for jobs each did all season.

These skiers were co-captains-Jim Latimer and John Gray, Ted Martin, Jerry Curran, Chuck Walker and Curt Sayre.

IM Volleyball Won By PSD

By MICHAEL FOX
MDC Staff

Before a standing room only crowd (there were no bleachers) in Boyden Gymnasium, Phi Sigma Delta defeated Team, from the independent league, for the campus volleyball championship. The match displayed both great individual and team play.

Team open the game by losing the serve to Sigma Delta, who then ran off four straight points. Team persisted and answered with four points of their own to tie the game. Neither team was able to mount more than a two point lead, as the serve kept going back and forth without much scoring. However, with the game tied at 9-9 Team ran off six unanswered points to take the first game of the match 15-9.

What was most impressive so far was the play of Charles Shaffer as a spiker for Team. Using an obscure rule Team was able to switch after the serve to keep Shaffer on the spiking line.

With their backs to the wall Phi Sigma Delta blew open into a 5-1 lead on the strength of some fine passing. Team was only able to close within two points, as Sigma Delta took the second game 15-8 to tie the match.

The final game again was Sigma Delta blow open into a big lead, 6-1. Shaffer went to work for Team as, Nathanson, Kaplan Snyder, Pete and Jeff Oppenheim and Thomashon all fed him the ball at the net for the spike. This style of play saw Team take the lead 9-8. Having the balance of four good spikers in Paul Stack, Mark Del Sesta, Bob Fulty and Steve Schmoyer, Sigma Delta was able to wear Team down running six straight points for a 15-10 win and the championship. Sigma Delta's spikers were supported from the back line and the bench by Rich Lousararian, John Laczeck and Allan Speckin.

The final score was Phi Sigma Delta over Team 2-1.

Matmen Achieve Three Year Goal

By BOB GANLEY
MDC Staff

Before the 1970-71 wrestling season, Coach Homer Barr felt his Redmen had a chance to win the New England title and break Springfield's twenty year hold on the NEIWA championship. Few people believed him because there was no way anyone was going to beat the Chiefs. However, the people who counted most, the wrestlers, believed in themselves and their ability and the result was the most successful wrestling season in UMass history and a season which established UMass as a New England wrestling power.

The Redmen finished with a 15-3-1 dual meet record, which was one win short of the 16-4 record of a year earlier, and completed the season with the ultimate victory, a win over Springfield in the New Englands. UMass also qualified seven wrestlers for the NCAA tournament at Auburn University and will be one of best represented schools in the country.

Looking back over the season, it's hard to pinpoint the turning point which led the Redmen to such great heights. The team began the season with five straight wins,

During the past season, the program reached its climax, mainly due to the experience of the seniors and juniors and the addition of a few transfers to add to a not so great frosh team of last year. However, the season was anything but a breeze and for a while in February, it looked like the Redmen would have to struggle for a winning record.

UMass opened the year with wins over Tufts, 42-0, and a tough Rhode Island team, 22-11. The first real test of the season came against Harvard, and led by sophomore Ed Carlsson and senior Phil Davis, the Redmen topped the Crimson, 22-13 and upped their record to 3-0.

The record became 5-1 at the end of the semester as the Redmen travelled to New York for a quadrangular meet and won two out of three, beating NYU and Gettysburg while losing to West Chester State. Then came an absurd 40 day layoff due to vacation, exams, and semester break which does more to ruin the records of Umass sports teams than any five oppoenents could. Just as the basketball and hockey teams slumped after finals, so did the wrestlers. The slump began with a 17-17 tie against Yale in a meet which saw the Redmen down 17-9 with two matches left and rally behind the efforts of George Zguris and Carl Dambman.

Next came a disheartening 27-8 loss to Springfield and all UMass hopes of a New England championship seemed gone. This seemed even surer when the Redmen were upset 18-17 by Coast Guard and their record sagged to 5-3-1. However, the effects of the layoff were finally wearing away and the team began to wrestle up to its potential.

The week of February 7th proved to be a gratifying one as the Redmen equalled their seasonal win output with five victories. The first was a 42-0 romp over UConn followed by a sweep of a quintangular meet held at Boyden. The victims were Monmouth, Trenton St., Wesleyan and Maryland and suddenly the Redmen wrestlers put on a fantastic display of "gut" wrestling and simply won because they wanted to win more than any other wrestlers at the tourney. The team was conditioned not to accept or think about defeat and this theory paid off handsomely.

But wrestling, although classified as a team sport, involves individual performance that no other sport demands. A wrestler has a very lonely task to accomplish, just one on one, muscles against speed, right out on the mat with the whole world watching. A winner needs not share his elation with anyone else and a loser has no one else to blame. This is what makes wrestling one of the most mentally and definitely the most physically gruelling of college sports, and a great team must have great wrestlers.

The acknowledged cream of UMass' wrestling crop is 134 pounder Sheldon Goldberg. The two time New England champion was chosen by his teammates as the season's outstanding wrestler and the choice was obvious. Goldberg finished the season with a 17-0-1 record and his two year mark is now 29-2-4, which makes him the winningest wrestler in UMass history. Goldberg has not lost a match in New England competition (the two losses came in Pennsylvania), and he will be representing his team in th nationals for the second straight year.

Transfer Dave Amato proved to be a big asset to UMass' record with a 14-1 record and a second place finish in the tournament. Junior Dave Reynolds continued his great wrestling in the 126 lb. class, ending the season with an 11-2 mark and a two year tally of 21-7-1. Reynolds finished third in the New Englands and is also going to the nationals for the second year in a row.

The middleweights had an up and down year for UMass, but came through like champions in the tourney. Junior Clay Jester finished the season extremely strong after a midseason slump and finished with an 11-4 record and a third in the New Englands. Jester's two year record is 22-8-2 and will be making the trip to the nationals.

Brian Urquhart, Steve DelMaestro and Peter Rock split the duties at 150, with Urquhart doing the bulk of the work. Brian compiled a 7-3-1 record after sitting out last season with an injury, and, although he didn't place in the tourney, he scored valuable points for his team.

Jim Godkin took over the 158 lb. class at midseason, allowing Urquhart to move down a class, and ended up with a 5-3-3 record and a very important third place finish in the tourney. Coach Barr felt that this class would be a crucial one for the Redmen if they were to beat Springfield, and Godkin more than measured up to the task.

Junior Kent Mignocchi and Sophomore Ed Carlsson did most of the season's work at 167 and 177 respectively. Mignocchi finished at 7-7 while Carlsson was 11-4-1 and one of the teams clutch wrestlers. The unlimited class was split between Carl Dambman and Chris Hodson, as each took turns beating each other in practice. This duo made the heavyweight class, always a weak spot on the UMass team, one of its strong points and gave coach Barr a feeling of confidence if a match went right down to the wire. Dambman really jelled in the tournament, scoring three straight upsets, to win the heavyweight class and seal Springfield's doom.

But if any individuals deserve the credit for the development of the UMass wrestling program, it is the seniors. These are the guys who came here four years ago and pioneered the program to make it what it is today. George Zguris was probably the most underrated wrestler on campus until this year even though he had a New England title to his credit. His career record had been 14-10-1 until he reached his peak this winter. Ziggy compiled a 14-0 record and went to the finals for the third straight year and is going to the nationals for the third time.

Another notable senior contributor was 167 pounder Tom Young. Young earned a 26-6-3 record over his three year career and two New England titles. Up until two weeks ago, it looked like he would have a dissapointing senior year, but he rallied and was a crucial factor in UMass' tournament victory. But these aren't the only seniors who are responsible for the Redmen emergence. Mike Brauner, Nick DiDomenico, Phil Davis, Tom Andrewes and Ducan Innes all contributed greatly to the program, especially in other years. Brauner had a career mark of 18-7-2 wrestling at 150, 158 and 167; DiDomenico wrestled at 118 and had a three year record of 24-11. Davis was a handyman, filling in anywhere from 118 to 142 and was 16-11 during his career. Andrewes had a two year record of 18-3-2 and was a mainstay on the team. Innes was a transfer and wrestled in spots at 118 and 126.

And there must be credit given to the men who got the wrestlers here, mainly coaches Barr and Tunner Brosky. Both have done an excellent recruiting job despite limited funds and have gotten the most out of a less than demanding schedule. It is hoped that now that wrestling is at a highpoint, it will stay there and that UMass fans will give the wrestlers the credit they deserve so much.

slumped after the long semester break, and finished strong with ten straight victories. Coach Barr expressed his sentiments on the subject on the evening his team won the New England tournament. He emphasized the fact that the victory wasn't only a season long goal or a fluke which could be attributed to Springfield having a bad night. Instead, he stated that the Redmen had been working toward a goal of winning the New Englands for three years and a study of UMass wrestling over the past three years bears him out. Barr recruited strongly among the current senior and junior classes and the result was two consecutive New England championship freshman teams and it was these two teams which became the nucleus for the outstanding varsity teams of the past two years. Two years ago, the Redmen finished the season with an 11-6 record and a third place finish in the New Englands. Last year, with the added help of the second great frosh team, the Redmen finished 16-4 and closed the gap on Springfield by finishing second

There will be teams representing [illegible] New England states and three teams from New York. Host UMass has drawn the University of Vermont in its first game at 8:30. The second round will be played Friday in Boyden beginning at 10:30 a.m. with the semi-finals Saturday night at 6:00 p.m.

The finals are held on Saturday beginning at 10:00 a.m. The winner and runner up qualify for the Women's NIT to be held in North Carolina March 24-27. Tickets will be sold at the door, the cost is 50¢ per student and $1.00 per adult.

UMass is being lead by Nancy Lindberg, high scorer for the season with a 14.8 average who has recovered from a sprained ankle which kept her out of three games. Leslie Barselaar and Pat Bash, high rebounders, will be ready to battle it out under the boards against U Vermont's superior height. Others to see action will be co-captain Joyce Knappe, guards Dolly Lanibdin, Barbara Hern and Sue Chapman. Coach Farr says "If UMass can successfully stop UVM's fast break we should win this game."

AP Snubs Erving

Yesterday the Associated Press released its 1971 All-American college basketball team and to the surprise to all UMass and New England fans Julius Erving was left off not only the three teams picked but also the list of honorable mentions.

First team selections were Artis Gilmore of Jacksonville, Joe Ma Daniels of Western Kentucky, Sidney Wicks of U.C.L.A., Austin Carr of Notre Dame and Dean Meminger of Marquette. There were no real surprises in this team.

John Roche of South Carolina headed the second team which was expected as he was one of the two or three best guards in the country. He was joined by Paul Westphal of Southern Cal, Curtis Rowe of U.C.L.A., Dave Robisch of Kansas and Johnny Newman of Mississippi.

Indiana's George McGinness led the third team and was joined by Rich Yunkas of Georgia Tech, Howard Porter in Villanova, Fred Brown of Iowa and Cliff Meeley of Colorado.

Honorable mention went to Jim Cleamons of Ohio State, Ken Durrett of LaSalle, Corky Calhoun of Penn State, Jaye of Oregon, [illegible] England of Tennessee, Tom Payne of Kentucky, Charlie Davis of Wake Forest, Jeff Halliburton of Drake, Dennis Wuyeik of North Carolina and Charlie Yelverton of Fordham.

Tomorrow's Collegian will be devoted to basketball and baseball. There will be both an indepth look at the NIT opener for the Redmen, the all-New England teams as picked by the AP and UPI polls and a preview on the southern baseball trip.

Gluckstern: Tenure Should Be Harder To Get

By ANN GURNETT
MDC Staff

"I think the Administration should become more strict in the granting of tenure to professors," said Vice Chancellor for Academic affairs Robert Gluckstern yesterday at a talk given in Mills House.

Although the talk centered around the tenure issue, Gluckstern also touched upon the departmental structure of most of the colleges with in the University, evaluation by students of teachers, and the role of Administrators in the University.

According to Gluckstern, the faculty structure of the University over the years "ended up in dissonance." This dissonance resulted in people common to one field of academia separating into departments, he added.

"A department is a community of faculty members, a working team," he said. "People within the department share work and responsibility-they try to reach agreement in the fulfillment of their tasks."

Gluckstern said that he felt the tenure system had arisen as a reward mechanism within the various departments. He continued that the tenure system was also originally designed to protect a new teacher who might have been doing research of an unorthodox nature.

"It has its merits and its drawbacks," he said. "One of the major faults with the tenure system as it stands is that it is a lifetime contract. The retiring age for a teacher is 70; thus, if a professor is given tenure when he is 35, we are obliged to retain him, even though he might go sour after ten years of teaching."

"There has been an increasing trend of late not to give tenure to new professors," continued Gluckstern.

"We've been telling people, 'Do your best, teach as you will, and a decision will be made in the next seven years,' he said. "Not too many people like it they say tenure gives them academic freedom. However, the problem is acute, and the crucial decisions that the Administration must make have to be formulated before we give a person tenure."

Gluckstern proposed as a way around the problem giving five year contracts, which would be augmented yearly if the teacher proved satisfactory. The level would be kept constant at five years with the addition of time, thus protecting the professor, but if it became expedient to dismiss him, all that would have to be done would be to let his contract run out.

When asked if Administrators got tenure, Gluckstern explained, "If an Administrator is unsuccessful, he may cause the collapse of the organization, hence, they do not get tenure, but can be removed if circumstances warrant. It's possible that tenure may be given to staff members in the future," he continued. "However, it's unlikely."

Gluckstern then proceeded to the topic of student evaluation of teachers.

"It's not the ultimate answer, but it's a step in the right direction," he said. "As of now, it's voluntary, but that could change. The evaluations are an aid in tenure cases-a student opinion is valuable."

He concluded the discussion with remarks on the possibility of a representative from the black community to the Board of Trustees.

"Keep in mind that the student body as a whole had no representation on the Board until 1969," he said. "I feel it would be a good idea, one to keep in mind for the future."

City Permits Agnew Demos.

BOSTON (AP)—Peace groups said they planned unobstructive picket lines" in front of the hotel where Vice President Spiro T. Agnew was scheduled to speak Thursday night, even though their request for a demonstration and parade permit was denied by the city.

A spokesman for the city told a news conference Thursday that if the protesters held a peaceful demonstration and followed police rules, they would not be disturbed.

"If they're at the site, and they do what the police tell them, I think the police will leave them alone," said John Fiske, an attorney advising the city Traffic Commission.

Agnew was scheduled to address the annual Lincoln Day Dinner of Middlesex Club, which calls itself the oldest Republican club in the nation. It would be Agnew's first visit to Boston since his election in 1968.

The peace groups were denied permits, Fiske said, because a demonstration would block traffic in front of the Sheraton Boston Hotel, where the vice president was to speak.

"The city's position is purely a traffic position," Fiske said. "It's really as simple as that." The city offered the peace groups several alternate locations, including the Boston and Cambridge Commons and the nearby Prudential Center plaza, which they rejected.

A spokesman said the protesters would hold a rally at Copley Square, then march to the hotel.

YAHOO Budget Intact; Mobe Received Funds

By ANNE STADNICKI
MDC Staff

A move to strike the entire SATF budget for YAHOO was defeated in a roll call vote 5-41-5 at Wednesday night's Student Senate meeting after the Collegian had already gone to press.

Other action taken by the Senate included placing a question on Index on a referendum, transfer of funds to the Mobe budget a move to retain the Senate Counsel next year, and committment of the Rapline budget to study under the Services Committee.

Amendments to the YAHOO budget proposed after the strike motion was defeated, included reducing funds considerably and putting YAHOO on a personal subscription basis.

One hundred dollars was transferred in the Mobe budget with an amendment passed which stated "the adaption of this bill shall in no way signify the approval of the Senate of the actions taken by Mobe".

The move to strike Rapline's proposed $1,647 budget was defeated but it was referred to the Senate Services Committee because some senators felt this group might perform the activities or organize more cheaply. Rapline would act as an information referral service.

A move was made by one senator that the Student Senate retain Richard M. Howland as its General Counsel at $20,000 for the coming year.

In the question period senators MacNutt and Kurtzman motioned that the question "Do you wish to fund the Index through student tax funds?" be placed on a referendum before the student body.

Other issues brought up in the question period were the "special meal" seconds policy and dormitory feasibility studies.

It was explained that there could be no seconds on main course items in special meals because the expense was too great, but seconds would be allowed on all other items.

Pat Beharry, Vice President of the Senate, responded to a question as to whether the University is currently planning new dorms, and if so have the sociological and psychological as well as financial feasibility studies been made.

She said last spring a questionaire for positive programming on student wants from future housing was distributed to students. The Board of Trustees requested informally that a study be made of student housing for the fall of 1972, she explained.

At the same time the University received an option to buy front acreage from Fraternity/Sorority party, which was added to the list of possible sites to consider, she explained. Miss Beharry said that negotiations are currently underway to purchase the land which appears to be the only fully developed site feasible for fall of 1972.

Room To Move

SM Some Mesl. Is DMA

In one of our earlier articles we asked at the end for information about a pink capsule which some people had taken and reported unusually long experiences which didn't begin to reach maximum intensity until eight or nine hours after they had taken the capsule. Since that time we have talked to a number of people and analyzed four of five such capsules. The capsules contain DMA. (That's not to be confused with MDA which is a different drug, though also in the STP family of amphetimine based hallucinogens. These were explained in last week's article).

Though we don't actually see the drugs which are analyzed through our service, we do ask people to describe what they are sending in to be analyzed. Here are the descriptions of the samples which have been found to be DMA: "a bitter white powder, supposedly mescaline," "rose colored cap, supp. mesc," "reddish cap with white powder-mescaline?" "pink transparent capsule-mescaline" "red gelatin cap, a new shipment of mescaline" "white powder sold as methadrine".

Though the number of peoples experiences with DMA which we have had described to us is not very large (less than 10), we have begun to get a picture of what DMA feels like. Most of the effects seem to be physical. There are very few visuals. Besides the duration of the experience people have been bothered by difficulty in getting breath, loss of coordination, difficulty in speaking, and a "general unpleasant physical feeling".

The reason that we don't report anything very positive about the DMA experience is that no one has reported anything of that nature to us. As to the possibility of permanent effects, we cannot say more than we said last week about the whole STP group. "As far as can be detected from a minimum of evidence, it is not wise to do these regularly (like once a week) as they can cause damage."

Remember the GRAY FLAT/GRAY BARREL ACID CONTROVERSY? The gray barrels were high dosage acid which weren't poison, but we couldn't tell about the gray flats which had been reported as poison to the Collegian. We now have an analysis of a gray flat tablet. It is "average" dosage LSD and is not poison. Let me hasten to add that there is no assurance that the pill we analyzed bears any chemical similarity to any other pill however well it seems to fit the description of the one we tested.

It's really CRAZY to want to be a Priest or Religious today --unless you want to work to heal a BROKEN WORLD!

Coolidge Lower Open By Resident Vote

Coolidge Lower voted at a special house meeting last night to allow non-residents to live in the dormitory over spring vacation.

The vote was passed by 100% of the residents mainly because of special security measures agreed to at a meeting held with the administration earlier in the afternoon, according to Tom Trotman, Associate Dean of Students.

Coolidge was notified that it had been chosen for vacation occupancy through the Student Senate lottery two weeks ago. It began action last week to oppose having to admit non-residents into the dorm for the spring vacation.

Residents asked that the administration change the locks on the special storage rooms so that a master key could not open the doors. Also agreed upon was the request that the tunnel door to Hampshire Commons be chained shut so that intruders be kept out.

All doors will be locked and on the alarm system, according to Nancy Zarrow, dorm president. She said picture identification will be required of all persons entering the dorm, and all guests must be signed out by midnight.

The standard $2.50/night will be paid by the non residents for their stay in Coolidge. Payment is made in advance according to the Housing Office.

The Housing office as yet has no official count on the number of students who have signed to stay in Coolidge during the recess.

A document, designed with the aid of Student Senate Counsel Richard M. Howland, will be presented to students who stay in Coolidge, a spokesman for the house said. She added that any student who occupies a room must sign the statement, which in effect says that the occupant must take responsibility for the contents of the room he or she occupies, and any guests.

Veterans Plan For April 24th

The Veterans for Peace met last night in the Campus Center. After the previous minutes were read and accepted, a participant reported on the Westover march.

He said the demonstration accomplished the purposes of establishing contact with active-duty servicemen and providing publicity for the group. It was mentioned that the Westover march was reported in Los Angeles as well as the Springfield-Hartford area.

A plan was described to circulate a fact sheet explaining the Group's purposes.

The April 24th demonstration in Washington was discussed. The Vets will take part and form a separate veterans' contingent.

The organization's Constitution was read and with some discussion and additions, it was passed and accepted.

After the meeting was formally adjourned, a Boston-based ex-Marine from New England Veterans Against the War addressed the group. His organization plans a week of anti-war activities in Washington, D.C., April 17-23.

The Veterans for Peace will meet again Thursday, April 1, at 7 p.m.

Baker Goes Co-ed

The Baker House Committee for Coeducational Living is now accepting the names of girls interested in living in a co-ed dorm starting next semester.

The announcement is the result of four months of work by a group of Baker residents concerned with the living conditions of their dorm. The desire for a change of environment in their dorm was expressed in a house meeting last fall. Many felt that it was then that the Co-ed Committee was officially formed. Their desire, and that of 90% of the dorm's residents, was to prepare Baker for the acceptance of co-ed residents.

At this time, a formal proposal for transforming Baker into a co-ed dorm has been completed and is about to be submitted to the Board of Trustees.

Any girl who feels she is interested in living in Baker as a co-ed dorm should feel free to call for further information either Tom at 6-6051 or Doug at 6-6078. All acceptance of girls will be on a first come, first served basis.

Priests Condemn U.S. Involvement

BALTIMORE, MD. (AP) - The National Federation of Priests Councils took a strong antiwar stance Wednesday, condemning American involvement in Southeast Asia.

The federation, representing 60 per cent of the nation's Roman Catholic priests, voted to condemn the war in Vietnam and support defendants in the so-called "Harrisburg Six" bombing conspiracy case.

Vote was expected later on a recommendation which asks that priests be allowed to marry and continue in the priesthood.

The resolution condemning the continuation of America's part in the war was introduced by one of the "Harrisburg Six" defendants, the Rev. Neil R. McLaughlin, who was greeted with a round of applause as he entered.

Calling the war "the most serious moral issue of our time," the federation pledged itself to work for peace.

However, an amendment demanding that the United States extricate itself from Southeast Asia by a certain date was defeated.

Almost unanimously, the federation also passed a resolution supporting the Rev. Philip Berrigan and five co-defendents, accused of plotting to kidnap presidential adviser Henry Kissinger and to blow up the heating tunnels of government buildings in Washington, D.C.

Well, There You Are

My Fellow Students, I write you this column, not out of love for your minds, but out of the need for 12 column inches. For, despite the stupid ideas of the Unholy One, we are all but poor mortals and he is a sheepdog.

And, as he walked from Bartlett to Munson, he passed a pert young miss walking to Herter, reading the MDC funnies, chuckling at his own favorite panel. And, as though the Gods had blessed the heavy togetherness of the milkmaids, they began to rap, they began to rap, they began to tap and they whole world puked.

But far be it for me to be bitter. He walks the streets I walk, he breathes my air and he is my brother, the smelly jerk. My brother, my fellor man, my compatriot in the great chariot races of the mind.

His mind is my mind, my mind is his mind, the girl he passed's mind is his mind and my mind too. We are all very stupid.

Hail, brother, hail sister, I loathe you and the god damned salad the Chancellor never had the chance to barf. Oh, carry me homeward in dreams of soot and caramel, let the rain waters wash the tatter off the collective genitals, for we are all one, all one in the great family of the checkered leopard of the dark and sunny forest of death.

Oh Hail, great and mindless brother of the Spirit of the Youth Culture, for I too am a hippy. I also eat feces. Love thy neighbor, as the beatnicks used to say in Rome.

Ten, fifteen times he graced my thoughts, only to end in a pool of mustard and clocks. And, to make matters worse, Richard and Rogers and both mongaloids. And, despite the Kolton decree, the only pig in sight is the correspondent from Singapore. Love, Life and Zig Zags makes the mind yearn for a pocket full of dimes and an empty pay toilet.

Toil not, you glutten, let the shit fly.

This is a personal thing, you know, and besides, Tarra, I know the Editor in Chief of the large paper in the top of the Union. Come work, flock to my mind and help me grind this too a halt. Tom Wicker eats quill pens. The mind of the collective Timmy, running quickly down the ramp from Worcester Commons, has bad gas pains. Pray for the second coming and his fart.

This is the 40th line and there are eight more to be done--haha, just seven now, you stupid student—that's right, I, the great one, am an elitist. That means that I am better than you are, you stupid fart-licking, apricot brandy snorting public higher education person. Low, your very armpit smells of the sent of Epstein. And the one who has trouble getting the words out ain't much better.

Two more lines, great, this is getting finished. So I now skip down one and finish this whole thing off. Whew.

The Real Test

WASHINGTON–The big question everyone in Washington is asking is whether the South Vietnamese army is strong enough to take over the American PX system once all the U.S. troops pull out.

The real test of a first-class military force is how capable it is to run its PXs at a profit.

So far, the American officials have been highly pleased at the progress the South Vietnamese have made in PX administration, and the U.S. military predict that they will be able to turn over all essential PX activities to the ARVN by 1972.

"These little fellows learned twice as fast as we thought they would," said former Gen. E.H. Hardsell, who, up until a few weeks ago, was in charge of the PX-ification program.

Hardsell told correspondents proudly, "I'd be willing to put them up against any PX officers in the world. When it comes to purchasing, cost accounting, warehousing and distribution, the South Vietnamese have proved they can do the job."

"Are you trying to tell us that the South Vietnamese will be able to handle their own pinball and slot machines by 1972?"

"Definitely," Hardsell said. "The ARVN have had pinball and slot machines in their officers' clubs for over a year and their jackpot count has been next to zero. In some cases the take off the top from the slot machines has been higher than that of the most lucrative U.S. Army messes in Southeast Asia."

Hardsell said the success of PX-ification can be attributed to a crash training program that the U.S. Army started two years ago. "I was assigned the task of training them, and I was given carte blanche to do anything I wanted as long as I got results.

"The first thing I did was set up a training school in a large villa outside Saigon. It had a swimming pool, an open bar, bedroom suites, hi-fi and a French chef. We wanted to simulate for our trainees the same battle conditions they would face in a real PX situation.

"In the daytime we held classes in black-market sales management, manufacturers' kickbacks, Swiss bank accounting, false air conditioner and refrigerator manifests, and beer and whisky inventory subterfuge.

"We worked our students until they were ready to drop. In the evening they each had to go through an obstacle course which consisted of swimming across the heated pool six times, eating a seven-course meal, drinking a fifth of scotch with a U.S. company distributor, and then going three rounds in hand-to-hand combat with a beautiful South Vietnamese hostess.

"Since all our trainees were volunteers, we had very few dropouts, many of them wanted to sign up for the course twice.

"Our tough methods paid off. Three of our graduates are now generals in the South Vietnamese PX system and already own majority interests in seven Saigon massage parlors."

For his work in training the South Vietnamese, Hardsell was awarded the distinguished slot machine service medal by the Thieu government. It couldn't have come at a better time, because Gen. Hardsell has recently been stripped of all his American decorations, busted to private and asked to resign for the good of the U.S. Army.

You're Never Yourself

By Jim Moran

There's a new effort for peace on campus. A group of people, without pretense, are attmpting to bring an end to the war.

It's a strange thing to be a service man. You're trained to perform all sorts of ridiculously cruel things, and you're not supposed to think. But you can't help thinking. When your right hand and your left foot do their conditioned thing and your mind sits back stunned at their recent performance, it asks why?

It asks why the kid you call friend is screaming on the ground with half his face blown off. It asks why you're running like hell and what you're going to do when you get here. But your feet won't listen and your hands squeeze the barrel of your BKR so tight that you can't even feel the flesh being burned off by the hot barrel, and you don't even care.

You get out. They give you three months early-out to go to school. Slowly you begin to build a life again. You're not sure why, but you're scared not to.

At school you get involved with the movement, but discover that what is not all that it is supposed to be. The kakki brown has been exchanged for another kind of brown. A different brown but still brown.

You talk with people who tell you how tough it is to be hungry, as they slur "hungry" on a greasy french fry. And you remember the kids again, all those little kids. And the bullshit brown begins to mingle with the kakki brown. The long hair turns into short hair. The tat lace moves up and down, up and down, and you want to reach out and squeeze it until it stops, bullshit brown, kakki brown, bullshit brown, kakki brown.

"No man, this can't be all there is," you say to yourself. And it isn't. You find others like yourself who are trying to find a few answers, who remember. And you hope you have liberated yourself from all that kakki brown and all that smug phony bullshit brown. Maybe that's the whole idea.

And they lay all this crap at your feet and tell you to kiss it, but don't dare step into it. Now if you don't you're either a Commy pig or a Fascist pig, but you're never yourself.

To whom it fits:

It must be a terrible thing to have a fat head. You can never find a hat that fits, and if you do all you can do is talk through it.

Well this is a new column for the both of us and I hope that through it we can perhaps pick through the mountain of crap that is fed to us every day and come out with some truth. Well, at least try.

The City Of Oz

By Judy Epstein

I walked home last night from the Campus Cinema after having seen Love Story. I don't know what compelled me to walk; any other time I would have thumbed. It was so windy that my cheek still showed red this morning as though burned. It bothered me that the movie didn't let us see Jenny die and that Oliver didn't cry in his father's arms. Sentimental slob? Maybe, but a realist at heart. For if you had walked home with me you might have felt what I did.

Death was what prevailed in my mind. As I passed the nursing home on University Drive, a middle-aged woman turned in there. Next to her in the car, hunched down in the seat was the littlest shrivelled-up old lady I have ever seen. She reminded me of a mushy apricot. Imagine that; a real live human being, who was once as young as I, reminded me of such a thing. All the talk of abortions that a girl can hear around a dorm doesn't even make an impression. Then I knew that I didn't know.

But it was a starry night and I wouldn't let it be ruined-even though my ears were hurting from the cold. I twisted my head around and found the big dipper. It wasn't clear enough to see the little dipper attached to the big dipper's handle so I gave up and bid good night to the Big Bear. I needed something else to focus my attention upon. I found a patch of woods but I soon tired of the bare branches. There was a brook running along a gulley by those woods. Maybe it wasn't a brook at all-you can't tell this time of year with everything thawing, freezing, and thawing again. Anyway, I saw a twig travelling along the rippling water; it was making good time until a rock stopped it. I don't know why but I felt disappointed; I wondered where that twig would be next year.

Most curiously, during my walk, I had completely forgotten that I was going back to UMass. I was stunned when I found myself looking at the towers. It was like looking at Emerald City the way Dorothy and company did. Then I remembered a friend who lives in one of those towers. I stopped by to tell her that I would gladly stay out of her life as she had so aptly asked me but that I refused to stop being her friend. The girl at the door wouldn't let me upstairs because I didn't have a key and my friend didn't answer when I called on the downstairs phone.

Walking back to my dorm along the footpaths was fun. It was fun because the cold had dried the mud and it crunched as I stepped on it. Someone walked by me and as he did his shadow made his head look as though it were bouncing at my feet. That was funny, too, because people are supposed to "Beware of a Judith" of which I am one.

Somewhere I have experienced all that made me feel what I did last night. And if it were not my thoughts that spurred me to write this editorial. And it was my selfishness that made me want to tell UMass that the thought of coming back here for another three years made me sick. If I come back as I probably will then it will just go to prove Don Glickstein's theory: I am but one of many suffering from the human condition.

Letters To The Editor

Nuisance, Noise, Dirt And Order

To the Editor:

Throughout recorded history man has had a close association with animals. For centuries he depended upon many of them to be beasts of burden, aides in hunting, or monitors for safety. During the last 100 years there has been a progressive decrease in the use of animals for work as the use of power machinery and motorized transportation have increased, with the result that now we are best acquainted with animals as household pets. Many of us have grown up with very warm feelings for pets of one sort or another in our homes. Indeed, some sociologists have even commented that the presence of pets is a consistent feature of stable homes.

In a concentrated community such as the University campus, however, conditions are substantially different from what they were in our homes, and keeping pets becomes quite a different problem. It is much more difficult here to provide the same careful attention we gave pets at home–free from the interference of our well-intentioned neighbors. Here, also, it is much more difficult to control pets so they don't become a nuisance to others in the close confines of crowded residence halls. It becomes almost impossible to keep dogs and cats out of the Hatch, for example.

There are a number of health problems which are closely related to the presence of dogs, cats, and other animals. Many people are allergic to animal dander, especially that of cats, and are made intensely uncomfortable by being in an area where cats have been (even though the cat may have left). Cat scratch fever is an uncommon but seriously disabling disease caused by a simple scratch from an apparently healthy cat. It is an uncommon ailment but treatment is notably ineffective. Animals which have been inadequately trained or too long confined leave feeal contamination in and around building–which becomes an increasingly serious problem as hot weather and flies return. The noise and odor of pets is a serious problem in areas where animals and humans live closely, as in residence halls. It is for these and other related reasons that the University Health Council supports the regulation that animals not be permitted in residence halls.

This regulation has been disregarded during the past year or two–with predictable results. An increasing number of dogs and cats are roaming the campus, in and out of buildings, many of them ill-fed and poorly kept. Many animals have been found closed in utility closets, trunk rooms, and storage areas–even in student rooms–hungry, dirty, and neglected. In some residence halls students have been menaced by startled or hungry dogs. Several students have initiated judicial proceedings against other students for keeping animals which are a nuisance. It seems that the time has come when members of the University community should act together voluntarily to control this growing problem.

The University Health Council urges all students to take their pet animals home over next week's vacation and to leave them there when they return. Even a minority of students deserve the consideration of their fellows in their desire to be free of the nuisance, noise, dirt, and order of animals in the residence halls. The animals themselves deserve more humane treatment than they can receive on campus.

Robert W. Gage, M.D.
Chairman, University Health Council

Valuable Resource

To the Editor:

The League of Women Voters of Amherst wishes to encourage efforts to support four bills that pertain to the quality of our environment currently before the Joint Committee on Natural Resources and Agriculture of the state legislature. We hope that all who are concerned about these matters will contact their legislators. Senator John Barrus of Franklin and Hampshire counties is a member of the Joint Committee, Senator Philip Quinn of Hampden, Worcester and Hampshire counties is chairman.

Two bills dealing with citizen's right of action filed by Rep. Robert Wetmore, namely H 1176 enabling citizen suits against regulating agencies and H 1177 enabling citizen suits against polluters, would aid in speeding up the processes of pollution control.

There are also two measures pending, H 3250 and H 5023, Appendix C, which strengthen the ability of local and state governments to protect the inland and coastal wetlands. Therefore, we applaud the permit system called for in H 5023, Appendix C which requires a developer to obtain a permit from both local officials and the state Department of Natural Resources, before any filling or dredging can take place. The provisions of H 3250 calling for the Department of Natural Resources to promulgate rules and regulations is needed to provide guidelines for local officials who may lack the expertise. Further, the plan for a public hearing before a permit is issued assures the local citizen of a voice in the decision regarding the wise use of this valuable, unrenewable natural resource. We recommend that the legislature take the provisions of these two measures and incorporate them into one effective bill.

Letters to senators and representatives should be addressed to: The State House, Boston, Mass. 02133.

Sacrifice Is Red

To the Editor:

Satire can be a powerful political weapon, but in the hands of a cynic it becomes solely a projection of the cynic's own refusal to believe in anything or anyone–most of all himself. Mr. Johnson, whose letter was published in yesterday's Collegian, cannot find it in himself to believe that during the May strike his fellow students were motivated by anything more than fun. Obviously he didn't feel any of their outrage at the U.S. invasion of Cambodia or any of their despair in seeing their brothers and sisters gunned down at Kent and Jackson. He must not have shared any of these feelings because he certainly does not understand them. The only motivation for the strike he can understand is fun. I think that says more about Mr. Johnson then it says about his fellow students who were striking. I feel for you, Brother Johnson, because I regard cynicism to be a disease.

Ignorance is a natural product of cynicism but in Mr. Johnson's case it is also a reflection of the University he attends. It's unfortunate that he knows nothing more of the Paris Commune then the reference to it in my article published in Tuesday's Collegian. It's sad that without further research he chose to call it "the most fun place in the history of mankind." The Paris Commune was created in March of 1871 by the working people of Paris and represents the most democratic government the world has ever seen. It lasted a bare three months because it was crushed at the cost of 70,000 of the defender's lives–not exactly what one would call a "fun place." Perhaps armed with this additional bit of information, Mr. Johnson can understand why the color of sacrifice is red.

Sid Finchirsh

Muddled Scribbling

To the Editor:

In answer to Mr. Elter's quasi-intelligent, and semi-illiterate letter yesterday, I will say to you, Glenn, that I didn't mind you questioning my involvement in campus activities, though I was editor of a small metropolitan daily for a time, and I didn't mind your Nixonian tone of voice, in your explanation of the Student Senate's myraid of good deeds and useful blubberings, and I didn't mind your superiority attitude that shone through the mire of your muddled and generally boring piece of scribbling. BUT, I did mind your questioning of my sex life in the last paragraph.

Strange Phenomena

To the Editor:

In response to Mark Johnson's letter about a "Future Fun University".

Why have required courses and grades except to keep in a position of power a few people. One professor at UMass recently stated, "We need grades to separate those who should get a degree from those who should go back to being hard-hats".

There was a revolution amongst University of Paris students not only 100 years ago but also recently. The reason for the recent revolt - no available jobs in the fields students trained in.

Some people - like myself - would like to see "a place better than an expanded School of Education" because we believe that the sole function of higher education is to help people fulfill their potential as human beings. So we push for open enrollment with realistic criteria for graduation. Others must disagree since our state is 50th in the nation in funds for public education.

The university isn't meeting the needs of all of the people of the state and isn't even helping all of those getting traditional degrees to go out and "face life". The draft is one big factor; crowded graduate schools another. How many physics majors get a job in the field they trained for upon graduating? Or how many education majors get a position is an area they trained for? How responsive is UMass in helping labor union members meet their potential as human beings such as construction workers who are laid off from Xmas to Spring?

An ancient radical, Jonathan Swift's Gulliver, found a strange phenomena amidst the scientists of Laputa - they built their ivory towers from the top down. Mr. Johnson is right - the new-facist intellectuals at UMass are not "fun people" and should be offered positions at the University of Laputa when the day of the "Future Fun University" comes to pass.

CONTRADICTORY QUOTES OF THE WEEK-

"It looks very bad," a helicopter pilot told Associated Press correspondent Holger Jensen. During the severe fighting, all correspondents are forbidden from entering Laos.

"They can talk about helicopter mobility all they want," said one pilot, WO Fred Few, of Chattanooga, Tenn., "but from where I'm flying there's only one way to describe it-retreat, and a bad one."- Associated Press

The South Vietnamese troops are engaging in "mobile maneuvering" and "are proceeding according to plan... They will return to South Vietnam, and if there are those who wish to characterize this as a retreat, they are free to do so...There is not a fixed timetable...They are now operating in accord with the plan they laid out."- Jerry Friedheim, Pentagon spokesman.

For the past week or so, another New England newspaper, The Boston Globe, has been running a column on their editorial page resembling this one. We wish they'd cut it out.

Equal Protection

To the Editor:

Several bills have been filed in the Legislature petitioning the General Court to lower the age of majority from 21 to 19. Several of these concern permitting 19 and 20 year olds serve jury duty.

Jury duty has always been tied to the voting right. The present law reads "A person of either sex qualified to vote for Representatives to the General Court whether a registered voter or not shall be liable to serve as a juror except...persons under 22 years of age..." Twenty-one year olds were excluded apparently for the convenience of town and city clerks who use the voting list to draw jury lists in apparent violation of the law as read.

Nineteen and twenty year olds are fully liable for criminal penalties under the law which assumes they know right from wrong. In fact they tend to be more idealistic and probably have a more stringent view of right and wrong than the population as a whole. They certainly are able to discriminate arguments in legal cases. Their average education level is higher as a group than the population as a whole.

Under the present system 19 and 20 year olds are denied equal proceedings involving such young adults. They are denied one of the basic rights of our juridicial system, namely trial by jury of peers.

If you are interested in seeing these discrepancies in the law alleviated, write or call your own Senator and Representative during vacation or any of the following members of the Judiciary Committee and the Government Regulations Committee:

Senator Nuciforo

Who Are These People?

To the Editor:

The Student Senate has been much in the news and I hereby add my opinion. The Senate's decisions to cut or strike the budgets of "small interest" groups in favor of appropriating larger sums of groups with more widespread interest of students is the point of reasoning I would like to question.

First, the number or organizations in the "widespread interest" category would be only three or four. How many activities can gain the interest of many students, especially on this campus? Each organization is primarily of interest to only a small number of students, however, if these were all added up, it would then involve a great number of students.

Second, the S.A.T.F. is from and should be for all students. If even twenty students want to engage in an interesting, constructive activity, why shouldn't they be allowed to use the S.A.T.F.?

Also, by eliminating the budgets of these groups, the Senate is in essence eliminating these groups and producing a stronger form of our well-known UMass apathy. Just a handful of different interests cannot be expected to provide for the sanity of 19,000 students. Who are these people, under the guise of Student Senators, deciding this for everyone?

For example, last year the Precisionettes were an actively functioning group attaining second place at the National Competition. However, the Senate found them unworthy of S.A.T.F. funds so the team attempted to earn the needed money themselves. However, it is humanly impossible to raise funds, study, and perfect an intricate drill routine.

The Senate struck the Precisionettes as a small interest group even though they were shown definite support of the student body by way of a petition that accumulated more than 2000 signatures. (The vote on Student Senate officer's pay received less votes.) These girls are trying to become involved in an exciting, constructive, challenging, activity but the personal opinion of the Senators, supposedly representing the sentiments of the students prevents them. But the senators do not echo the desire of the students as evidenced by the recent landslide vote against the pay proposal and a referendum attempt just missed by the Precisionettes.

It is my contention, and anyone who has been to a Senate meeting may agree with me, that even the Senators themselves are disinterested in the goings-on. When you see them eating, drinking, talking, sleeping and/or studying during discussion, one knows a grave injustice is being done to the students of this campus, their money and their interests.

Comfortable Clothes

To the Editor:

About the letter entitled "Women Are..."

I wonder if there could be any reason why many women on this campus choose to wear work clothes, construction boots, etc. besides wanting to be in with the in crowd.

The capitalist society we live in depends a great deal on consumerism, that is, convincing people that they need things which they really don't. The fashion industry with its fads and new fashions every season is a great example of this. There are people who throw away a perfectly usable wardrobe every year. Wearing dungarees and workshirts that last for several years is one small way to protest this needless waste. I'd rather wear my same old comfortable clothes than get caught up again in the fashion game.

Do you think this could be one reason why people not just women are wearing inexpensive and long-lasting clothes.

Ailey Superb

By TARA RAHKOTA
MDC Staff

The Alvin Ailey Dance Company's performances on Tuesday and Wednesday at Bowker had to make a lasting impression on anyone who saw them. The dance experience hovered around awesome--mystical--magical. It's really so impossible to labor or categorize it.

The Ailey Company is too close to real life, too close to the struggle of oppressed men and women everywhere, which was represented best in "Revelations." It began with the company standing strong and proud together, trying hard to hide the ever-pressed fear of the oppressed. The first portion of the dance, "Pilgrim of Sorrow," seems to portray the moaning and the meekness of the blacks of another time. Moving on to "Take to the Water" the dancers portray the black's struggle to become white, and finally in the closing "Move Members Move" there's the coming together to the singing of "Rock My Soul In The Bosom of Abraham."

The Company radiates energy and power. They possess the body control which allows for freedom of movement which all aspiring dancers long.

The music, lighting, and costumes seemed exactly right in every number as to enhance the ideas of the dances.

Some modern dance these days is impressive, then there are some which can be placed in a separate category. The Ailey Company is one which stands alone.

ALVIN AILEY-The dance troupe made a big hit at the University, playing to two SRO crowds. This photo was made by Larry Goldberg using a Bronica with a 300mm lens set at f4 at a fifteenth of a second.

Points To Consider

To the Editor:

I do not consider myself an expert on dance but because of my commitment to the Drum, a Black Literary Magazine, on campus I decided to write on the cultural activities that were held last night, Tuesday, March 16 on campus, i.e., Alvin Ailey Dance Theatre in Bowker Auditorium and Dick Gregory's presentation in the Student Union's ballroom. Although both activities were well worth one's time, one could not go to both because of the poor scheduling. Fortunately, I had seen Dick Gregory a few years ago. One would have thought that at least Dick Gregory's talk would have been held in a larger area (the Campus Center ballroom and/or the Cage) because then more people would have been able to sit, thereby causing less commotion. Did not the D.V.P. know that this would happen or did they really care? If Bernadette Devlin could speak in the Cage, why couldn't Dick Gregory? (This is not an unrealistic question for others asked the same thing.)

After viewing the Alvin Ailey Dance Theatre, I gave the whole activity some thought. By way of the flier that was distributed by the Fine Arts Council one would be led to believe that the group was totally Black. This was false advertisement and should not happen again. Personally, I feel that if a person is talented it should not make any difference what color that person is. But of course everyone is not of this opinion. The choreography was excellent and the music that was used for the various dances was well chosen.

When I left the auditorium, I asked some of the people who were at the event what they thought of it. One female graduate student replied quite vehemently that "during the playing of the Black Spirituals the whites in the group should not have been allowed to bastardize Black Spirituals". She also stated that when she had seen the group last there were mostly Blacks in it. In saying these things she wanted to make it perfectly clear that her only gripe was her dissatisfaction of how Alvin Ailey, a Black man, could allow whites to dance to Black Spirituals. She also added that the choreography was "great" and that the dancers in general performed quite well. In closing she stated "I don't think many Black people will come to see the troupe when they find out that there is false advertisement," for as I aforementioned, the flier that the Fine Arts Council distributed was not a true representation of the entire group. One could classify her remarks as somewhat extreme, but then think about it.

Another student (male) thought that the dancers were too "mechanical" in the first half of the performance but stated that this was not the case in the Janis Joplin routine. He further said that it seemed as if the dancing was a "rehearsal" and that the performers did not seem to be together until in the last half of the performance. He went on to say that he thought that the "chicks had weird figures but at least the males looked like humans."

When I went to Marks Meadow, one of the students in the first grade who went to the performance said that she liked the part where the women were dressed in white dresses. Her rationale was that it made the dancers look "prettier". Dig her line of reasoning if you can.

As we all know, when different people view a performance, more than likely, each person's viewpoint is going to be just a little bit different and all in all, this is what makes the world go around.

Albums: Short Takes

Hendrix's Best

By ED JANUSZ
MDC Staff

The Cry of Love--Jimi Hendrix (Reprise)

The last studio recordings of Jimi Hendrix are now with us. The Cry of Love is his best album, brimming with the finest rock Hendrix as well as a new, disturbingly beautiful sound that makes this record seem even more tense and powerful than anything else he has done.

Mich Mitchell is back with the group for this one, and he has never been better. His work on Freedom, the opening track, leaves Buddy Miles and a lot of other people behind. Songs like Freedom and Ezy Rider are top-notch rock, like the second side of the Band of Gypsys album.

My Friend simulates a small club atmosphere, and is very traditional blues; Jimi has never been more in command of different styles of singing. Astro Man seems almost self-parodic, starting off with the Mighty Mouse theme, but it's followed by the most moving track that Hendrix ever recorded, the ethereal and even saintly Angel.

Try to hear The Cry of Love; it's a reminder that life is both better and worse than we sometimes imagine. Like John Lennon and Dylan's New Morning, it is a true human statement; and because it's by Jimi Hendrix, there is nothing else like it.

Black Oak Arkansas (Atco)

A series of two-chord wonders from a group that tries to give us some "funky down home acid blues" or something. A couple of the tracks are listenable because of the lead singer's voice, sounding like a Zappa parody on "In-a-Gadda-da-Vita" and horribly incongruous with songs like "Singin' the Blues" and "Lord have Mercy on my Soul", but the musical value is absolutely minimal on a tiresome and obsessively repetitious set.

May Blitz (Paramount)

May Blitz is a new England group, and a very good one. Though a lead-bass-drums trio, they often approach the inventiveness of Jethro Tull and occasionally the subdued paranoia of King Crimson. Occasionally they seem to be trying to live up to the hype on the liner notes, but they are at their best on the long non-ego jams that prove them to be one of England's most promising groups.

Mary--Mary Travers (Warner Brothers)

Mary of Peter, Paul and Mary has her first solo album. She sings songs by Paul Simon, Elton John, John Denver, and so forth, and though her voice has never been better, he involvement with the songs is uneven. The arrangements are all nice though; people who like the songs on here will probably think this record is just great.

Chorale Sets Tour

This Saturday the University of Massachusetts Chorale will embark on its annual spring concert tour. This year's tour will last a week and will swing through the midwestern United States, with concerts in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Illinois.

The Chorale will present a varied repertoire of choral music, ranging from Renaissance motets to contemporary folk song arrangements.

This will be the Chorale's seventh concert tour under the direction of Dr. duBois. Under his leadership the Chorale has become known as one of the most outstanding choral groups in New England.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

The little boy enjoys climbing, often to the consternation of apprehensive parents. Adventure is a keynote for Leo and this quality shows up early. The Leo youngster boy or girl thrives on the spotlight and will "climb the highest mountain" to get it.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent on furthering education. Read and write. Study special reports. Perceive hidden meanings. Communicate feelings, desires. Unusual experience could be interpreted as "psychic."

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Straighten out financial question with marriage or business partner. Diplomacy gains more than forcing methods. Another Taurus individual could provide valuable information.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Some who are closely associated with personal efforts may act in eccentric manner. Key is to be patient. Play waiting game. Time is on your side. No long-range commitment now.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Basic plans can be successfully formulated. Investments tend now to be successful. One born under Capricorn provides incentive. Build on solid foundation. Forego the sensational.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Finish rather than begin; get well-rounded picture. Complete assignment. You may have to resort to unorthodox tactics. Do what must be done. Get rid of emotional inertia.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Home life, long standing commitments come strongly into frame of reference. No time to play games. Stakes are high; mean what you say. Older individual is in contankerous mood.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Relatives, neighbors may be argumentative. Follow through on your own judgement. Avoid scattering forces. Maintain sense of humor, balance. One who talks much probably knows nothing.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Financial position may not be solid. Know this and proceed with caution. One who dreams up schemes is willing to spend your money. Protect assets. Study investment procedures.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): What you regard as solid may be the opposite. Be resourceful. Take initiative. Depending on others now could be serious error. Add to wardrobe. Brighten appearance, surroundings.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Look behind scenes for vital answers. Cooperate with groups, special organizations concerned with charity. Member of opposite sex makes you feel needed. Respond accordingly.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Best to entertain close to home base. Veering too far off course might be a mistake. Some friends need to be flattered. You can afford to be generous in this area. Avoid senseless quarrels.

PISCUS (Feb. 19-Mar. 20): Intuitive intellect is sharply honed. You are able to sense trends. Face facts as they exist. Wishful thinking now is costly. One close to you may suffer emotional setback.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you get opportunity to solidify plans, ambitions. Move now, however, would be premature. In April, you will be in stronger position. You are bright, have appealing personality and you are attractive to opposite sex.

Stickers Head South

By JOHN M. MacGILLURAY
MDC Staff

The UMass lacrosse team leaves for its "southern" trip tomorrow.

The team has been practicing since February 27th and this trip will give them a chance to see what they've accomplished so far. Of the eighty candidates for the team thirty of them will be taken on the trip fielding both a varsity and junior varsity team. They will be up against some stiff competition in the likes of Army, Lafayette, Rutgers, Princeton, Ohio State and the Nassau C.C.

Coach Richard Garber said the team has the potential to be really good but they have a long way to go yet."

So far the team has been hampered by the lack of available field space due to the snow. The biggest disadvantage that the coach singled out was the small size of the players. However he also pointed out that these players have good speed and stick work.

There are also some new faces on the team and they have to blend in with the rest of the team. This spring trip will give the coach and the players a good chance to get to know each other and fit the team together.

Coach Garber thinks that this year's team may be better than last year's. They haven't come up with anyone to replace last year's All-American great Tom Malone but they have better overall team balance. The coach is optimistic but cautious that this year's schedule is much tougher than last year's.

The first game will be played at home April 9th against an all-star team from England.

Redmen, Tarheels In NIT Opener

N.C. Ranked 12th In Nation UM Sports Underdog Role

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

Going up against the toughest opponent any UMass basketball team has ever faced, the Redman hoopsters open up first round action in the National Invitational Tournament tomorrow morning at 11 against top-seeded North Carolina

Who ever would have thought that a Yankee Conference team would be playing a powerhouse from the Atlantic Coast Conference? Who ever would have perceived of a team with the abundant talent that North Carolina has would be on the same court with a team that has been called a one-man ball club?

The tournament officials seemed to have felt this way also and gave to the Tarheels what they felt would be the easiest opponent to dispose of in the first round, and make it to the second easily.

The oddsmakers wouldn't hear of giving a chance to a team that lost to little Springfield going up against the number 12 ranked team in the country. They undoubtedly had a field day with this point spread

But what all these officials and oddsmakers have failed to realize is that there will be not one, but two talented ball clubs on the Garden floor tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Possessors of one of the best records in the country, 23-3, number one in New England in the minds of all except the pollsters and unpressive debuters in last year's NIT the UMass hoopsters will not be the team that the big city has made it out to be.

Commented head coach Jack Leaman, "I guarantee that we're going down ready to play. We have the potential to do the things we have to do to come out on top and I wouldn't be surprised if we beat North Carolina."

These words tell the whole story.

UMass, from the little Yankee Conference, can play on the same court with the top team in the ACC. And UMass can put it all together to stagger the oddsmakers as they almost did last year against Marquette with what they would call a major upset.

With all the talent and impressive credentials that North Carolina possesses, what will the Redmen have to do to win this game?

"For us to win we'll have to control the tempo of the game," said Leaman, noting that the Tarheels were a fast club with a lot of good personnel to shuffle in and out of the line up to keep a fresh five on the court all the time.

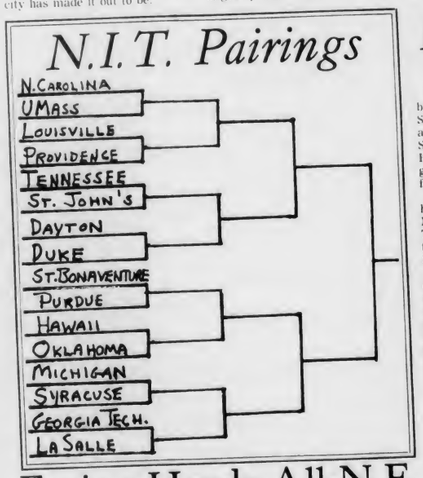
He added, "We may have to sacrifice the fast break to keep the number of turnovers down. We have to handle their press and not let them make us rush.

We have to play to pay tenacious defense. If they get any cheap shots such as on the offensive boards and on turnovers, it's going to put us in a great deal of trouble."

North Carolina is a strong team off the boards and throughout practice sessions the Redmen have been working hard on blocking out on the boards. Leaman explained, "We can only give them one shot at the basket."

On offense he went on to say, "We have to make our offense go," which means coping with the vaunted Tarheel press and man-to-man defense and putting the ball in the hole with good percentage shots.

As for personnel in this contest there is no doubt that North Carolina has many many good players. But Leaman and a good many others feel that we have the best player on the court tomorrow in Julius Erving the top player in New England. Time and time again he has been put on the block: can he play against the best competition and time and time again he has responded with great efforts against the best. No need to ask about tomorrow's effort.



The starting line-up has not been completely decided upon for the game. The Redmen have their final practice before leaving at Hopkins Academy. One thing for certain is that John Betancourt, Mike Pagliara, Ken Mathias, Tom McLaughlin and Chris Coffin will be seeing a lot of action along with Erving before the contest is over.

In his final appraisal of the game Leaman said, "We'll try to do the things that we do best and do well enough to win." With the third goal of winning an NIT game in sight it is certain the Redmen will be ready to do their thing tomorrow morning in the Gardens.

HOOP NOTES-The team will be leaving from the Boyden building this afternoon at 1:30. With a band set to give the team a big send off it would be great if all those who can make it show up at Boyden to show the team the overwhelming support that you have showed thus far this season and will show down in New York...Coach Leaman wants to give a special thanks to a group of die-hard Redman fans who call themselves Jack's Corner. This past week they sent the team a telegram of congratulations on the NIT and it's support of this kind that Leaman says he and his team are very appreciative of...Right on Jack's Corner and see all of you and the rest of the UMass delegation at the Gardens tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Batmen Open Southern Swing

By FRED ROSENTHAL
MDC Staff

Next week the UMass varsity baseball team will begin its annual Southern swing with a game against Wake Forest at Winston-Salem, N.C. on Monday. The Redmen will be playing seven games in six days as they prepare for a tough Northern schedule.

The other opponents UMass will have to face are: Franklin and Marshall, Virginia, and Maryland. The Redmen will face each team twice except for Franklin and Marshall.

Head Coach Dick Berquist is optimistic about the prospects for this season. "We're a young team," he said, "but with youth comes enthusiasm, and we're all looking forward to getting down south. We have been practicing around the game up north and hope to get into the game down south."

About the teams UMass will face next week Berquist remarked, "Maryland is traditionally strong and Wake Forest has excellent material."

Eight freshman will make the trip with a young and deep team. The Redmen are especially deep in the infield. At first base there are two sophs, Dan Esposito and Mark Palau, battling it out for a starting position. And, with starting second baseman, Hosea Kelly, injured, Ken Brewer and Dan Kelly will be seeing a good deal of action.

At shortstop, junior, Jim Saracino, is probably the leading candidate for a starting berth with Jim Kiley, who was drafted by the Chicago White Sox, not far behind. Eddie McMahon, a freshman, is also a capable shortstop. Tri-captain Jack Conroy is the team's starting third-baseman.

On paper UMass' strong point is its pitching staff. Returners Jack Bernardo and Lou Callabello will be joined by Tom King, Tom White and John Olsen. King hurt his arm last year and sat out the entire season but is expected to be healthy for the coming season.

In the outfield the Redmen will start Brian Martin, a junior, Earle Manley, a sophomore, and Charlie Manley, a freshman. Martin had a tremendous season last year hitting well over .400.

UMass has four catchers including two juniors, Mike Sawyer and Kerry Daly. Two other prospects are Billy Ryan and Tom McDermott.

After a disappointing season last year UMass has many reasons to look forward to 1971. With depth, youth, and a very promising pitching staff, the Redmen can and should be very optimistic.

Erving Heads All-N.E.

Julius Erving of UMass, Jim O'Brien of B.C., Bob Kissane of Holy Cross, and Ernie DiGregario of Providence College have been selected to both the AP and UPI first team All-New England basketball teams. The two teams differed only in selection of a fifth player; AP chose Jake Jones of Assumption while UPI picked Rusty Tyler of Brown.

Leading the second team selections were Paul Erland of Dartmouth, Bob Staak of UConn and Floyd Lewis of Harvard.

Tyler and Serge DeBari of Assumption rounded out the AP team; Jim Morgan of Yale and James Brown of Harvard were slected by UPI

Erving, a junior, who averaged 27.5 points and 19.9 rebounds, received a record 40 first team votes, (40 coaches were polled).

DiGregario who was the only sophomore to be picked on either first team, averaged 18 points per game for the Friars. O'Brien and Kissane, both seniors, averaged 18.9 and 17.1 points respectively; Kissane also averaged 10.1 rebounds per game.

The UPI third team consisted of Jim Larranaga and Don Lewis of Providence, Arnie Berman of Brown, James Brown of Dartmouth, Kevin Shea and Jim Moxley of Northeastern and Dale Dover of Harvard.

John Betancourt and Ken Mathias of UMass were selected to the UPI list of honorable mentions.

Trustees Give Housing Authority To Whitmore

By MDC Staff

BOSTON-The Board of Trustees voted last Wednesday to delegate responsibility for developing student living arrangements and social and academic programs within campus housing to UMass administration in Whitmore.

This represents another step by the Board towards their newly-defined goal of becoming a general policy making body.

The action encourages student participation in residence hall governance, formulation of academic and social program policies, and the development of management and residence hall program budgets.

The Trustees also urged the faculty "to cooperate and participate in the development of the residence halls as living-learning centers in concert with the students and the student affairs staff."

The decision by the Board recognizes the value of offering a variety of living arrangements to meet the diverse needs of students in academic and social areas.

In a report to the Trustees, Dr. Randolph W. Bromery, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, said that the major investment in residence halls should contribute directly to the University's institutional purposes. "The potential for utilizing our residence halls as vital learning centers has been virtually untapped," he said.

Special guidelines were drawn for the several programs involving coeducational living. They are. 1. Participation on the part of the students must be voluntary; 2. A meeting with parents, students, and administrators must be held before residence hall plans for coeducational living may be approved; 3. Written parental permission must be obtained for those students under 21 years of age.

At the present time there are 10,500 students living on campus in 52 residence halls, 5,600 of them in Southwest. There are 2,543 upperclass students living in 13 coeducational residence halls. Until now, freshmen have not been allowed to live in coeducational residence halls, and any major change in residence hall living has had to be approved by the Trustees. From now on, changes in living arrangements and residence hall programs may be made upon recommendation of the appropriate vice chancellors with the approval of the Chancellor. Frequent written reports of new academic and social programs within the residence halls will be made to the Trustees by the vice chancellors.

"In the future, University student housing must be more fully integrated into the educational process so that its purpose and direction are consistent with the objectives and curricula of the institution," Bromery said.

Chairman of the Board Joseph P. Healey and UMass President Robert C. Wood held their customary postmeeting news briefing where they explained some of the reasons behind the Board's decision.

"I don't think that at this stage of the game the Board should be involved in the details of planning life-styles," said Healey. This echoes Wood's feelings that the Board should shift its emphasis from the details of running a university to making the general over-all policies affecting UMass.

This decision by the Board takes out of their hands the decision to allow freshmen into coed dorms. Vice Chancellor Bromery and Chancellor Tippo will now have the power to let freshmen into coed dorms.

Healey says the next problem the Board has to contend with is that of tenure. He said, "The problem to watch in the next few months will be the procedure for granting tenure..."

Both Sides Claim Victory In Pakistan

NEW DELHI (AP)—Radio Pakistan said yesterday that "calm now prevails" throughout East Pakistan, but Sheik Mujib's followers insisted that they were winning the civil war.

A broadcast, monitored by Indian sources, said a Maj. Zia Khan had been named temporary head of a provisional government of Bangla Desh "under the leadership of Sheik Mujibur Rahman." Bangla Desh means Bengali Nation.

United News of India quoted one clandestine broadcast as saying that Sheik Mujib was at the "revolutionary headquarters." The location of the headquarters was not given but the rebels claimed control of the port of Chittagong.

Radio Pakistan, controlled by the central government, claimed that "no untoward incidents occurred in Dacca and other major cities of the province."

But it indirectly acknowledged for the first time since the fighting broke out that there had been trouble in Chittagong. Unconfirmed reports had said Chittagong was held by Sheik Mujib's followers.

"The situation in Chittagong continues to improve and is well under control," the radio said.

Radio Pakistan said the provincial martial law chief, Lt. Gen. Tikka Khan, reported dead by Indian sources on Saturday, had met with senior civil servants and the consuls-general of Nepal and Japan.

The clandestine radio calling itself "The Voice of Independent Bangla Desh," became a bone of contention between India and Pakistan, already at odds over the crisis.

The Pakistani government fired a "strong protest" to India's Foreign Ministry, charging that the radio's transmitter was located aboard an Indian ship at the mouth of the Heoghly River near Calcutta.

GSA Offers Summer Jobs

The Boston and Washington offices of the General Services Administration will have summer internships.

Undergraduates who have taken the Federal Summer Jobs exam are eligible. Graduating seniors and graduate students are also eligible.

Positions will be: Assistant-to jobs in Buildings Management, Procurement, Real Estate, Transportation, Records Management, etc. GSA indicates that students interested in intergovernmental relations, state or local government, and public administration should find the experience particularly valuable. The agency tries carefully to place students where the experience will be good for them and for GSA.

Interested students should supply: name, address, phone number, educational status and background, summary of school record (showing relevant courses and grades and over-all average), any relevant work experience, statement of career goals in brief essay form, names of one or two U.M. faculty with whom they are acquainted or have studied, and geographical area they would be interested in working.

A prompt reply to: GSA Internship Program L. Mainzer, Thompson Hall, Department of Government, is suggested.

My Lai Jurors Re-Hear Testimony

FT. BENNING, Ga. (AP)—Lt. William L. Calley Jr.'s My Lai murder jury spent yesterday reviewing court-martial testimony from as far back as last November, seeking to reconstruct air operations over the South Vietnamese hamlet during a U.S. infantry assault there three years ago.

None of the testimony in question connected the 27-year-old Calley to any My Lai atrocities, although the government later in the trial offered evidence to support such a charge.

It marked the third Sunday afternoon session in a row in the little military courtroom where Calley stood trial for four months.

At its own request, the six-man jury heard the testimony of five helicopter pilots-the remainder of the eight witnesses designated by the panel Saturday in asking for readbacks.

It brought to 20 the number of witnesses whose testimony has been repeated since the case went to the jury March 16, the third anniversary of the socalled My Lai massacre.

Such readings have taken more than 16 hours, of the time for deliberations-deliberations that over a 12 day span have given no indication of when the verdict might be expected.

The Judge, Col. Reid Kennedy, said he will hold a court session with lawyers Monday to try to agree upon some plan of prodding the jury toward an early verdict on the guilt or innocence of the 5-foot-3 defendant.

Calley is accused of the premeditated murder of 102 South Vietnamese old men, women and children while leading his infantry platoon on a search and destroy mission against My Lai on March 16, 1968. The maximum penalty upon conviction is death.

Bust In S.W. Last Night

An arrest of a non-student in the Southwest residential area was made at 6:04 p.m. last night by University and Amherst police.

Police were unable to reveal the identity of the person involved until arraignment in Northampton District Court this morning. They said the person was charged with trespassing and possession of a narcotic drug with intent to sell.

The content of the "hard drug" will not be known until after analysis today, police said.

The footchase began in Southwest, went through the woods and up to Sunset Avenue where the suspect was apprehended according to University police.

Officers involved in the arrest were Patrolmen Quinlan, Bozek and Grabiec

Manson's Attorney Makes Plea For Mercy

LOS ANGELES (AP)—The defense has called them "sick little girls" and begged for their lives, hoping that jurors in the Sharon Tate murder trial will flinch at the idea of sending three young women to the gas chamber.

Attorneys for Charles Manson's women co-defendants have stressed the women's youth and femmity and his final argument for Leslie Van Houten, 21, attorney Maxwell Keith said:

"How mad, how insane these young girls must have been."

Jurors spent all day Saturday deliberating the fates of Manson, Leslie, Patricia Krenwinkel, 23, and Susan Atkins, 22, after getting the case late Friday. They previously had convicted the four and now may decree one of two possible sentences-life imprisonment or death in the gas chamber. They had Sunday off and resume deliberations on Monday.

The most emotional plea for the women's lives came from the last defense attorney to speak to the jurors.

Chief defense counsel Paul Fitzgerald, described how the three women, if sentenced to death, would enter the green octagonal gas chamber at San Quentin, how a heart detector would be strapped to their chests. The warden, he said, would shake their hands and say, "Goodbye, Patricia Goodbye, Susan. Goodbye Leslie."

He described the dropping of cyanide pellets into acid as "the last sound they will ever hear." Then, he said, their bodies will "sag against the straps across their chests. There is a drool of saliva from their mouths. They are now officially dead."

As Fitzgerald spoke the three women, who had chatted, laughed and drawn pictures during the nine-month trial, sat frozen in their chairs. Their eyes were fixed on the attorney.

Fitzgerald's plea was made over the heated objections of the prosecution.

Deputy Dist. Atty. Vincent M. Bugliosi said: "If the death penalty is to mean anything in the State of California other than two empty words, this is the proper case. If any one of these defendants receives life imprisonment, the death penalty should be abolished in California. If this is not a proper case, no case ever will be."

Each of the women in dramatic witness stand confessions during the penalty phase of the trials, said she participated in the killings of Miss Tate and six others. Each said she was "stoned" on LSD when she killed and now felt no guilt or remorse.

In turn, they said Manson was innocent of the murders of Miss Tate and six others over two nights in August 1969. And Irving Kanarek, Manson's lawyer, has asked the jury to spare the life of the hippie-style clan leader because he wasn't present at the slayings.

Nationwide Tax Refusal On Focus

Tonight at 10 P.M., WMUA's "Focus" will be directed toward nationwide tax refusal and draft opposition, in a special editorial viewpoint on "Resistance to American Militarism."

According to "Focus" moderator Ken Mosakowski, the subject of tonight's program is especially timely, since the filing deadline for income tax forms is April 15th. Also, a bulletin just issued from the office of the National Council to Repeal the Draft in Washington, D.C., indicates that the U.S. House of Representatives will vote on draft extension this Wednesday, March 31st.

Information for tonight's program was obtained from such diverse sources as The Washington Monthly, The Progressive, and Final Draft, the New England draft newsletter published by the American Friends Service Committee in Cambridge.

Writing in the April issue of The Progressive, UMass English professor Milton Mayer cited figures by War Tax Resistance in New York reporting 181 active refusal centers across the country and estimating 15,000 tax refusers in 1970.

According to Final Draft, resistance to the draft has increased ten-fold since 1965, with over 300 prosecutions for draft violations being instituted each month by the Department of Justice.

Interested persons are invited to tune in on "Focus" tonight at 91.1 FM on the dial.

Yellow fever immunizations, as usual, will be given only between 2:00 and 3:00 p.m. on Wednesdays.

Cleaner Engine Being Designed

The external combustion engine is just getting off the drawing boards into the design stage, but work has already begun at the University of Massachusetts on its air pollution aspects.

The mechanical and aerospace engineering department of the UMass School of Engineering at Amherst has started a three-year study of external combustion emissions problems with a $110,000 grant from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

Lawrence L. Ambs, assistant professor of mechanical and aerospace engineering, explained the project this way: "The internal combustion engine is the greatest single source of the nation's air pollution, its emissions contributing over 60 per cent of the pollutants in the air. The federal government is backing research and development of alternative power plants for personal vehicles--electric cars and external combustion power plants."

External combustion systems are of two general types, Prof. Ambs explained, gas turbine and Rankine cycle. UMass engineers are concentrating on the latter. Rankine cycle is another name for the steam engine principle, Prof. Ambs said. Today's Rankine cycle power plants may use hydrocarbons or other fluids as well as water, he added.

"We are just looking at the energy source in this study," Prof. Ambs said. "We are essentially concerned with the generation of the vapor and the combustion process, which is where the emissions come from." The development of the engine and other hardware is something that the auto companies can do, he added.

A number of companies are working on various other parts of external combustion engine development, Prof. Ambs said. "As far as we know we're one of the very few universities in on the project," he said. "We have been working on various aspects of the problem for some time with the support of John R. Dixon, department head," he explained.

Prof. Ambs is part of a team that includes two associate professors of mechanical and aerospace engineering. Jon G. McGowan is the principal investigator and George A. Russell is the third member. Ambs is a specialist in combustion, McGowan's field is thermodynamics and Russell is a control system specialist.

"We expect to prove that an essentially pollution-free power plant is possible in a modern automobile," Prof. Ambs said.

"You Say You're Just Having A Few To Unwind?"

Common Sense

By STEPHEN A. BLUME

Thomas Paine, in his work "Common Sense" in 1776, stated that society is the fact that people need each other for survival. They are driven towards each other for common needs, and strength in numbers. Society "promotes our happiness positively by uniting our affections." Government on the other hand is the factor which controls society, i.e. punishes man's crimes, and controls his society so that common happiness will continue and prevail. Government is the system which peacefully controls relations between society itself and other local and foreign societies.

However, in order for the government to be successful it must have successful discussion and interchange with the society which created it. In other words it must act on the wants and needs of the people in the society. The success of government depends on the happiness of the governed.

Without a doubt most people are against our involvement in Vietnam. But yet attempts to tell the government this have been ignored. Government can not be acting in the interests of the people if the people don't want the war. Can the government (which the people created) be saying that they are now smarter than the society? Can the government now be dictating what the people's happiness and functions will be?

It is time to reopen the channels of discussion between society and government. It is time for government to act in behalf of the people, not itself, and end the war in Vietnam.

I'll Give My Life For You

Seven year old John Wheeler was often put to bed crying in pain. His stomach hurt, and Mrs. Wheeler shrugged off her son's complaints, thinking that it must have been something John had eaten after school, perhaps a bit too many Three Muskateers. But John hurt, even when Mrs. Wheeler knew he had not eaten any extra snacks.

When Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler brought their son to the clinic on Amsterdam Avenue, they suspected nothing more serious than worms. By now, John was feeling sharp pains in his joints and in his chest, and sores had formed on his legs.

Eleven months after John had first come to the clinic, he died tortuously and hellishly. There is no cure for sickle cell anemia.

Normal blood cells are roundish and flow freely through the body. A genetic mutation that occured thousands of years ago caused the blood cells of some men and women to distort, shaping them into crescent-like objects. Like hemophilia, this trait can be inherited, and sickle-shaped cells are carried by 8-10% of all Black Americans. Approximately one out of every ten carriers of sickle cells have anemia, which makes the condition fatal.

The blocking of arteries by anemic sickle cells stops the distribution of oxygen to the body and causes anguishing pain in the chest, the stomach, and the joints. It is accompanied by fever and ulcer-like sores on the skin. Half the victims of sickle cell anemia die before they are twenty; the remainder are crippled until they die, usually before forty. Ninety-nine percent of American sickle cell anemia victims are Black. The rest of the victims have Mediterranean heritages--Italian, Greek, Semitic.

In the more than half century since Dr. James Bryan Herrick first told his colleagues of "Peculiar Elongated and Sickle-Shaped Red Blood Corpuscles in a Case of Anemia", little research has been done into the cause and cure of the disease. Although urea solutions were discovered last year to alleviate the pain and partially reshape sickle cells, this treatment is still in the experimental stage and is hardly a prevention.

The Amherst Hog Farm

All right now kiddies, wind up those yo-yos-we have work to do. I've decided to commit myself to a mental hospital for the rest of the semester. Not because I'm crazy, but because things are less crazy there than they are around here. This, people will say, is the attitude of a cynic. That I will admit. However, I consider myself to be somewhat of an enlightened cynic and can laugh and sneer with impunity.

I laugh and sneer at you, student. Although you may think I'm poking a little bit of fun at you at your own expense and you dismiss me as being funny but not serious, sort of a typical college columnist, I am bitter and hold little hope that you students will prove yourselves to be anything more than mindless idiots.

You reaffirm each and every day of the week my deepseated belief that none of you has anything more on the ball besides horsehide. Or Pigskin. Pigskin is more appropriate.

I accuse you, students of this big university in the sky, of being pigs.

Unwarranted? Perhaps for some of you, but by and large, UMies are pigs. Note that I do not exclude myself from being grouped with you in the pig sty. I am the wise pig who knows what lies at the other end of the barnyard for me - a butcher's knife.

You, the young, the foolish and the naive, you are still wet behind your pink little ears and your tail is still straight. I despise you for your enthusiasm.

Ahh, we may have hit upon something. Enthusiasm? No, Roscoe, it's called "FANATICISM" and the capital letters are right. Now we have three classes of pigs: me, you, and the fanatics.

We all live in the same barnyard, unfortunately. You, the heaving, swelling, grunting, sweating masses, you and your apathetic ways are the saviours of the status quo. You will keep us from choking on non-union lettuce, you will avoid being embarrassed by your draft board when they refuse you a CO, you will go through life with the freshly-scrubbed pink look you wear now.

I salute you in your apathy, and though I share some of your qualms about rocking the boat, I refuse to condemn myself to living in your pen for the rest of my life.

But I am also not a fanatic. Fanatics are the ones who would have you choke on Farm Worker's lettuce. They would wake you at four in the morning because they thought a security guard was about to bust the whole dorm. They are the ones who make life miserable for everyone they come into contact with. They are, despite what they say, elitists. You are elitists in your own mediocre way. I am an admitted elitist and all the more cynical and bitter because I realize it and admit it.

Now you know my secret and you can prove to be my undoing. You can rob me of my urge to bitch. Will you do it? I sincerely doubt it.

A Quiet Reminder

Sid Finehurish is a quiet person. We share an office although his name is no longer on the door; I see him more often behind the U.S.A. tables in the Student Union or in the pages of the Collegian than I do around here.

I have heard him speak, once introducing Peter Camejo to a Campus Center audience, and another time to the hundred thousand who had marched to Washington in protest of the Cambodian and Kent State incursions. (Can it be almost a year?) He is articulate, convincing, and in a small group, quiet.

"What would you like to do if you felt your work with the movement had been accomplished?" we once asked him.

"Just drink beer with my friends," he said.

He is a quiet reminder to those of us whose politics is more or less straight that we may be wrong. He is the voice of Harry Haller in the Steppenwolf: "And what if I am wrong?...if these Americanized men who are pleased with so little are right?...then I am indeed the Steppenwolf that I call myself..."

He stands for and speaks for the possibility that the United States may not be all that it has cracked up to be. That it may repress numbers of its citizens. That its actions in foreign affairs may be now more innocent (as we are taught to believe) than those of any other country in history which has waged war. Which is not too innocent.

Some of his friends are loud; some look like million-dollar hippies; some give me the jitters. Few have his abilities.

He rarely sits in the desk over there, but if someone asked if this was his office, we'd have to say yes.

Letters To The Editor

Confessing Your Rights Away

To The Editor:

Repeatedly I have tried to make clear that in the event of arrest a suspect need not and indeed in his own self-interest, must not, engage in conversation with the arresting officer, particularly on any subject relating to the immediate difficulty he finds himself in. Along this precise line, I suggest that every interested student read this opinion rendered in the case of Commonwealth v. Flaherty, 226 N.E. 2 nd 875 (Mass. 1971) WITH THE PORTIONS I have emphasized:

"RESCRIPT.

"The defendants appeal under General Laws chapter 278, sections 33A-33G, from their several convictions at a trial without jury of (1) unlawful possession of a narcotic drug, General Laws chapter 94, section 205; (2) being present where a narcotic drug is illegally kept or deposited, General Laws chapter 94, section 213A; and (3) growing a narcotic drug, General Laws chapter 94, section 198A. Police searched a second floor apartment in the town of Sunderland pursuant to a valid search warrant and found quantities of marijuana in two of the four bedrooms in the apartment and nine lumps of green hashish in the pocket of an unidentified jacket hanging over a chair in the hallway. All of the five defendants were located in the hallway and kitchen of the apartment when the police entered. The prosecution's case rests on the following evidence. A tenant in a first floor apartment who had been living in the apartment building for a year before the defendant's arrest on February 6, 1969, testified that during that period of time he had seen the defendants "several times...entering, leaving or about the premises" but that he had never visited them "in any area of the house." He occasionally "heard knocking" at the door leading up to the upstairs apartment in question, but he "didn't see them knock." There was testimony that a valise bearing the name Patrick Flaherty was found in one of the bedrooms. However, there was no evidence that Flaherty or any of the other defendants rented the apartment, or that they lived there or spent any considerable amount of time there, or that they had control over the apartment or its contents. The Commonwealth's case against the defendants falls far short of "proof that the accused was 'present where (he knew) a narcotic drug...(was) illegally kept or deposited.'" (Citing cases). "It is essential...that the circumstances taken as a whole, and giving them their reasonable and just weight, and no more, should to a moral certainty exclude every other hypothesis." (Citing case). The evidence does not exclude to a moral certainty that the defendants were casual visitors to the apartment and knew nothing of the narcotic drugs found in the bedrooms and in the pocket of a jacket whose ownership was not established.

"Judgments reversed. Findings set aside."

This case, which was argued for the defendants by Attorney David Burres of Springfield and Amherst, emphasizes the points that these defendants, by saying absolutely nothing (that was testified to) on the subjects of jacket ownership, valise ownership or use, living address, lease, rent or apartment residency, had findings of guilt reversed by the Supreme Judicial Court.

Try to observe the important holding in this case that an alternative hypothesis was not excluded "to a moral certainty" by the evidence that the prosecution presented.

With the weakening of the Miranda confession rule by the recent Harris case your unguarded and UNWARNED confession may, in certain cases, be used against you. If you are uncertain as to the implications of what you are inclined to say (and you should be!) when an officer confronts you in an arrest situation, gently but firmly be quiet regardless of the change of your feelings. Give your name if you have to, but then insist on your rights and say nothing more until you have consulted a lawyer.

Ballroom Explained

To the Editor:

In response to Ralph J. Pudgett's letter of March 19, 1971, we would like to explain why the Dick Gregory Lecture was held in the Student Union Ballroom. The Cage was unavailable the entire week as the University was taking down the basketball floor. Numberous efforts were made by both DVP and the Athletic Department to try and alleviate the problem, but nothing could be worked out. As far as having the lecture on a different date, it was impossible since Dick Gregory is making 300 appearances in ten months, and was unavailable to us at any other time.

Mr. Pudgett also suggests that we might have scheduled the lecture in the Campus Center Auditorium. However, this facility only accommodates 675 people, whereas the Ballroom holds over 1000.

DVP would like to reiterate the apology made at the beginning of the lecture: we regret the uncomfortable, crowded situation and do hope that everyone understands.

Harry P. Ellison,
Chairman of DVP

And You, Joel?

To the Editor:
Big Brother is Watching YOU!

This commonly quoted expression means something different to nearly everybody. There is a small minority on campus, however, that has come under the invisible eye of one big brother during the last few weeks.

The minority is the student employee of the Franklin Dining commons. Over the past few weeks the new management, under the guidance of the newly hired "efficiency expert," has instituted many improvements in the efficiency of operation. He has demanded a reduction of $500 a week in wages paid out to students. To achieve this goal all student workers come to work later and leave earlier. Reductions in the employment per meal require many workers to carry out multiple numbers of jobs. The result of this has been much increased activity at mealtime per worker, inefficient performance of some jobs, and partial omission of some tasks, such as cleaning.

It is interesting to note that an all out effort has been made to save food. This is partially achieved by small portions and planned running out of food.

It is interesting to note that the reductions in employment hours have been made chiefly on seniority. That is, workers with seniority have been reduced (because they get a 5¢ raise for each semester they have previously worked).

It is interesting to note that student help in the office has increased four told in the past month.

It is interesting to note that no attempts have been made to reduce any full time help while some attempts have been made to force the full time help into working more. The full time help, incidentally, commands a much larger percent of the total help of the Commons.

It is most interesting to note that the "efficiency expert" has hardly ever been seen at the Franklin Dining Common. Two supervisors, whose shifts span the entire workday of the commons, have seen this man only once. This is one of the greatest sins that an efficiency expert can make-lack of communication with the on the job supervisors.

In fact, most of the efficiency experts reforms can come under some form of criticism for lack of bases. We will testify as senior Industrial Engineers (or efficiency experts) that this man is doing an insufficient performance of his task. His judgments have received our criticism and we will gladly discuss anything with him.

To the Editor:

"All things must pass," and I am no exception. I am taking all pass-fail courses (through no fault of my own) this semester with the exception of one course. For various reasons I am unable to attend the lectures for this course and am depending on S.E.S. notes to get me by. The notes themselves have been excellent--it's the way they're distributed that really gets me. I assumed that when I paid my $3.50 at the beginning of the semester I would be assured a complete set of notes. Things went swell until today (the day of the exam). I went to pick up last week's notes and was told, very curtly, that there were none left and why didn't I come on Tuesday (today is Thursday). I was also told, again very curtly, that I could pick the notes up tomorrow. Big deal. The exam was today and my notes were sold to someone else. I cannot understand this at all. Is there any reason for S.E.S. to assume that just because I don't get my notes on Tuesday I'm not going to get them at all when I've paid for them? I don't think so.

Editorial Points

The proposed "University Senate" constitution will be released to faculty and student senators today. The ratio of faculty members to undergraduates and graduate students which the governance committee recommends is 70-43-12, giving the faculty a clear majority. We hope that a new Senate would carefully avoid following in the footsteps of the Faculty Senate.

The Trustees, in passing Vice-Chancellor Bromery's proposal concerning making decisions about student life on campus, linally recognized that they, or for that matter anyone else, cannot stop people from doing what they want.

* * * * * *

The State Legislature can take bold steps like banning the display of Viet Cong flags, but the real hard part of life for them, seems to lie in the area of allowing people the freedom they seek to protect.

* * * * * *

Informed sources are forecasting the announcement of substantial increases in room, board, and fees sometime in the near future. Is it time to dust off the old "Rent Hike" demonstration signs, one might ask?

* * * * * *

Well, now that the vacation is over, one might easily wonder if it was really worth waiting for?

* * * * * *

Did you ever wish you were someplace other than where you actually were. If you were at Madison Square Garden on March 20, chances are you've experienced the feeling.

If you're ever in a situation where everyone around you is loosing his head and you are the only calm one, you probably don't know all the facts.

Get High

WASHINGTON--The Army has launched a $10,600,000 TV and radio recruiting campaign. As the Wall Street Journal indicated, this could make the U.S. Army one of the biggest prime time advertisers on television.

The announcement has the U.S. Navy, Marine Corps and Air Force boiling mad, as they are dependent on the networks for showing their commercials gratis, usually at 1 o'clock in the morning, just before they play the Star Spangled Banner.

It has to follow that the Navy and Air Force will soon have advertising budgets as well, and pretty soon we'll have an advertising war on TV the likes of which we haven't seen since the soap companies added enzymes to their phosphates.

Since Madison Avenue now plays such a large part in electing out politicians, it's only right that they have a say about our defense.

I can just see the advertising agency making a pitch for the U.S. Air Force account.

"General, the Army is selling education, the Navy's selling travel and the Marine Corps is selling patriotism. We have to come up with something else."

"But what is left?" a four-star general in charge of advertising asks.

The agency man holds up a poster: "GET HIGH IN THE AIR FORCE."

The general says: "Are you sure that will attract young aviators?"

"That's just the opener, general. Here's the ideas for a commercial. We show a dogface in a muddy foxhole eating a can of corned beef. Then we show a sailor swabbing down the deck of an aircraft carrier all by himself. Then we cut to a marine, shoulder deep in water, coming out on the beach, and they we show an Air Force officer."

"Flying a plane?" the general asks.

"No, dammit. He's walking down Sunset Boulevard with a girl on each arm. The voice-over says 'If you like corned beef, join the Army. If you like mopping decks, sign up with the Navy. If you enjoy walking in water with a full pack, join the Marines.'

"Then we pan to the two girls again, and the voice says 'The Air Force has a better idea.'"

"Isn't that a little blatant?" the general asks.

"General, you run your bombing missions and let me run my advertising campaigns."

"I don't know," the general says, "the Army may not like it."

"Does Hertz like Avis? Does Crest like Colgate? Does Pepto-Bismol like Alka Seltzer? General, this isn't war we're talking about now. This is serious business. All right, so you don't like that commercial. What about this one?

"We show a mother holding her head. Her 18-year-old son comes in with a transistor radio blaring out rock music. The mother shouts, 'Will you turn that radio off!' Her friend from next door walks in. 'Clara, you're nervous and short tempered. Here is what you need.' She hands her a folder and we zoom in on it. It says on the cover, 'If your children give you a headache, make them join the Air Force.'"

The general says, "Holy smokes, that's a bit rough."

The agency man says, "What do you want, good airmen or good taste?"

"Well, I guess you know your business," the general says.

"Now, I've got a surprise for you. I've come up with a slogan that will knock 'em dead. Are you ready?"

The agency man takes out a large poster, flips it over and printed in large letters over a B-52 airplane are the words, "FROM THE PEOPLE WHO GAVE YOU A CLEAN HYDROGEN BOMB."

Presidential Tact

To the Editor:

Perhaps you can understand why the Senate is branded "elitist" when its President, while "attempting to protect minority rights without prostituting the majority", can tell his constituents to "fuck" off for expressing their opinions. But of course, this could not possibly be a reason behind student apathy.

Dennis Vieira

A dangling conversation is being held between Paul Tauger (left) as Sokrate's most able student, and Charles Howland as Amynias in THE CLOUDS to be seen tonight and tomorrow in Bartlett Auditorium.

The Sun Ain't Gonna Shine Anymore

The Clouds pre-Socratic comic revel with music - which was presented by the University of Massachusetts Theatre in December, has been chosen as one of ten finalists from 240 college and university entrants, and will perform at the Ford Theatre in Washington on April 3 and April 4.

Prior to the Washington performances, the University Theatre will present two special performances of The Clouds in Bartlett Auditorium tonight and tomorrow evenings.

The Clouds is a good-natured but penetrating attack on intellectual pretention. Socrates, Athens' number one intellectual, is portrayed as a humbug fool whose major academic preoccupation is the intestinal tract of a flatulent gnat. The Gods (Goddesses) are capricious and more than a little dotty. Even the so-called normal types - who hunger after sophistic and philosophical learning - are decidedly sub-human, preoccupied more with cheating, lying, and obscenity than with intellectual achievement. The emphasis is on broad farce, gross satire, and often obscene buffoonery.

Tickets for the March 29 and March 30 performance are $1.00 and can be purchased at the door only. Doors will open at 7:30 p.m.

Films: Gimme Shelter

"A Good Brawl, Man"

By BOB NESTI
MDC Staff

"If we say we're together, then we fuckin' better act together."
Mick Jagger, Altamont

GIMME SHELTER is the Masyles Brothers--Charlotte Zernin doctumentary that follows the Rolling Stones during their 1969 American tour ending with violent free concert at Altamont. The film is a shattering experience. It has the feeling of a nightmare, filled with striking and chaotic images which mesh together and create a feeling of near complete anarchy.

The Rolling Stones are probably the most cinematic of any rock group today. Watching Mick Jagger prance, camp, and taunt his adoring audience during the early part of the film is quite exciting and, at times, most fun. Throughout the music is excellent, both in performance and production. The group manages to do a selection of their many hits including "Jumping Jack Flash," "Satisfaction," and "Love in Vain", the latter of which is enhanced by the shots of Jagger and the crowd in half-time. If at all possible see the film where the soundtrack is in four-track stereo, the difference is quite noticeable.

The film is cut as to build, piece by piece, the story of Altamont. Eary, between the cuts of the Stones in concert, there are cuts to the law office of Melvin Belli, the San Francisco lawyer who negotiated the legal hassles behind the free concert. There is a sinister ironic tone behind the rather selfish motives of the promotors as they plan the free concert. Finally the site of the Altamont Race Way was decided upon, the Stones wanted to give a free concert and its owner wanted the publicity. The radio and press built it up as "Woodstock West", all was set for a Saturday in early December as 300,000 gathered on the dirt slopes about the raceway.

The Stones enter the Altamont sequence in a most striking way: they are on a helicopter being brought to the concert site as a hand held camera pans the road leading to the raceway showing a quick succession of abandoned cars. It is agreed that, because of the large crowd that the Hell's Angels would be used as stage marshalls, their price being cheap, all the beer they could guzzle and their bodies being plentiful.

This backfired early, as the film shows glimpses of the Angels bullying and beating up on Marty Balin of the Airplane. It became total chaos, the Angels maintained control and everyone, from the Airplane down, couldn't control them.

The Stones come on and, as in a nightmare, just follow the day through to its inevetable, logical end that of a violent murder. Jagger tries his best to control the madness, but even he fails as during "Under my Thumb", a man wielding a gun is knifed to death by an Angel member.

At this point in this relatively short movie, the music hardly matters anymore, watching this event leaves one emotionally spent.

GIMME SHELTER is a black, searing experience with Jagger and the Stones playing some phenominal music. It puts in a surrealistic perspective an event which was described in Esquire this way: "There are some things which aren't true, even if they did happen. Altamont is like that."

Frazier In New Fight, Meets "Packy East"

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—The heavyweight champion of the world fought out of his class yesterday. Joe Frazier's opponent called himself "Packy East" and set the stakes for the fight at "two and a half jellybeans."

"Packy East" is better known outside Cleveland, where he fought as a boy, as Bob Hope.

The 62-year-old comedian and the 27-year-old fighter met on the champion's home grounds yesterday to film a portion of a TV special.

Hope, who said his last opponent in Cleveland amateur ranks was "Happy Walsh"-"they called him 'Happy' because he smiled when you hit him"-looked incongrous in a blue dinner jacket and 10-ounce gloves as he squared off against Frazier.

"This is for two and a half jellybeans," said Hope, clowning for photographers.

For Frazier the mock sparring session may have been the only comfortable moment of his spoken television debut. When he donned the gloves, he assumed a natural battling crouch and took some quick shots at the air, ignoring onlookers and their questions.

"People get me nervous when I'm not in the ring" said Frazier, who last appeared before a live audience March 8.

At that time he was in his element, fighting Muhammed Ali for the world heavyweight championship title before 19,000 in Madison Square Garden and a worldwide radio and television audience in excess of 100 million.

Sunday, in the small studio of KYW—TV, Frazier faced about 200 people and, of course, "Packy East."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Legitimate astrologers subscribe to a strict code of ethics many belong to the American Federation of Astrologers. Most good practitioners are able writers, knowledgeable about history, astronomy and psychology, as well as astrology. There are thousands of astrology buffs in the United States alone, and countless other thousands throughout the world, especially in the Southeast Asian countries. . . .

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Pull in financial reins. Recent tendency to overspend now catches up. Key is to review responsibilities. Appreciate assets. Evaluate possessions. Regain basic values.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Caution is key. Some who should know better act in intransigent manner. Be realistic. Refuse to be victim of self-deception. Publishing activity could be cause for friction.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Money negotiation may occur without your knowledge. Realize this and start assuming added responsibility. Don't trust disinterested persons. Be there. Be aware and knowledgeable.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent on friendships, desires as they coincide with those of mate, partner. You may have to let go of some fond notions. You face music. You become a better person for it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Legal commitment could consume much energy. Don't try to get out of performing essentials. Protect standing.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Associate, co-worker may retard progress. Key is to be an innovator. Refuse to be tied down by tradition. Take what action is needed. Your intuitive intellect now serves as reliable guide.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Practical matters dominate. You want to have more freedom of thought, action. But it will be necessary to check budget, long-range plans. Don't be fooled by fast talker.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Recent actions, based on impulse, are subject to review. Check apparent minor points. Pursue fine points; read between the lines. You can recoup losses. Key is to do plenty of listening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Office communications could be garbled. Avoid costly error by asking questions. By being honest, you make ultimate gain. Pride now can be a problem. Be specific and get at the truth.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Accent investment rather than speculation. Avoid radical changes. Stick to what you know. Conservative course now is most constructive. Money situation can be improved. Is most constructive.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be aware of what's occurring in high places. Means know that authorities are observing and reporting. One who appears indifferent may be vitally concerned.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Friends may press you with their problems. Key is to attend to your own responsibilities. Member of opposite sex resorts to sweet talk. Maintain sense of humor. Reject false flattery.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are intuitive, have unusual sense of humor, will do more traveling soon, will be rewarded for past efforts. You generally are forthright, independent. Start putting original ideas to work.

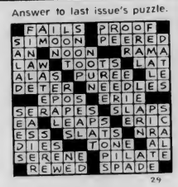
Amherst Appoints Asst. Adms. Dean

Amherst College has announced the appointment of Michael C. Behnke as Assistant Dean of Admission.

Behnke, who is currently working toward his Ph.D. in American Civilization at the University of Pennsylvania, will assume his new post at Amherst on July 1, 1971.



He will replace retiring Dean of Admission Eugene S. Wilson on Amherst's Admission Committee. Dean Wilson, who is the author of numerous publications on admissions and career guidance, steps down after an outstanding twenty-five years on the Admission Committee. He is often termed the "Dean of Admission Deans" on the nation's campuses.

Behnke received his B.A. degree cum laude in American Studies from Amherst College in 1965. As an Amherst undergraduate, he received the first Mosely Prize in Philosophy and Religion. Following graduation from Amherst, Behnke served as a Peace Corps teacher in Sierra Leone from 1967-69.

Upon return from the Peace Corps, Behnke received an Amherst Memorial Fellowship for graduate study, and enrolled at the University of Pennsylvania. He received his M.A. in 1970, and is presently finishing his doctoral dissertation on leadership in anti-slavery groups in the 1830's.

N.C. Outclasses Redmen, 90-49

Tarheels Dominate NIT Action

By DAN KAMAL
MDC Staff

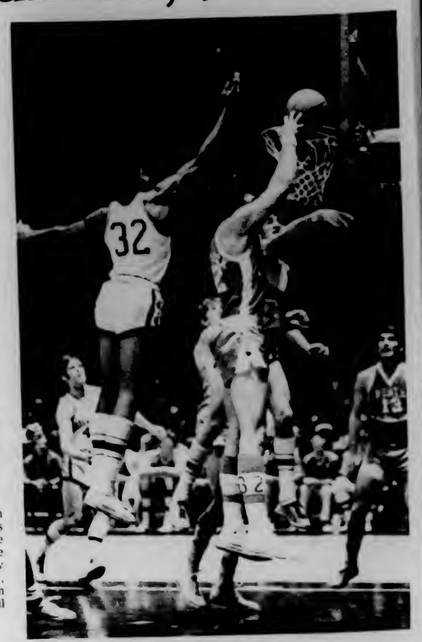
NEW YORK—The Tarheels of North Carolina did just what they were supposed to do, and more. They played defense as if it were their own innovation, they cleared the boards at both ends, and they shot 59% from the floor. And to top all that off, they shuffled men in and out of the line-up like a hockey team, and it seemed that each new "line" was better than the previous one.

It was a rout, an out-and-out rout. The thing that turned it into such a lopsided affair was the fact that Julius Erving fouled out of the game with some 17 minutes (more like 17 years) left in the contest. When Erving was called for his fourth foul with 6:40 left in the first half, the Redmen were down by only eleven. But with number 32 virtually immobilized because of foul trouble, the game turned into Tarheel shooting practice.

The second half began where the first left off, with North Carolina continually building up on its lead. Then when Erving fouled out with 16:41 still to go, the game became a monotonous series of Tarheel layups.

It appeared as though the Redmen would still make a go of the game even with Erving out, as they managed to stay within 17 points midway through the second stanza. However, incredible as it may seem, UMass went frigid from the floor, and for the next seven minutes and 48 seconds did not score a single point. In that span, the Tarheels extended their lead from 17 to 35 points, and the game was long gone for the ruffled Redmen.

With Erving out of the ballgame, the final 17 minutes were simply disastrous for UMass, particularly under the boards. North Carolina, while generally limiting the Redmen to one shot, was continually getting two, three, and sometimes four shots at its own end. Lee Dedmon and Bill Chamberlain led the rebounding assault which saw the winners enjoy a nearly two-to-one edge in that department.



Add that to the fact that the Redmen were shooting a paltry 19% from the floor in the half and a big part of the story is told.

With UMass helplessly disorganized, the Tarheels ran wild. That they managed to get all but one of their players in the scoring column says a lot for the balance of Dean Smith's team. That is why it is impossible to single out any one individual on the squad. They had ten basketball players, each of whom could have started, and each of whom were at least near double figures in minutes played. It was like playing two teams, each equally as good as the other, and each equally better than UMass.

If there was anything good to come out of the game, it was the experience gained by some of the players that will be an essential part of the Redman basketball program next year, even though it was a harrowing experience.

It was a disappointing end to an otherwise great year for UMass basketball. But the facts must be faced. Even with a great game, the Redmen would not have won; they were simply outclassed. However, with many bright prospects in store for next year, maybe that will never be the case again.

Tarheels Quiet Redman Fans; North Carolina Just Too Much

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

A strange thing happened at Madison Square Garden last Saturday in the opening round of the NIT. For the first time in the past two seasons we UMass fans were put to rest by the opposition. North Carolina, the tourney champion, has been the only team to perform this feat since the emergance of UMass hoop under Julius Erving and Company.

Not even Fordham and Marquette could claim the same accomplishment. So it goes to reason that all the ballyhoo about North Carolina being the best team any UMass quintet has ever faced is true to the bone.

In performing this feat the Tarheels did everything that was expected and in doing so took the Redmen right out of the contest from the opening tap-off, which they won.

They were bigger, faster, snappier and better, with a schedule behind them that was not only super superior to ours but also superior to last years champion and conquerer of UMass, Marquette.

There was no doubt that they were a team of NCAA tourney calibre and only that luck-out on the part of South Carolina on a jump ball in the Atlantic Conference tournament kept the Tarheels out of the big tournament.

Probably the deepest team that has come along in many years North Carolina lost its top player, Dennis Wuycik, on an injury in the first half of this contest and still went on without any trouble to take the title.

After the championship game on Saturday in which the Tarheels demolished Georgia Tech, coach Dean Smith noted in the TV interview that his team had a lot to prove as far as the strength and prestigue of the ACC was concerned.

Hungry, aggressive, intimidating. Name any words that fit a team that wants a title so bad it can taste it and you have the true picture of what the Tarheels were like when they met the Redmen in the opening round.

As someone put it before the game, UMass may have the best player on the court, but North Carolina has the next seven or eight best. It was only after a couple of minutes into the first half that Dean Smith went to the bench and in doing so didn't take any of the mustard out of his team's attack. It was certainly an awesome performance.

It was during the first half action that we UMies could sense the beginning of the end and when Erving picked up his fourth foul with six minutes left in the half it was time to refill the cups with brew.

If we had gone into the second half down as we were but with Erving not in foul trouble and a few of the other starters doing a little more than we could have felt that the Redmen would make a respectable showing.

But this was not to be as number 32 fouled out only a little over three minutes into the second half and with his exit came the last noise out of us and the biggest noise of the game out of the sparse delegation of Tarheel fans.

As we had savored in the exit of big Bill Smith of Syracuse a few weeks before, so to did the North Carolina fans find the exit of Erving to be a mighty big thing to hoop it up about.

The Tarheel players were estatic and their arms were flying in the air as if they had won the world championship. Their biggest obstacle was out of the way and it was home free for the boys from Durham.

The 5000 strong UMass delegation sat quiet in stunned silence. John Betancourt left a few minutes later with a hurt leg. It was now time to just sit back and hope that the game would end while all the time the Tarheels were tightening the lid on the coffin.

Now the Redman subs took over and the Tarheels turned the game into layup lines, full-court style. If there was anything beneficial to the subs in this situation it may have been the experience gained.

Hitting somewhere over 60% from the field in the second half the Tarheels blew the final score way out of perspective. They were hungry up to the last buzzer when they scored two hoops to put their margin over 40.

As the final buzzer went off to end the massacre all the tournament officials got together to slap each others hands for the fine job they had done in easily advancing the Tarheels to the second round.

It just wasn't a day for UMass. Even the assistant sports information director, myself and the assistant sports editor were given the run around. If this was their plan it was well done.

What a way to end the most successful season in the history of UMass basketball. Boston writers had only the fact that we were well represented at the gate as their main theme. The pollsters took joy in seeing us crushed and Providence advance to the second round.

But to be more realistic the Redmen were an outstanding team this year and one game should not destroy this image. Not even on a great day could UMass or any of the other teams in the NIT have come close to North Carolina. It will hurt no doubt for a while.

But with practically the entire crew coming back from this year's squad, a freshman team with a record of 18-1 and a determined coaching staff to pull the pieces together again, the same thing that happened last year when the final buzzer went off can be said again: we can't wait until next year.

Sox Finally Win

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP)—George Scott, rumored as prime trade bait, hit his sixth and seventh spring homers and Reggie Smith and Billy Conigliaro added solo shots Sunday in powering the Boston Red Sox to a 5-3 exhibition victory over Detroit.

All four homers were belted against the Tigers' Fred Scherman, the ninth southpaw to start against the Red Sox in the last 12 games. Scherman lasted just four innings.

Smith opened the second with his second homer and Scott made it 2-0 with a tremendous blast over the left field fence. With one out in the fourth, Rico Petrocelli singled and Scott and Conigliaro followed with successive homers.

Boston starter Gary Peters checked Detroit on six hits and an unearned run in six innings, but failed to retire a batter in the seventh. He was replaced by Ken Brett after the Tigers had one run in and the bases loaded on a walk and three singles.

Brett gave up one more run on a single, but got out of the jam and was in control the rest of the way.

The Tigers outhit Boston 12-9 but left 12 runners on base as their record dipped to 11-12. The Red Sox are 10-13.

With nine hits in the last 14 times at bat in four games, Scott has lifted his average to a lofty .419. He is 26 for 62, with 49 total bases and 13 runs batted in.

The husky first baseman reportedly is being offered as part of a trade package, possibly to Washington for the Senators' Frank Howard.

Smith and Conigliaro also have been rumored as available for a trade.

Peters apparently tired while working under a hot sun. He gave up nine hits, walked three and struck out two before being lifted. Brett had his control and was tough. He allowed three hits, but didn't walk a man.

Bob Montgomery renewed his bid for the Boston starting catcher's job with a double and a pair of infield singles. Conigliaro had a single to go with his second exhibition homer.

Petrocelli saved the Red Sox from heavy trouble in the seventh. With the bases loaded and none out, Bill Freehan hit a sizzling drive which appeared headed through the hole to left.

Petrocelli, a former All-Star shortstop moved to third base this year, made a spectacular diving catch to his left. Brett then retired the next two batters to get out of the jam.

Andretti Drives It Home

ONTARIO, Calif. (AP)—Mario Andretti drove a Ferrari to victory in both heats of the Questor Grand Prix before 68,825 spectators Sunday at Ontario Motor Speedway as American machinery failed miserably in this first match-up between domestic and European cars and drivers.

Andretti, driving a 12-cylinder, Formula 1 car, beat Scotland's Jackie Stewart by five car lengths in the first 100-mile heat and came home a more confortable 13 seconds in front in the second.

His over-all victory carried a winner's purse of $25,000 plus scads of lap and accessory money. The total purse was $288,900.

Stewart's runner-up finish in a Tyrrell-Ford gave him second over-all and $15,000. He also pocketed a bundle of lap money.

Third over-all went to New Zealand's Denis Hulme, the 1967 world driving champ, and was worth $12,500.

Andretti, passing Stewart on the front straight with two laps to go en route to his first heat win, posted an average speed of 109.400 miles an hour in the initial race. His speed was a bit faster in the second-109.908.

Opinion

The American Nuremburg

By MARK SILVERMAN
MDC Staff

For about a year all three television networks have been sending film crews and reporters down to Georgia periodically to record the progress of a military court marshal at Fort Benning. They have been covering what some people say is the American Nurenberg.

The reporters and the technicians were all there yesterday when the jury of career soldiers declared Calley guilty of killing unarmed civilians in the village of My Lai, Vietnam three years ago. The reporters, after explaining the verdict, spoke about the great moral issue which surround the trial, the lofty questions which a great many Americans have used to justify calling the court marshal the American Nuremberg.

And, as the nation watched the television news last night, it saw a man convicted for a crime which, the reporters said, represented what many Americans believe are war crimes -- injustices which display the militaristic inhumane, arrogant and ungoldy spirit that has driven their country to the necessity of staging its own Nuremberg.

The people saw a man held up to serve as a model of all that is wrong with America. And, as they saw Calley led away by the successful Army prosecution, they were led to believe that, somehow, somekind of justice had been served.

Through all of this, a moral weight was lifted from their shoulders. Calley was taken away and America, their America, had been punished.

So, for millions of Americans, the conviction of William Calley is a victory for the anti-war movement. They now can reason that the army itself has admitted that it has been guilty of war crimes against the people of Vietnam. Somehow, these people can now believe that America, their America, knows that it had been wrong.

And because of all of this, the millions who watched the administration of justice in their living rooms are now free to cry over the faults of their military, deplore the actions of those who "made My Lai happen," and demand that changes in the government of their nation be made so that "no future My Lai will happen."

And they will somehow feel more just, more holy, more righteous now that they know that Calley had been declared guilty before the world. Their guilt, as Americans, will be relieved by Calley's official censure and the opportunity that this gives them to cry about their nation as a whole.

But through all of this nothing will be changed. The court marshal will not bring the peasants slaughtered at My Lai back to life, and the public outcry against the nation which attacked My Lai will not prevent this sort of thing from happening again.

In short, the whole Calley court marshal and all of its publicity and all of the musings it has prompted are meaningless. Nothing has been changed, nothing has been remedied, nothing has been attoned for.

All that has happened during the three years since William Calley led a slaughter in a broken down village of peasants halfway around the world is that millions of Americans have been given a chance to feel moral. And their use of the My Lai tragedy and of the tragedy of Vietnam to build their own sense of righteousness is every bit as repulsive as Calley's actions.

LADY GODIVA-Well, not quite. At least she has some of her clothes on. But it may strike you as a funny place to be on a horse, the front yard of Barbett. Maybe not. UMass did have a pretty good reputation once as a cow college. (MDC photo by David Williams.)

Coolidge Quiet, Padlocks Prove Protective

Coolidge Lower, chosen by a lottery several weeks previous to Spring vacation, was the dormitory on campus which housed members of the Symphony Band and student teachers forced to remain at U Mass during vacation. The decision to use Coolidge Lower was the cause of much protest from the members of this dorm, as they felt that for security reasons some other place could be more realistically used.

However when the students returned they were for the most part relieved to find their rooms in order and no signs of damage or theft. Those who refused to allow their rooms to be used were required to pay forty dollars per room for the week.

Michaelene Wojtokowski, a counselor in Coolidge Lower, stated that "everything went pretty well," and cited the only issue of concern was the fact that the telephones were not turned off as promised. She felt that the main reason that the week went off without any great difficulty was the sympathy and cooperation of the security guards. A guard was on duty twenty-four hours a day in the lobby, and all persons entering the building were asked to show a picture I.D. and sign in.

Other security measures were taken to insure as few problems as possible. These measures included a list of seven rules issued to security guards working in Coolidge Lower and a Room Assignment Security Agreement signed by every person staying in the dorm during vacation acknowledging their receipt of a key to the room and their personal liability and responsibility for any damage to the room caused by either themselves or their guests.

Also as preventive measures, three rooms on each floor were used for storage, with the locks on these doors changed. Most of the residents stripped their rooms of any valuables, placing their possessions in either the regular storage room on the end of the corridor or the specially made storage rooms. During this week the elevators only operated to the seventh floor, although a few cases of people walking on the upper floors were reported.

The general feelings of the University Security is that the week "went off like clock-work". Except for the average dormitory problems like noise, and a telephone which got ripped off from the lobby, the one hundred students caused no unusual difficulties.

The common feeling of the girls of Coolidge Lower, settled back into their rooms after a week away from campus, is one of relief. Although one girl stated that she returned to find "a mess" left by the guys who used her room, and obscene words written on the lounge door, most of the girls reported their rooms to be in good condition with "only a few things moved around". One girl in fact stated that she found her room even cleaner than when she left it with a quarter on her desk to replace a package of cereal from the dining commons which had been eaten.

Although theft was not of concern to the girls, for as resident Bonnie Conrad stated, "since our television and stereo have already been stolen there really isn't much left to take", they are concerned about the practice of using resident houses over vacations. Miss Wojtokowski feels that the University should get rid of the bill which allows the dormitories to be chosen far ahead of the time they are to be used, when in fact she believes that conventions necessitating the use of such housing are not yet even scheduled.

However, Dick Howland, the University's student lawyer stated that unless the system is revived Dwight House and Emerson House will be used over Thanksgiving and Christmas vacation.

All Inclusive "University Senate" In Works

The Joint Commission on Campus Governance released a draft of the proposed University Senate yesterday, which, if ratified, would give the University a governing body replacing the Faculty, Student, and Graduate Student Senates with one representing "all members of the campus community."

The report outlined a Senate which would be composed initially of 130 representatives, 70 faculty, 43 undergraduates, 12 graduates, and five professional staff members, with provisions for increasing the number of graduate students and faculty representatives as the graduate student body increases.

Separate undergraduate, graduate, and faculty conferences will "have exclusive jurisdiction over a few specific areas, and will have the power to excercise vetoes over Senate legislation in certain areas of special interest," the report explained.

Under the new constitution, the student undergraduate conference would retain control of all Student Tax money and policy for R.S.O. groups. Faculty Senators would "excercise exclusive jurisdiction" over appointments to the Tenure and Grievance Hearings Committee. The Graduate Students would retain control over Graduate student funds.

The report represents the work of a committee, commissioned in March, 1970, by the three existing Senates to "examine all aspects of campus governance, preparing, if necessary, a new charter of Governance." The initial interim report was issued May 6, 1970, but public hearings on the findings of the Commission were cancelled because of last May's Student Strike.

Copies of the proposed constitution are available in a limited number at Goodell Library. The discussion of the draft is expected to begin next week, with public hearings to be held by the Commission a week from today, Tuesday April 6, from 1:00 - 5:00 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

The Commission was originally composed of twelve faculty, students and administrators. The commission, which "unanimously" endorsed this draft of the constitution, now has 6 members left, including Chairman Morton Sternheim (Faculty Senate), Secretary David Clay (Appointed by the Chancellor), Daniel Collins (Graduate Senate), William E. Connolly (Faculty Senate), Robert F. Delcolle (Graduate Senate), Glen Elters (Student Senate), and Glen Gordon (Faculty Senate). The original commission included three other undergraduates, one faculty member and another appointee of the Chancellor.

Currently, the time table proposed for inception of the new constitution expects that a final report will be issued by the commission by April 15, with a referendum being scheduled for all the constituences affected on April 30 (for "initial ratification".) Trustee approval is expected during the Summer. Elections of officers for the Senate would be held next September and final adoption of the new system would come approximately two years from now.

An in depth look at the draft of the constitution will appear in tomorrow's Daily Collegian.

Court Backs State Universities On Tuition

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Supreme Court upheld 8-1 Monday the widespread practice of state universities charging higher tuition to students who do not meet state residency requirements.

Only Justice Byron R. White said the high court should hear the challenge to state residency requirements for college tuition.

The rest of the justices simply affirmed the judgement of a lower court in the matter and refused to hear the case.

The case involves two married women who claim the University of Minnesota had no right to charge them $247 each in extra tuition fees because they lived in the state less than a university-prescribed year when they enrolled.

Most state colleges and universities impose some type of extra tuition charge for students not fulfilling minimum residency requirements.

A three-judge federal court in Minnesota earlier turned down the challenge of the two women, Lynn F. Starns and Linda J. Mack, of Minneapolis.

University lawyers said their case closely parallels an unsuccessful 1969 action against the University of California that the high court refused to review.

The women cited a Supreme Court decision ruling out residency requirements for welfare recipients as one basis for their appeal.

They questioned also whether the university residency requirement impedes their right to move freely from state to state and thus violates constitutional rights to equal protection under the law.

The women claimed they are not temporary visitors who came to Minnesota to obtain an inexpensive education, then return to another state, but residents who merely were "presumed to be non-residents for a 12-month waiting period."

In citing the welfare case, the women hold education is as essential to society and the individual as clothing and food received by a welfare client.

University lawyers replied that the value of higher education, while important, cannot be equated with "the pressing need for preservation of life" dealt with in the high court's ruling eliminating residency requirements for welfare recipients.

Teach In - Women and The War

According to the most recent Gallup poll 78% of American women oppose the War in Southeast Asia. Because the War has created skyrocketing inflation, women are confronted daily with higher food prices, increased rent and living costs, as well as overpriced consumer goods and transportation. Because even in the best of times women are last hired and first fired, war related unemployment has hit them harder than other sectors of the labor market. Women have for years seen their sons and their husbands and their lovers and their friends drafted to fight in a war that is totally abhorrent to them.

Women are more than ever conscious of their opposition to the War and consequently their significant role in the antiwar movement. On April 24, the United Women's Contingent, an independent coalition of women opposed to the War, will march in the national antiwar demonstrations in Washington and San Francisco to demand the immediate withdrawal of all U.S. troops from Southeast Asia. "Women demonstrating against the war as women, that is as a special contingent, will make it clear to the Nixon administration and to the rest of the world that it is not only students but the majority of Americans who demand an end to this war. After all, we women are 53% of the U.S. population. And when we decide to end the war, the war will end!" was the comment of one activist in the Women's Contingent.

A Women's Contingent is being formed to bring UMass women to Washington on April 24 to demonstrate against the War. All women are invited to the teachin on "Women and the War" at 9:00 pm Tuesday, March 30 in Field Lounge on Orchard Hill. There will be a discussion of women in the antiwar movement. Bus tickets to the demonstration in Washington will be sold. Buttons and posters will be available.

Don't Look In Mail For Summer Acceptance

Summer Session catalogs are now available for the summer of '71. They may be obtained at the Registrar's office in Whitmore, the Graduate School in Munson Hall, or in the office of Continuing Education, rm. 902, Campus Center. Departments should pick up their copies at the Registrar's office.

This summer, unlike previous summers, students who are currently in good academic standing at the end of the Spring semester at UMass will not receive a card advising them of their acceptance to the Summer Session. These students will be automatically accepted upon receipt of their applications. Only students from other institutions, and applicants who are not presently enrolled at any institution, will receive notice of acceptance.

Student Affairs Committee

Power, Money, Staff Need To Be Spreak Out

By LISA CHERNICK
MDC Staff

The main concern at last night's meeting of the Student Affairs Reorganizing Committee was decentralization of power money and staff, according to Dr. Randolph Bromery, vice chancellor of Student Affairs.

Dr. Bromery is head of the new Student Affairs Task force which seeks to begin the restructuring of every facet of university life. Bromery met last night along with Vice chancellor Campion, various other administrators in Student Affairs, and area co-ordinators.

Discussion went on concerning the problems that the area co-ordinators face in funding their particular areas, the fact that area co-ordinators do not know who is responsible for the decisions which effect the area level. The students, say area co-ordinators, also unclear as to who to go to in implementing programs "bypass" lower links in the chain of command and head straight to the top of Student Affairs in order to get the final word. This leaves them, say the co-ordinators, not really sure of their function in the University structure.

General agreement surrounded the point brought out by the area co-ordinators that the University needs to make the residence hall living more a part of the total learning process of students, learning as a separate classroom-dormitory situation.

Heads of residence will meet with the student task force tought to discuss the problems they meet as other facets of University life.

Dr. Bromery said that in the future Student Affairs Reorganizing committee will also be speaking to students and taking suggestions as to new ways of structuring the university.

"There has to be change. We will not go into September with what we've got now," said Bromery.

Extension Service Makes People Teachers

A Northampton mother with no high school diploma or college degree will become a teacher, next fall because she has learned how to teach proper nutrition, in a 120-hour course sponsored by the UMass Cooperative Extension Service.

Mrs. Camille H. LeBeau of 101 Lake St., Florence, one of 290 program assistants trained by state home economists during the 2 1/2-year-old program, will teach nutrition to students at Clarke School for the Deaf in Northampton. As a program assistant she has been teaching nutrition to women from low income families in her community.

Program assistants, also from low income families, travel from house to house, bringing with them ideas on proper nutrition and ways to cook with government-donated foods.

While program assistants help the work of the cooperative extension service by adding to the county staffs, they are not replacements for regular county home economists. In fact, "There's a lot of doubt whether professionals could do as well as the program assistants," says Prof. Winifred I. Eastwood, assistant director of the UMass Home Economics Extension, supervisor of the homemaker programs. Between professionals and some low income women, she explains, there might be a cultural gap. The professionals, might not, for example, be aware that many families just do not sit down to meals together, that some don't know how to cook, some have inadequate stoves, and some haven't enough pots and pans to cook a full meal.

Some of the families on Mrs. LeBeau's route live at Florence Heights, a government housing project for families. Mrs. LeBeau is a former resident of that project, and feels "living up there helped me a lot" in understanding those residents and working with them. She finds her work as program assistant "has been an education in itself," in learning more about foods and relationships with people. And she terms the program "terrific," because she has been able to teach other housewives how to stretch their dollars and use up commodity foods they receive.

And for Mrs. LeBeau, there has been an added benefit. Next year she will be a part-time program assistant and a part-time teacher, and hopes to be earning enough to take her family off the state rolls of Aid to Dependent Children. She has five children, three living at home.

Being a program assistant means knocking on doors to introduce yourself, and then conducting classes in kitchens sometimes crowded by neighborhood housewives who've come for a lesson with the lady of the house. It means earning $2.50 an hour to start, beginning with the first session of the training program. It often means informing, through the county home economist, agencies of particular problems families may have; and informing families of agencies which may help them. It sometimes means telling a housewife her family may qualify for commodity foods, and then showing her how to use them.

And when a family does not have enough food in the house for a full meal, being a program assistatnt may mean using expense account money to supply food enough for a home cooking demonstration. This and more for 20, 30, or 40 hours a week.

Some women trained as program assistants do not continue working in the program. They drop out for reasons ranging from "death in my immediate family" to "did not feel that I was contributing enough help to the program" to "for a better position."

But other program assistants stay with the program for reasons like these: "Contact with other people." "Nutritional education made me recognize the need to change values." "I like to meet people, teach them how to cook their meals, especially children's diets."

Some women taught by program assistants have qualified to become program assistants themselves. When a woman applies for the training program, references from work, church, neighbors, and other sources are checked by county home economists in charge of the program.

Funds totaling more than $1 million from the U.S. Department of Agriculture have financed the Massachusetts Cooperative Extension Food and Nutrition Program for these 2 1/2 years. Aside from the education given so many women, Prof. Eastwood finds another benefit derived from the $1 million. Each program assistant eventually says "I care" to about 35 families.

Fitzpatrick Recommends Resident Heads Receive Full-Time Contracts

By ANN GURNETT
MDC Staff

Assoc. Dean of Students Dan Fitzpatrick has recommended that a 9 month contract be developed for Heads of Residence, currently employed on full-time 12 month professional contracts. The contract would be similar to one now available to faculty at a salary rate of 15% less than the current figures.

The plan, designed to relieve "excessive payroll expense and unnecessary personnel and morale problems," will also contain a provision for the hiring of Heads of Residence for summer employment at 10% of their salary, said Fitzpatrick.

The program would be phased into the current operating procedure by stipulating that all future Heads of Residence be hired under the nine month contract. Present Heads of Residence would then be given the option of remaining on the 12 month contract or entering into a 9 month contract, said Fitzpatrick.

Employees entering into the nine month contract would be paid over a period of twelve months at a starting salary 15% less than that earned by a full time employee, he added. They would not be eligible for life insurance, retirement or vacation, but would be eligible for group medical insurance, he continued.

Other conditions of the nine month contract will be announced in the near future, said Fitzpatrick.

Cally Guilty; Manson To Die

LOS ANGELES AP—A jury acting after the defendants were ejected for angry shouts Monday decreed death in San Quentin Prison's gas chamber for Charles Manson and three women followers convicted of the savage murders of Sharon Tate and six others.

When the jury came to court in late afternoon, after less than two full days of deliberations, Manson, 36, shouted before any of the penalties were announced:

"I don't see how you can get by with this. You don't have no authority over me. You're not nearly as good as me. This is not the people's courtroom."

After the judge ordered him out, the three women codefendants, their long hair cropped close to their heads for the occasion, spoke out.

"You've all judged yourselves," said Patricia Krenwinkel, 23. "It's gonna come down hard," cried Susan Atkins, 22.

"Lock your doors. Protect your kids." After the judge ordered her out and she shouted: "Remove yourself from the face of the earth. You're all fools."

Leslie Van Houten, 21, was ushered out last after muttering, "You've all just judged yourselves."

The outburst was reminiscent of others that have peppered the long trial, causing the defendants to be ejected repeatedly.

As the first of the women's death sentences were read, two women jurors appeared to be blinking back tears. When each was polled as to whether the verdicts were theirs, all clearly announced, "Yes."

The judge, thanking jurors profusely and shaking the hand of each, said if it were possible to give out medals of honor he would bestow one on each for what he called "a trying ordea."

He said he knew of no jury sequestered for so long or put through so great a task. He told them they could discuss the case with anyone, but were under no obligation to give interviews. Once they read newspapers published during their sequestration, he said, they might understand why they were locked up so long.

The jury's decision followed 10 hours of deliberations over two days, after an eight week penalty trial. By contrast, deliberations for the convictions, which followed a seven-month trial, took 42 hours and 40 minutes over 11 days.

Superior Court Judge Charles H. Older set April 19 for formal sentencing and post trial motions.

Defense attorneys appeared shaken by the death penalties. They had asked jurors for "the gift of life" for the defendants. Women jurors looked tearful and the forman wiped his eyes after the verdicts.

The judge has the power to reduce the death penalty to life imprisonment.

Under California law the jury that returns convictions of first-degree murder or conspiracy must sit at a penalty phase, hearing testimony and arguments to help it decide between death and life imprisonment. The law provides no standards or guidelines for the decision, leaving it entirely up to jurors. California has executed four women in the past.

Slain Aug. 9, 1969, were Miss Tate, 26, pregnant blonde wife of movie director Roman Polanski, and four visitors to her mansion. Slain a night later at their home were Mr. and Mrs. Leno LaBianca, wealthy market owner.

The action climaxed a nine-month, two-part trial tabbed the longest such criminal proceeding in California and perhaps in the nation.

FT. BENNING, Ga. (AP)—Lt. William Calley was convicted Monday of the premeditated murder of 22 Vietnamese civilians at My Lai three years ago. He is the first American veteran of Vietnam to be held responsible in the My Lai massacre.

Calley stood ramrod straight as the verdict was read, then snapped a salute to the jury foreman. He was flanked by his military and civilian lawyers.

Calley insisted that everything he did at My Lai that sultry Saturday morning three years ago he did under orders of his company commander, Capt. Ernest Medina, currently awaiting court-martial on similar charges at Ft. McPherson, Ga.

"It was no big deal," Calley testified at My Lai. "I felt then and I still do that I acted as I was directed and that I earried out the orders that I was given and I do not feel wrong in doing so."

A half-hour after the verdict was announced, military police escorted him to the post stockade. "Take my word for it, the boy's crushed," his civilian attorney, George Latimer said, as they left the courtroom.

He was placed in quarters separate from those of enlisted men, and will be returned to the courtroom at 9 a.m. Tuesday when the sentencing phase of the court-martial begins.

The jury now must decide whether to sentence Calley to life imprisonment or death.

Calley was convicted of killing one person at a trail intersection, 20 at a ditch where he admitted firing six or eight bullets, of the death of a man in white and of assault on a child believed to be about 2 years old.

He had been charged with the deaths of 102 Vietnamese men, women and children.

Calley was notified that a verdict was ready by an Army officer who went to his bachelor apartment on the post.

"They're finally ready," he said. He was tense when he arrived at the courtroom, but smiled at newsmen.

"We're with you Calley" shouted a young blonde teenager in the crowd of about 100 persons who watched Calley escorted to the two-room cell at the stockade.

Capt. Ernest Medina, Calley's superior officer at My Lai who also faces court-martial on murder charges, could not be reached for comment at Ft. McPherson in Atlanta.

His military counsel, Capt. Mark Kadish, said Medina would have no statement until Tuesday.

To convict Calley, the jury needed only the concurrence of four of the six members of the panel.

But in the sentencing phase, it will require the vote of all six members for the death sentence. And the agreement of five members is needed for a life sentence.

The jury members remained sequestered for the sentencing phase and no one was permitted to question them.

News of the My Lai atrocities was kept secret within the Americal Division for more than a year. But on Sept. 5, 1969, Calley was indicted one day before he was scheduled to be discharged from the Army after two tours of duty in Vietnam.

Details of My Lai piled one upon the other and the nation and the world experienced horror and shock.

On Dec. 8, 1969, President Nixon said, "What appears was certainly a massacre and under no circumstances was it justified."

Calley went to trial last Nov. 12 on the same infantry post where he won his gold second lieutenant's bars at Officer Candidate's School on Sept. 7, 1967-six months before My Lai.

The case went to the jury of one colonel, four majors and one captain March 16-the third anniversary of My Lai.

Star government witness at the trial was Paul Meadlo, 23. More than a year after My Lai on a national television program, his blunt admission that he himself killed unarmed Vietnamese at My Lai shocked the nation. Later at Calley's trial, he took the witness stand, only after being granted immunity from prosecution.

Meadlo told the jury that about 30 villagers were rounded up and taken to the intersections of two trails in My Lai. He quoted Calley as telling him "I want them dead."

Side-by-side, Meadlo continued, he and Calley mowed down the captives with M16 rifle bullets.

Meadlo said he and Calley proceeded through the village, emerging from its eastern edge at the drainage ditch, where more villagers were being collected by GIs.

"We got another job to do Meadlo," Calley was quoted as saying. Then, Meadlo testified, the two of them fired round upon round into the ditch, until it ran red with blood of the screaming villagers. One witness said an assembly line of death was set up with groups of fresh victims being marched into the ditch at intervals.

The next day Meadlo stepped on a mine, which blew off his right foot. He was to say later that because of his involvement at My Lai "God punished me."

Pakistan War Flares...

NEW DELHI (AP) — Sheik Mujibar Rahman's rebel force appeared Monday to be keeping up its struggle to make East Pakistan an independent nation, despite the massive show of strength by the armed forces of West Pakistan.

Official Indian sources said the 51-year-old sheik who heads the now outlawed Awami League is free, according to information received by the New Delhi government.

West Pakistani authorities have been claiming that the sheik was taken into custody following his unilateral proclamation of independence.

The Pakistan government radio station in the Western provincial capital city of Lahore said the "situation in East Pakistan continued to be fully under control."

But Indian sources questioned this claim. They said that the Pakistan armed forces were continuing to bomb some parts of the province and had used paratroopers for the first time to quell the revolt.

While official informants did not disclose the source of their information, it was presumed that Indian military units based near the border with East Pakistan were able to monitor military radios and flights of airplanes.

The Indian sources said the Pakistani paratroopers appeared to be trying to wipe out five clandestine transmitters broadcasting messages on behalf of Sheik Mujib.

There have been no independent reports from East Pakistani government and the imposition of stiff press censorship in the rest of the country.

Official sources in the Indian border town of Agartala, capital of Tripura State, said the sound of tanks, mortars and machine guns could be heard in the Sonamura area of East Pakistan, just three miles across the border.

The border areas had been relatively free of fighting and the report could indicate the Pakistani army either was attempting to seal the border of had gained sufficient control of the interior to turn their attention to the more remote areas.

As Arabs Clash

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Jordanian troops clashed with Palestinian guerrillas for the fourth consecutive day Monday but King Hussein's government claimed it had restored order and that the guerrillas had ceased to be a military problem.

Jordan's Prime Minister Wefsi Tell told Parliament the army could wipe out the guerrillas everywhere in Jordan within a matter of hours but said the government intended no such thing.

At the same time, Egypt mounted a diplomatic offensive in Paris in an effort to pressure Israel to agree to a peace settlement.

Guerrilla spokesman in Cairo and Damascus, Syria, claimed government troops were continuing an artillery attack on Irbid and Amman, the capital, has risen to 200 killed and 400 wounded in the past three days.

Libyan leader Maummer Kadafi and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat charged that Jordan had provoked the violence as an excuse for eliminating the Palestinian resistance movement.

In Paris, an Egyptian spokesman said U.N. special envoy Gunnar V. Jarring told Egypt's Foreign Minister Mahmoud Riad in a meeting Monday there could be no progress toward peace in the Middle East until Israel replied to Jarring's latest memorandum.

Mohamed Hassan el Zayyat, Egypts Permanent Delegate to the United Nations, said Jarring had "nothing to ask and nothing to propose to us," during the two-hour meeting at a Paris hotel.

"He simply thought," said el Zayyat, "that such a meeting was necessary to discuss the situation."

Ex-Governor Guilty Of Bribary Charge

CHARLESTON, W. VA. (AP) - William Wallace Barron, West Virginia's 1961-65 Democratic governor, was sentenced to federal prison Monday just minutes after he pleaded guilty to bribing the foreman of the federal court jury which acquitted him in a 1968 bribery-conspiracy trial.

Barron, 59, was sentenced to 25 years, the maximum under the three counts of conspiracy, bribery and obstruction of justice to which he pleaded guilty.

Imposition of the maximum sentence at this time was mandatory because Federal Judge John A. Field Jr. granted a defense motion for a study to be made of Barron's case during the next 90 days. Judge Field said the sentence he imposed would be subject to "review and revision" at the end of that time on the basis of the study.

Less than an hour after he was sentenced, Barron left in custody of two deputy U.S. marshals to be driven to the Medical Center for Federal Prisoners at Springfield, Mo.

Ralph E. Buckalew, foreman of the jury which acquitted Barron and convicted four other defendants in the 1968 trial here, pleaded guilty last month to taking a $25,000 bribe in the case. He has started serving a 20-year sentence in federal penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa. The indictment to which Barron pleaded guilty was returned by a federal grand jury last week but remained sealed until Monday.

Gerry Has Friends In D.C. #9

By CHRISTINE REYNOLDS
MDC Staff

A courtly gentleman strolled over to a table where a girl sat alone.

"Mind if I join you?"

Within minutes, he became her confidant, counselor, and flirtatious admirerer. Yet, moments later he was at another table, where new faces wore the same embarrassed and pleased smile that follow his compliments.

The scene is not from the Campus Center, but from Berkshire Dining Commons in Southwest. The gentleman is Gerald Baldassaro, dining hall supervisor of the D.C. staff. He is not only the ombudsman of the students and kitchen help, but the Commons Jester, as well.

"I have the most wonderful job in the world. The kids mean so much to me. Sometimes they'll come in irritated, but after I talk to them a while I can make them happy."

Dapperly dressed in a crisp white shirt and bow tie, Gerry delights in flirting.

"I try to give every girl a compliment. It makes them feel good, and gives their boyfriends competition. In fact, if I were twenty-one again, I'd give yours a run for his money," he told this interviewer.

Jerry is sixty-five, on pension, and has "a wonderful, wonderful wife" whom he loves dearly.

He is a touch of Home, equipped with a repertoire of quips and cliches to cheer the nostalgic freshman. Kids talk to Gerry about their parents, understanding that he'll empathize from the other side of the generation gap.

"You know, I've never found anything bad in kids. I respect them, and they appreciate it when I'm nice. They're different from us older people, and have to be shown consideration."

"This job is the perfect wind-up to a good life...it means so much to me. I just try to make the kids happy...and I'm happy for the fact that they like me."

Pope Paul, Tito Huddle On Peace, Future of Iron Curtain Catholics

VATICAN CITY (AP)-Pope Paul VI and President Tito of Yugoslavia talked for more than an hour Monday about peace in the world and liberty for the Roman Catholic Church in Communist society.

Tito's call at the Vatican was the first official one any Communist head of state ever paid on the supreme ruler of the world's 600 million Catholics.

For the first time the flag of communism flew on a Vatican motorcade-the one that carried Tito from his Rome hotel to the Pope's palace-and on the buildings of the Holy See itself.

The historic private audience closed a five-day fence-mending visit to Italy by the 78-year-old Yugoslav leader. He hailed the growing friendship between Yuogoslavia and Italy in official talks last week and called for collaboration in seeking a middle east peace. On Saturday Tito met Egyptian Foreign Minister Mahmoud Riad in Pisa for an up-to-the minute rundown of Cairo's latest policies toward Israel.

Peace prospects in the Middle East and Indochina played a leading part in the private, 75-minute discussion which the Pope and Tito held, with interpreters, in the Pontiff's library.

The Pope, in a speech afterward, praised Tito for seeking "peace and international collaboration." During the private meeting, a Vatican communique said, the Pope called for "a negotiated and fair solution of the conflicts in the Middle East and Indochina, which would give tranquilty to those populations."

Tito, using stronger language than the Pope, took an apparent slap at Israel by saying a Middle East settlement should eliminate "the consequences of the war of aggression of 1967."

He said he was troubled by the "latest developments" in Southeast Asia and Africa. In these areas, he said, "entire nations are exposed to great suffering and deprived of elementary rights by the brutal use of force."

Smith Defends Nixon, Didn't Buy Her Vote

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Margaret Chase Smith defended President Nixon Monday against what she branded "extremely erroneous and unfair accusations" that he tried to buy her SST vote with a letter rescinding a shipyard-closure order.

Nixon's letter to her about his decision to save the Portsmouth N.H. Naval Shipyard and her vote against the administration-advocated amendment to continue federal funds for development of the U.S. supersonic transport plane last Wednesday "were close in chronology only by coincidence and not by plan," Mrs. Smith told the Senate in a statement.

The Maine Republican, ranking minority member of the Armed Services Committee, said that "to conclude that the President crassly and crudely sought to buy my vote on the SST because of what was only chronological coincidence does the President a grave disservice and injustice."

Draft Counselor's Corner

Welcome Back

By GILBERT J. SALK

Welcome back from vacation. My head's not back together yet, so I'll just jot down a few passing thoughts of interest.

Right now, we have a large number of qualified counselors with spare time on their hands. This will change as we get closer to finals and term paper time. The time to check on your draft status and alternatives, in other words, is NOW, while we still have the personnel to give your case the time and attention it deserves. If you're graduating, flunking out, dropping out, or transferring, you're prime cannon fodder. Don't count on a high number--draft calls may go as high as 300 this year. Visit Draft Counseling Services in 418E SU second floor soon.

If you're going to (or are curious about) a CO, group CO counseling has resumed on Monday and Thursday afternoons, 1:00 to 4:00, in 805 CC. Come when you can and leave when you must, but come and talk about your beliefs, your bitch about the draft, and your feelings about war.

Several residence areas now have part-time draft counseling offices. The office in SW is located in the Master's office in T-2 on the first floor on Tues. Evenings. Other hours are to be scheduled. The Open Door in Hamlin House in the Quad has counselors on call. Bill Staton is counseling in his room in 336 Baker House (serving Central Area and the Hill). He'll be available 3:00-5:30 and 7-11 p.m. Mon-Fri, and anytime on weekends. Call 6612 3 to be sure he's in.

Yours truly will be speaking in Grayson House at 8 p.m. Wednesday (tomorrow) on the draft. Come listen and ask questions.

What are you doing this summer? Would you like to help your brothers hassle out their draft problems? If you get the information, you can set up shop on your own hours in churches, at home, in social agencies, or some other convenient location. We plan to run a summer counselor training session right after finals. It will be open to anyone from any part of New England, so if you have friends, ministers, old high school teachers, or other acquaintances who might be interested, let them know about it, and sign up yourself. If you want to help plan the program (i.e., get publicity out, arrange for a dorm, etc.) please contact Draft Counseling Services.

Coming soon: A pullout section on draft deferments and manipulations, resistance, medical standards, registration procedures, and other assorted trivia. Watch for it, and save it. It may even prove to be worth more than the Playboy centerfold.

Questions to this column should be addressed to: Gilbert J. Salk, c/o Draft Counseling Services RSO #395, Campus Center, Univ. of Mass., Amherst, Mass. 01002

Free personal draft counseling available. Draft Counseling Services, 418E Student Union 2nd. floor.

Drop Charges In N. Bedford Panther Case

NEW BEDFORD (AP)-Charges of conspiracy to commit murder and commit anarchy, and inciting to riot were dismissed Monday against 10 men arrested during racial disorders last summer.

Dist. Atty. Phillip A. Rollins said in the opening moments of their trial that he didn't have enough evidence to make a case against them.

However, other charges against three of the 10 were continued.

The men were among 20 arrested after an early-morning raid on an alleged store-front black panthers headquarters.

Police conducted the raid after a man was shot and wounded as he passed the store.

At least 110 persons were arrested as the city was wracked by several weeks of racial violence.

Charges of illegal possession of a firearm and possession of stolen goods were continued against two of the defendants, Robert Stevens, 24, of Acushnet, and Richard Duarte, 36, of New Bedford. A charge of possession of stolen goods was continued against Frank Grace, 26, of New Bedford. No date was set for their trials.

All charges were dropped against Pedro Almeida, 18, Andrew Mendoza, 28, Russell Rebeiro, 26, and John J. Vieira, 21, all of New Bedford, Robert Heard, 22; John W. Thomas, 21, and Orlando Vaughn, 25, all of Boston.

The indictments had originally been sought by former Dist. Atty. Edmund Dinis.

About 100 persons waited outside the courthouse during the proceedings, but there were no demonstrations.

Split Decision

Lieutenant William L. Calley has become the first person held responsible for the My Lai massacres of March 16, 1968 as he was convicted by a jury of six of premeditated murder at his trial yesterday in Fort Benning, Ga. The verdict came after a deliberation of thirteen days which followed the four month long trial.

The decision, though it will automatically be appealed, is a landmark one. What lies ahead for Lt. Calley is difficult to predict and his future may someday be determined only by a direct appeal to the White House. Yet the importance of this ruling lies not in the future of Calley alone.

The entire military system of rule and command was on trial at Fort Benning too. Unlike Calley, however, this body received what might be termed a split decision. While the hierarchy won a stunning victory, the soldiers, the real fighting men, must, as usual, suffer the consequences of their superior's decisions.

Lt. Calley is an officer as is Captain Medina, the next man on the firing line. Yet these are not the men who sit in offices in Washington and abroad who decide and plan war strategy. Instead, they are simply middle men who transfer the diagrammed instructions into disastrous reality. They are placed in predicaments and situations which are completely devoid of rationality and humanity and are expected to react to them rationally and humanely. Failure to do so can easily land one in a court house in Fort Benning, Georgia.

The adverse decision handed to Calley and to the armed forces underlings should evoke more than a mute response from its victims. In Vietnam, where the decision was studied with a good deal more than passing interest, the reactions of Calley's peers should be interesting.

The obvious result of all this could be a slow dissipation of the military chain of command. More specifically, this process might be achieved by the refusal of soldiers to obey orders which they felt might put them in a precarious position, both morally and legally. These men, knowledgable of Calley's demise, can follow the precedent set by Bravo company last week and abstain from action, though it is worth noting that the Bravo incident had completely unrelated circumstances surrounding it.

If, indeed, this was to happen and soldiers not only in Vietnam but in every military station around the world refused to obey orders which might put them in moral jeopardy, the military system, as we know it any way, could surely not last. We must not overlook the fact, though, that these men could be court martialled for this action, too. In a manner of speaking, they are damned if they do and damned if they don't.

Whether the fighting men around the world will actually take this action will not be known for a while. In the meantime, the administration has discovered a way of saying "we don't like what's going on there either". The only problem is that Calley must suffer the consequences. Yet if our military forces can take heed of all this and act in a positive manner to change the situation, the military structure could be weakened and eventually find itself with little or no control over its chattels. In that situation, it would be extremely difficult for the armed forces to survive, let alone wage war. Perish the thought.

Nature's Hour

By PETER L. CAMERON
MDC Staff

Spring is here, by God! Yesterday I came out of the dorm at noon and the warm breeze hit me, pulling the corners of my lips into a smile. At last this wintry prison, this black and white sense-cell of grey buildings and skies opens its doors. Blast the stereos out of the windows...I don't care...as long as the music will float on that magical breeze! Now we can see all the signs of life exuberant at once. The flag following in its middle rises, falls, and flips off at its end like sand dunes in currents of tropical waters. The wind hurries along and strikes the pines in a rush. They turn and tremor, fearing a north blast, and, then, turn back again...this time in rude health.

Let, too, the doors of hearts open up. We are all too critical and shy. We were the simple pawns of the irritable mistress Frost and now we thaw. Now we see a different world in the same old world. We see a gaudy, garden groomed, God-given, grass gleeful group of ourselves. Conformity in spirit is the true note of nature's hour. And there you have it...my mindless message on an early spring day.

Richard C. Hanson

Machiavellian Preservation

Now that 1.5 million people have been killed in Southeast Asia during a short ten year period of bombing, massacreing, wasting, etc.; and now that the chances are if you've ever opened your mouth about anything the government has done, you are probably listed in some "special security" file; and now that we can be assured of having Attorney General John Mitchell run Nixon's 1972 campaign; maybe, just maybe, we can dissolve the nation.

This isn't a cry for the over-throw of the government. It's more a rejection on emotional grounds of a very complicated and brutal system of organizing human behavior which doesn't satisfy my idea of what people as a group should be doing.

Of course it wouldn't work. Even though we could change some of the trappings of the way we as a nation and as individuals have fallen into, the ones which make an army the place to build men and the market place a way of getting everything you can from your fellow man, we would still have to deal with human beings, who seem capable of most anything.

Rather than seeking a life which only benefits one man, the self, people would have to co-operate to make life better. Instead of self-gratification at the expense of others (whether it be stopping "communists" around the world by destroying people, or wanting an SST because it will make money while endangering people who have to live on the earth.)

What we are left with is the phenomena of government for its own ends and shades of "what's good for the government is good enough for the people." In the United States today there are large numbers of people who just don't like their government. People who expect the worse and usually get it. What's more there are people who will follow a government regardless of its practices.

When a young officer in the Army sees the Department of Defense finding a man guilty for crimes which it taught and ordered to be committed you have instability in the ranks. When policies hurt an individual's personal ability to make a living, the results are chaotic. If authorities can blindly, though not color-blindly, categorize one-eighth of the population as enough of a security risk to keep files on them, one can only view the government as acting for its own welfare and not that of those it is supposed to serve.

One can expect no better though. The first duty of government, as any Machiavellian knows, is to preserve itself. Governments of the past and our government now have demonstrated what steps it is willing to take to preserve itself, and all its self-serving bureaucracy.

That leaves me with an endemic desire to see the government go away. Little hope for my wish? Yes, but it is the healthiest attitude I can find.

Vending-Machine Education

Dr. Nathan Barf, famed discoverer of the relationship between broken cigarette machines and sexual repression, has revealed a plan which he claims will settle "once and for all" the argument over a University tuition increase.

Speaking yesterday in the eighth-floor men's room of the Campus Center, Dr. Barf outlined his plan before the second annual meeting of the National Association of Retiring Taxidermists. At the end of his speech, to show their belief in his plan, the Association offered to stuff Dr. Barf and present him to the Club of the Mass. Legislature: The Federated Union of Concerned Klansmen--Order of Ferocious Flying Seals. Dr. Barf declined the offer.

Dr. Barf suggested, as the ideal means of raising money for the Massachusetts legislature, the introduction of the vending-machine method at UMass. In the Barf system, students will be fitted with earphones attached to a control center, which will transmit the lecturing professor's voice to each seat. The student will be required to deposit a dime every five minutes, or his headphones will be automatically shut off.

To insure that professors do their best to keep the earphones in use, they will receive a percentage of the revenue from earphone deposits. It will then be in the professor's best interest to keep his students depositing their dimes to listen to him.

Dr. Barf has suggested that the legislature recruit California used-car salesmen as ideal for this purpose. He acknowledged that using these people would be a problem at first, since they would be generally unable to write or publish enough books to be kept at the University. However, he "has faith in" the legislature's "abnormal desire for money". Dr. Barf feels that in the quest for more profits, the legislature will step in and halt the infamous "publish or perish" rule of retaining faculty. Thus, he said, vending-machine education would have untold fringe benefits, also.

Responding to an audience comment that this method seemed a rather unnatural means of receiving an education, Dr. Barf defended his system. "On the contrary," he said. "It is the most natural means available. All our lives we have deposited coins in vending machines and received candy bars, cigarettes, and what have you. Why not education?"

Dr. Barf is the author of three books on vending-machine education, none of which have been published: FIVE-MINUTE BITS OF KNOWLEDGE, IGNORANCE, OUR GREATEST NATURAL RESOURCE, and EDUCATION AS HEAVY INDUSTRY. He is scheduled to appear next week before the State Senate's Ways and Means Committee, to present his revenue plan for a Sewer Tax by Head Count.

Times Are A 'Changin'

WASHINGTON--If everybody in the country is becoming schizophrenic, they're entitled to it. Even the banks have gone bananas.

Just a few months ago, because of the tight money situation, it was impossible to get a loan from a bank. In order to attract deposits, they were offering everything from hot water bottles to color television sets if people would just leave their savings in for 90 days.

You can imagine my surprise then, when I turned on the radio the other day and heard a commercial for my bank which said that anyone borrowing more than $500 would get a free fondue cooking set.

I couldn't believe it, so I rushed down to the bank to see my friend Stokesbury, who is a vice president.

"Stokesbury," I said, "what is this about you offering a fondue cooking set if someone borrows $500 or more?"

"It's true," Stokesbury said. "If you don't want a fondue cooing set, we'll give you a wooden salad bowl with an ox-boned butter knife."

"But I was here three months ago, pleading with you for a loan of $500 and you threw me out," I said.

"I hope you're not the kind of person who holds a grudge," Stokesbury said. "Here's $500, and to show you there are no hard feelings, I'll loan you another $10,000 at the prime interest rate."

"No dice," I said. "As a matter of fact, I'm thinking of making a deposit."

"Oh, no," cried Stokesbury, "don't make a deposit. Everybody is making deposits. We need people to borrow money, not to save it."

"I don't understand what's happened in just three months to turn you around," I said.

Stokesbury held his head in his hands. "It's fear. People are afraid of being thrown out of work. If Kellerman on Chestnut Street loses his job, everybody else on Chestnut Street suddenly becomes frightened and says, 'Let's put the money in the bank. We could be next.' No one wants to get into debt any more. How can we have a thriving economy if people SAVE, SAVE, SAVE, SAVE?"

"I'm very sympathetic to your problem, Stokesbury," I said. "And I wish I could help you out by borrowing money, but my wife says we should put something aside for a rainy day."

"You could be dead by the time it rains," Stokesbury shouted at me. "Listen, suppose I make you a token loan of $200, payable at your convenience, and I throw in a washer and dryer. Would you go for it?"

"I don't know."

"What do you want, my blood?" Stokesbury cried. "I haven't made a loan in a week. Help me!" He was down on his knees. "Please, help me."

"All right," I said. "I'll borrow the $200 but we want the washer, dryer and the fondue cooking set."

"It's yours," said Stokesbury, shoving the $200 in my pocket.

After he helped me load the washer, dryer and fondue set into the car, he grabbed my hand warmly and said, "I'll never forget this."

I turned away so I wouldn't cry.

Letters To The Editor

Conscientious Civil Disobedience

To the Editor:

One way of saying NO to the government's warfare policies is readily available to all students with telephones: Refuse to pay the 10% phone tax.

This is the only tax specifically tied to the Vietnam War. It was passed by Congress in 1966 as President Johnson asked for more Pentagon funds to support his escalation of the War, and Chairman Wilbur Mills of the House Ways and Means Committee said at the time, "It is clear that Vietnam and only the Vietnam operation makes this bill necessary." It is also the easiest tax to refuse because it can be deducted from each month's phone bill, and the telephone company has assured refusers that their service will not be interrupted.

Boycotting the telephone tax allows you to "vote" 12 times a year in opposition to the longest war in American history, a war that is immoral, unpopular (73% of the people, according to recent polls, want ALL troops out of Indochina by December), undeclared by Congress, and waged mainly against the civilian populations of Indochina.

Send a brief letter to the phone company along with your payment of regular phone charges explaining why you are refusing to pay the tax. The Internal Revenue Service will try to collect from you by sending a cumulative bill several months later and eventually taking the money from your bank account or salary. But meanwhile you have done what you can to withhold support from the Pentagon and have created difficult collection problems for the I.R.S. WARNING: Tax refusal is technically a misdemeanor, and although no one has been prosecuted yet, it is a small act of conscientious civil disobedience. For more information visit the Valley Peace Center in downtown Amherst, or come to a war tax resistance meeting Saturday, 10 a.m. Grace Episcopal Church Parish House (opposite the Lord Jeff) on April 3.

You can join the 2500 people in New England who are already refusing the phone tax, according to telephone company records, and thereby expressing their opposition to our government's warfare policies.

Foolish Cynicism

To the Editor:

Why must we suffer your foolish cynicism (March 29--The Amherst Hog Farm) along with Dining Commons coffee so many of these mornings, Dave? If you were to really look outside of the Collegian office you'd see about 20,000 hung-up, fucked over, mixed-up and beautiful people (students, faculty, police, etc). You know it's all a matter of perspective--and yours certainly is messed up. The world is an ugly enough place without you adding to it with your Bullshit. And, you are a fanatic: you'd have to be to constantly use "editorial" (expression of opinion on some issue) space to express your paranoid views.

Why not meditate for 6 months on the beauty of those around you and the horror of your own perverted soul.

Your fellow hog farmer,
Lee Sandwen

Sober Facts

To the Editor:

Your readers may be interested in a recent survey of the Chicago Traffic Court regarding operating under the influence convictions.

The most dangerous driver, according to the survey, is the "social or occasional drinker". He accounts for 80 per cent of convictions of drunken driving or operating under the influence and about the same amount of fatalities in alcohol-related accidents. The confirmed alcoholic accounts for only 20 per cent.

I suppose the pertinent observation is that if you have a problem with drinking you are at least more likely to cope with it by not driving than are those who do not recognize the insidious effect of drinking before operating motor vehicles.

Since the first three months of 1971 have or may have resulted in the suspension of about 12 undergraduate and graduate student licenses to drive due to operating under the influence convictions and Massachusetts law which automatically requires one year loss of license for one conviction, six years loss after the second and lifetime loss after the third, perhaps those of your readers who drink "socially" will consider the risk of loss involved if they decide they are sober enough to drive.

During last week's vacation, while students in one of the dorms had to make housing space available at the security risk of the entire dorm, the campus center (would-be student center) hotel space was filled to only about 10%.

Perverted People

To the Editor:

To those of you who are considering either moving into a coed dorm, or converting your present dorm, I'd like to present some facts and opinions. Overshadowing the supposed "advantages" of a coed living community, are the harsh realities, both expected and unexpected. Last spring, I realized the dorm would be noisier, but the frequent all-night parties and increased volume levels are many times intolerable. There is no consideration expressed for those who do not plan on sleeping until 1:00 PM on Saturday and Sunday. There has been an increasing number of thefts in the dorm. One girl had her pocketbook stolen while she was in the bathroom, and since she saw the thief, he could be identified. However, our 'brother' denied the accusation when confronted. For many months now, either a brother or a brother's friend in the dorm has had a master key and has broken into rooms. I don't even feel safe taking a shower anymore since there have been "peeping Tom" incidents on the corridor. There are many sick, perverted people on this campus, and it's quite evident that we can't avoid them. I realize that there have probably been many more incidents or which I'm not even aware. It may be a dorm security problem, but to me, these types of things point to people living right in the dorm. Perhaps other coed dorms don't run into such difficulties. However, if you are considering going coed, you should be aware of varied problems which might emerge, and which might involve you personally.

Big Man On Campus: Police Undercover Agent

There is a new man on campus among the freaks and fraternity men, the athletes and the esthetes, the bookish types and the bomb throwers. He is the spy.

He has not come to study Russian or Chinese or to prepare himself to infiltrate some foreign nation. Instead, his mission is to watch the students, the faculty and the off-campus crowds.

Though such undercover activity was almost unheard of five years ago, it has now become almost a permanent institution on the American college scene.

It is the product of student turmoil--rioting, bombing, arson, strikes, demonstrations--and the widespread drug problem.

The police defend their undercover tactics as the only practical way to enforce drug laws and to keep watch on radical campus activities, which, they fear, might trigger disturbances in the surrounding community.

What is happening around the country shows up in sharp relief at the University of New Mexico. In fact, reports from college campuses coast to coast indicate there is nothing at all extraordinary about such incidents as these:

A semi-undercover state policeman, Jack E. Johnson, was seen on the campus from the fall of 1969 to the summer of 1970. He generally tried to blend in with the students and carried a Brownie Instamatic camera. His presence was publicly announced on several occasions. Once he was spotted and identified at a closed faculty meeting and was asked to leave. Mr. Johnson is now back on uniformed patrol duty near Albuquerque.

Two city narcotics agents were discovered by students living in Coronado Hall, a dormitory for men. The agents left quietly soon after they were identified and both city and university officials confirmed their presence.

A city policeman using false press credentials posed as an Associated Press photographer during demonstrations last spring protesting the invasion of Cambodia. Howard Graves, the AP bureau chief in Albuquerque, complained to the police, who promised it would not happen again.

Unspecified law enforcement agencies requested permission to place undercover agents on the campus but were refused by university officials.

Like most of the officials at the other colleges that reported similar incidents, school officials here were not pleased with the snooping but felt helpless in keeping undercover men from either enrolling as regular students or mixing with off-campus crowds.

"We do not condone or encourage such activity," said Harold W. Lavender, vice president for student affairs. "Neither can we prevent it. We've had opportunities to deliberately enroll undercover agents and we have, in high dudgeon, turned them down."

John S. Todd, an assistant to the Albuquerque city manager who is responsible for police matters, said undercover men were assigned to the university area whenever there were "specific instances of illegal activity" such as narcotics use. Agents are also assigned, he said, when "feeling is developing" over a campus political issue or national political issue.

Mr. Todd said it was only "prudent" to watch radical activities that might spill over from the campus to the surrounding city.

The bulk of the nation's undercover work is done by local police officers or outsiders hired by the state, county or city police, according to the campus reports. Probably the best known undercover man in the United States, M. L. Singkata Thomas Tongyai, known at Hobart College in Canadagua, N.Y., as "Tommy the Traveler," was one of these.

He was hired by the local sheriff's office and, according to an Ontario County grand jury, "advocated violent forms of protest" among student radicals. He took part in a police drug raid on the Hobart campus last June 5.

But Federal agencies, particularly the Federal Bureau of Investigation and United States Army intelligence, have also been watching campuses.

A series of United States Senate committee hearings have detailed the extensive surveillance activities of the Army at such widely separated places as New York University, Northwestern University and Colorado College. However, the Army, under public pressure, has announced it has cut back its civilian watching programs in the United States.

Recent public disclosure of the contents of F.B.I. files stolen March 8 from the bureau's office in Media, Pa., show that it has regularly used informants to watch radical activities at Haverford College.

The F.B.I. has been active elsewhere, too, according to the campus reports. "There's someone here I think you should meet," a University of Illinois student shouted last fall to a group of protesters in front of the Champaign, Ill., county courthouse. "That man there, in the blue jacket, with the camera, works for the F.B.I."

A young, clean-cut man in a blue windbreaker, whom the student identified by name, said nothing and continued to take pictures of the demonstrators, who were protesting acquittal of a former Champaign police officer charged with murder in the death of a black store clerk.

Charles Travelstead, special agent at the Urbana, Ill., office of the F.B.I., declined to comment on the incident but said the agency did use "confidential informants who share our concern in the vital areas of terror[illegible]

"If an individual cooperated with us and incurred expenses," he continued, "he would be reimbursed for out-of-the-pocket expenses."

Much of the undercover activity surrounds anti-drug efforts by the police, who insist that a man in uniform only scares away pushers and buyers.

At Yale University, an Undercover agent named George Miller last November was involved in the arrest of 90 young people on assorted drug charges. Most were not students, but were drifters and dropouts among the so-called "street people" who gather near university campuses across the nation.

A leaflet called "View from Behind Bars" was circulated after the arrests and described the activities of Mr. Miller, who was hired by the New Haven police:

"Lots of people are still muttering how 'Good Ol' George couldn't possibly do that. The stark reality is that George Miller was an incredibly slick agent. He tripped with us, went to rallies with us, turned on with us. He dressed in purple and yellow and wore hip glasses. He waved to us and smiled at us. He was accepted and trusted.

"Some people muttered a few things about not trusting him. But we're all paranoid, right?

"And in the end, George busted our friends...So what does it all mean about our lives? About who we trust and how we really relate to one another? And how do we prevent another George Miller from coming around again?"

Other surveillance methods are also used.

In Miami, Seymor Gelber, chief assistant State's Attorney for Dade County, made a study of campus police at 210 colleges and universities for a doctoral degree from Florida State University. He said 14.1 per cent of those studied admitted using [illegible] of over 20,000 students each, the use of wiretaps was 25 per cent.

Though some of the undercover men say infiltration is a difficult task, others find it easy in the open, accepting atmosphere of college life.

At the University of Kansas, a 19-year-old undercover narcotics agent told The Associated Press:

"I just went into the dorm and acted stupid. I got into conversations and got to know them. Then I asked where I could get the stuff, and they told me."

His work led to a series of early morning raids by 150 agents on the campus at Lawrence, Kan.

At the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor Police Lieut. Eugene Staudenmaier makes no pretense of being undercover as he attends almost all political rallies.

Recently he attended a workshop during a campus peace conference. Someone recognized him and complained. He stood up, identified himself and the workshop members voted to allow him to stay. He left a short time later.

"I don't like this polarized situation where police and students are stereotyped as natural enemies," he said.

At Ohio State University last April, two young men up front in a crowd of rioting students were later identified as undercover state policemen. Their pictures were published in the student newspaper, The Lantern.

The university's 58-man campus police force, armed with .38 caliber revolvers, night sticks and chemical disabling agents, keeps an undercover squad of six men. They are supplemented by undercover Ohio State policemen and Columbus city policemen.

At the University of Texas at Austin there was "Duke," who arrived in a new car with mod clothes and who made fiery speeches during student union demonstrations a year ago. He was

Look Out, Mack's Back In Town

"I see betrayal by a woman", predicts Jenny Diver (Stephanie Schloss) as she reads the palm of Mack the Knife (Tim McDonough) while the rest of the girls from the Wapping street brothel watch on. L to R (Linda Velander, Judi Katz, Deborah Gibbs, and Debra Rochford) in a rehersal of the UMass Music Theatre production of THE THREE PENNY OPERA. Performances, March 31 through April 3 8:15 PM, Bowker Auditorium, UMass. Campus. The classic blend of Bertolt Brecht's playwrighting and Kurt Weill's music will be seen in "Three Penny Opera," the UMass Music Theatre's spring production Wednesday through Saturday, March 31 through April 3, at 8:15 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on the Amherst campus.

"Three Penny Opera," first produced in Berlin in 1925, is a musical version of the exploits of the legendary villain, Mack the Knife. Action of the play centers around the low-life characters who inhabited London in the 1920's.

"Three Penny Opera" is the musical story of Mack the Knife, the hero. The play's New York production in 1954 introduced Brecht as a playwright and Weill as a composer to the United States, and made an international star our of Lotte Lenya.

The UMass production is under the direction of Dallas Murphy. John Howland is music director; Paul Wonsek, set designer; Ruth Seligman, costume designer; and William Menezes, managing director.

Reserved tickets for the four performances of "Three Penny Opera" are available at the Fine Arts Council office, 125 Herter Hall, UMass, Amherst, Massachusetts. Reservations may be made by calling 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at the Bowker Auditorium Box Office one hour before each curtain.

Classics Events Set

The Classics Department announces the following special events, with a lecture tonight and continuing over the next month.

"Comic Elements in Euripides." A lecture by Professor Bernard M.W. Knox, Director of the Center for Hellenic Studies, Washington, D.C. Tuesday, March 30, 8:00 p.m., School of Business Administration 120. A former professor at Yale University and one of the foremost authorities on Greek tragedy, Professor Knox is the author of two books on Sophocles - Oedipus at Thebes and The Heroic Temper: Studies in Sophoclean Tragedy - as well as important articles on Sophocles' Ajax, Philoctetes, and Euripides' Hippolytus. He is presently working on a translation with commentary of Euripides' Medea. His lecture here will deal particularly with Euripides' Electra and Ion.

"Aristophanes' Birds." A lecture by William Arrowsmith, Professor At Large and Educational Consultant Wednesday, April 7, 4:00 p.m., Hasbrouck 20. Professor Arrowsmith, who created America's largest and most lively department of Classics at the University of Texas, is well known for his translations from the Greek and Latin and for his revolutionary theories of higher education.

One of his translations, of Aristophanes' "Clouds," will be presented in Bartlett Auditorium at 8 p.m. that same day by the UMass Theatre. The student play, directed by Asst. Prof. Gary Stewart of the UMass speech department, has received national recognition from the American College Theatre Festival and will be presented at Ford's Theatre in Washington, D.C. prior to its repeat campus performance.

"Troia Antiqua et Rediviva," a choral concert reading of Greek, Latin and Italian verse and prose, by UMass students, will be directed by Prof. Edward Phinney, Jr., Monday, April 12, at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. Prof. Phinney is a UMass associate professor of Romance Languages.

Another UMass associate professor of Romance Languages, Anne Parry, will lecture on "Roman Views of Women," Wednesday, April 21, at 4:30 p.m. in room 231 of Herter Hall.

Prof. Eric Havelock of Yale University will speak about "War as a Way of Life Among the Greeks," Thursday, April 29, at 4:30 p.m. in room 124 of Hasbrouck.

All events are open to the public without charge.

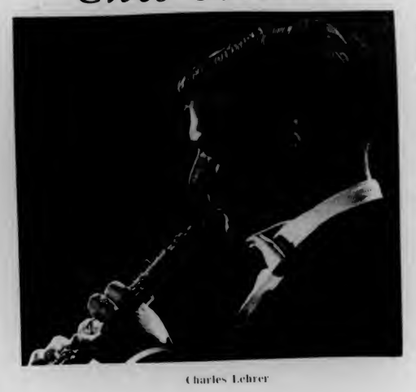
Getting Their Ya-Ya's Out

Get Your Ya's-Ya's Out. The Rolling Stones (London) The Rolling Stones in concert in what amounts to be one of the best culmitative albums of one of the Sixty's most exciting groups. They do Chuck Berry rock-and-roll, a return to the style of their early albums, along with some of their more driving recent hits. The sound is clean with excellent all-around playing and excellent live engineering quality.

B.N.

A New Era. Wade Marcus, Cotillion SD 9043. If you like Lawrence Welk or Ray Coniff, you'll love Wade Marcus. Marcus offers an unimaginative, emotional, instrumental pot pourri of songs like "Something", "A Time For Us" and "Spinning Wheel". Often disguised with a heavy beat and electric guitars, Marcus' group sounds like an aardvark blowing its nose--full of air, hair, and miscellaneous wear.

D.G.



Gary Burton and Keith Jarrett, Gary Burton, Keith Jarrett, Atlantic SD 1577. Gary Burton is jazz-competent and professional. At times, when he and Keith Jarrett are playing alone, one with the vibes, the other with piano, their sound is competent, professional and stimulating.

D.G.

Memphis Two-step. Herbie Mann. Embryo SD 331. Reputations of quality are easy to come by nowadays. A reputation of consistent quality over a period of years must be earned. Herbie Mann has done just that. The flutist composer-arranger interprets others' songs with a sensitivity to his own feelings and to the audience. Mann writes just as well. Perhaps he has mellowed a bit--certainly Memphis Two-Step is not as exciting as his early Newport concerts--but Mann is still quite a Mann.

Music Faculty Member Gives Oboe Recital Sunday

Charles Lehrer

Charles Lehrer (left), a member of the faculty of the UMass Department of Music will offer an oboe recital on Sunday evening, April 4, 1971 at 8 P.M. in Bowker Auditorium.

The program will include Henry Purcell's "The Gordain Knot Unty'd", Gunter Schuller's Sonata for Oboe and Piano, Bellini's "Concerto for Oboe", and works of Bezanson and Bach.

Assisting Mr. Lehrer will be fellow members of the UMass Music faculty and the concert is open to the public without charge.

Politella Aims-Misses

A UMass prof with a sense of humor and his dog, who drew three per cent of the votes in a recent town election, will co-host the "At Home With Kitty" show on Channel 22, (WWLP) tomorrow.

Dr. Dario Politella, associate professor of English and journalistic studies, and his dog, Michael, a 9-year-old "sort of" Collie will appear on the hour-long show, in color, to discuss Politella's latest book, titled "The Illustrated Anatomy of Campus Humor."

Michael is an author in his own right, Politella says, because he "produces" a periodic column of observations from the hydrants and telephone poles of Sunderland, Mass. The column appears irregularly in the Greenfield (Mass) Recorder. The prof collaborates with the dog.

The Kitty Broman Show, which appears at 1 p.m. for one hour, will show both authors at the invitation of Director Ron Langevin. Michael will be highlighted for his interest in politics which resulted in throwing his hat into the ring for the 1972 presidential election, Politella says. Michael has formed a Canine Party staffed by Michael's Marauders who are plumping for the dog vote.

"His 'primary' was the Sunderland Town Election of March 6, when a spontaneous sticker campaign garnered three per cent of the total 687 votes cast for Moderator," Politella says.

"Flushed with this victory, Michael is going on for the Big One in '72."

Politella's book on humor was issued on the Ides of March as a 108-page collection of the innocent humor to be found on 139 college campuses among the headlines, want ads and cartoons of the campus publications.

indicted, but never arrested, and the charges against him were later dropped.

At Northwestern University it was a girl, "Connie," who moved into the apartment of two off-campus radicals and, according to one Northwestern activist, "hung around the campus and was mildly friendly."

Last May, when the police were called during an argument between her and one of her roommates, she identified herself as a member of the "Red Squad" of the Chicago police department. She disappeared the next day.

At the University of California at Berkeley it was a city police officer, Roland Soliz, who had been on campus under the name of "Roland Guzman." He joined Students for a Democratic Society, the Young Socialist Alliance, the Radical Student Union and various Mexican-American groups before he was uncovered by the student newspaper, The Daily Californian.

Former undercover agents, though useless once identified, do have a future. Gerald Kirk, a University of Chicago student who said he worked for the F.B.I. from 1966 to 1969, has been touring the country in the last few months, speaking six nights a week. The topic of his speech is "Inside the Spider's Web." (Reprinted from the New York Times 3/29/71)

NES Looking For Help

Do a Spring thing! N.E.S. is looking for people to help share Spring with the disadvantaged children of Springfield. Tentative plans are being made for a picnic at Look Park; an afternoon of intramural sports here; kite-flying and frisbee matches; and a day exploring Mount Toby.

Interested students who want to help, or who have alternate suggestions, should come to the office in room 104 of the Campus Center, or come to the meetings at 5:45 on Tuesday night in room 177 in the Campus Center.

Panel Set To Discuss Town and UM Growth

A large turnout is expected to attend the open meeting on "The Impact of the Growth of the University on the Town of Amherst" to be held tonight at 7:15 p.m. at the Amherst Regional Junior High School auditorium.

Three presentations will set the stage for subsequent discussion. Chancellor Edward C. Moore of the Mass. Board of Higher Education will outline the probably future course of higher education within the state. John W. Haigis of the UMass Board of Trustees will speak about the University's plans for further growth. Arnold Rhodes of the Amherst Planning Board will present the town's plans for growth as they relate to the Amherst campus.

Following these reports, the reactions of five discussants will be heard: Allen Torrey, Town Manager of Amherst; Mrs. Edith Wilkinson, Chairman of the Amherst Finance Committee; Denison Jones, Realtor of Amherst; K.M. Munnich, Planning Director of the Lower Pioneer Valley Regional Planning Commission; and Robert Weiner, UMass graduate student and town meeting member. There will be an opportunity for questions and comments from the floor.

Moderator for the evening will be Mrs. Ann Snellgrove of the Amherst League of Women Voters. A short business meeting of the League will take place at 7:15. Channel 8 on local Cable TV will carry the program live starting at 7:30.

Air Force Paves Way For Coaching Career

(Editor's Note: With the appointment of Dick MacPherson to replace the retired Vic Fusia to the head coaching helm, UMass football has undergone a complete change of faces in its coaching staff. In order that university sports enthusiasts get better acquainted with the new men who will assist coach MacPherson in the fall, the Collegian sports pages will carry a special series of sketches written by staff reporter Mark Vogler which will focus in on the background and interest information pertaining to each of the six assistants. Today is the first of this five part series.)

Aspiring but unable to pursue a college education in his roundup days at Pittsfield High, Bob Harris enlisted in the United States Air Force with hopes of one day fulfilling his postponed expectations. As it turned out his four years in the service proved as good a vehicle as any in attaining his goal and it eventually paved way for his chosen career.

One of the six newly appointed assistants to Dick MacPherson's football staff recalls the situation as it existed.

Back when I went to high school my folks just couldn't afford to send me off to college. In order not to burden my parents with great expenses, it appeared the only way I'd be able to further my education would be through football. Since I lacked size and couldn't earn a scholarship, I decided to enlist in the Air Force. In so doing I would serve my country, be able to obtain the size which would enable me to play major college football, and most importantly finance my education."

Playing four years of service ball, two in the states and two in Japan, he accomplished all three. He had cleared his military obligation, grew to the adequate size to where he could play on the major college level, and through service in the Korean War was eligible for the GI Bill. Upon completion of the military service Harris was contacted by Purdue.

As a 240 pound tackle, he was not an exceptional collegiate gridder. But a lot of desire and dedication carried him far in three years. He no sooner was an established starter and sometimes went both ways. His fondest football memory thickers around the 32-19 beating Purdue gave Notre Dame during his freshman year. The loss was supposedly the greatest inflicted upon the Irish at South Bend.

Looking ahead to graduation Harris saw his distant dream of one day coaching a football squad blossoming into reality. Upon graduation (1962), an assistant coaching opportunity opened up for him at Freeport High (NY). The school posted an 8-0 mark that season.

Then a year later a more convenient chore popped wide open and Harris was bound for his hometown. His five year stint as assistant mentor to Pittsfield provided its bright spots with three Western Mass. Class A Conference Championships.

Just like anybody else in the coaching profession, content to be where he is was but always looking beyond to something better, the Purdue alumnus underlined his objectives: "The goal I had in mind was to become a college coach. This is a difficult area to get into and there's a lot of competition. So I had to be patient and accept the jobs in between. I felt they would serve as a stepping stone toward my ultimate goal."

Two campaigns as head coach of Northampton High further helped him along the road to achieve his goal. Although winning ways evaded him with a mediocre 3-15 record, next stop was UMass. It came as quite the surprise to Coach Harris who accepted the offer with open arms.

"It's got to be the most interesting thing that's ever happened to me, he declared. Being involved at the University of Massachusetts, my wife's alma mater, as an assistant football coach. I think it has a great deal to offer for education as well as athletics.

It's the kind of thing you dream about. You wake up every day wondering if it's really true. I think it's an honor for me to be asked to coach at my own state university. There aren't too many people who can make that claim. I really appreciate the chance. I thought it was a great place to start and everything I heard about the coach was great."

Harris' prime responsibility will be building up the defensive line, an area which will sorely miss the services of All-YanCon defensive ends Russ Wood and Jim Kelliher. During the actual games he'll be out on the road scouting opponents.

As to how Dick MacPherson arrived at the choice of Bob Harris for his defensive line coach, the head mentor remarked: "Coach Harris is fascinated with the line play of football. He has a great love for the profession, is hardworking and had a tremendous desire to serve on this collegiate football staff. He was a Western Mass. boy, he's a Western Mass. man, knows the people and has many friends in the area. And I'm sure that the defensive line will portray his enthusiastic personality on the grid iron in the years to come."

Coach Harris declined to make any statement as to how he would work his personnel or to how he sizes up the aspects of the defensive line. He merely implied 'wait and see'.

"As far as I'm concerned everything's wide open. With a new staff I'm sure that Coach MacPherson would want to look at anybody and everybody because these are the guys we're gonna win and lose with.

"I think the material here is as good as any college in the country. And we're gonna get a good look at 'em in the spring and we'll make our judgements from there on just who plays and who doesn't".

NEW HELMSMAN-From Pittsfield to UMass it's a one way ticket for newly-appointed line coach Bob Harris, a Western Mass journeyman with experience and energy expendable. The former Purdue lineman brings local blood and an acute knowledge of strategy to head coach Dick MacPherson, as the former Northampton high mentor assumes command as defensive line coach for the Redmen this coming fall. Co-eds Cop Runnerup Position

The UMass Women's Ski Team finished it's season on a successful note placing second overall in the Women's Intercollegiate Ski Conference. After the first two weekends a solid second place was held by the co-ed team but the hope of capturing first place wasn't a clear reality. It took superb skiing on the part of several different individuals to bring the final record of second place overall to within 2.3% of Radcliffe's first.

During the weekend of February 28 the women captured their two victories of the season over Radcliffe College, their strongest opponent, at Mittersill, New Hampshire.

After a rain out on Saturday, both a difficult one-run slalom and a one run giant slalom were raced on Sunday. On the extremely icy, steep slalom course Heather MacConnell, daughter of the Men's Ski team coach, proved the course could be mastered by skiing the 37 gate course in a winning time of 46.23 seconds. Susan Arnold's sixth place and Marcia Packlick's 18th place were instrumental in putting UMass in front of the Radcliffe skiers by 2.06 seconds overall. Other team scores on the well-worn course were Barbara O'Reilly with a 21st place and Barbara Eaton's 25th.

In the downhill type giant slalom, the UMass women again moved out ahead of their closest opponents, Radcliffe. Miss Arnold brought up the lead by placing a strong second. Miss MacConnell, with another strong run, placed fifth and Miss Packlick's 12th place finish finalized the day's victories. Also skiing very well on the giant slalom course was Barbara Eaton with a nineteenth, Kitty Schoenfeld and Barbara O'Reilly taking 22nd and 23rd consecutively and Ann Furnee's 31st place.

Saturday, March 6th proved to be the hottest day of the season for the rivalry between UMass and Radcliffe. Two, two-run giant slaloms were run at Waterville Valley. After the preceding victories spirits were running high.

In the morning race Miss Arnold took 2nd with 75.92. Miss MacConnell placed a close sixth and Barbara Eaton came in 21st, with a little trouble. This put the UMass women again the second place.

In the afternoon giant slalom, some time had to be made up. Miss Arnold finally topped the field by beating Barbara Grant of Radcliffe, a skier who had mever been beaten in WISC competition. Miss MacConnell again, not far behind in the field, took a strong third and with the outstanding runs by Kitty Schoenfeld, the co-eds missed first by a mere .38 seconds. Miss Packlick placed 19th, Barbara Eaton 20th.

The Women's Ski Team also placed two skiers on the Top Ten List-Heather MacConnell, the freshman skier who took second place overall, and Sue Arnold who placed third in the Conference tally.

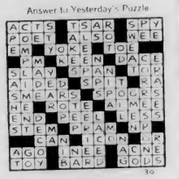
Lonborg Racked Again; Sox Bats Stop Astros

COCA, Fla. (AP)-The baseball future of veteran righthander Jim Lonborg of the Boston Red Sox became more clouded Monday after another unimpressive performance against the Houston Astros.

The Red Sox unloaded an extra-base barrage which included two homers by Don Pavletich and one by Reggie Smith for an 11-4 victory and Lonborg was the winner, but his effort was not outstanding.

Lonborg got off to a shaky start, surrendering a run in the first inning and two in the second before he settled down. He went five innings, allowing six hits, walking three and throwing two wild pitches.

The Red Sox bombed Houston starter Don 'no-hit' Wilson and his successor, Bill Grief, for 14 hits, including three homers and six doubles. They also received six walks.



Pavletich, who had been 0-for-10, collected his first extra base hits of the spring with a two-run homer over the distant fence in right center in the third and then added a solo shot well over 400 feet to left center in the sixth.

Smith hit his third exhibition homer after a walk and Carl Yastrzemski's double in the five-run third Pavletich also had a single in leading the Red Sox attack.

George Scott continued his hot hitting with a two-run single in the first and a double in the seventh. Yastrzemski also had two hits as the Red Sox improved their preseason record to 11-13.

Redmen Split Southern Slate

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

"We're ready to go into the season right now." These were the words of an optimistic head basketball coach Dick Bergquist yesterday in reflecting on the successful spring trip that his Redman nine completed this past weekend.

In splitting six games on the southern swing against stiff early season opposition the Redmen were able to accomplish many plusses to take back with them for their northern season which opens on the 10th of April at A.I.C.

With only the dissapointment of a cold spell to mar the trip, Bergquist and his staff were still able to get a good look at their personel and get to see how they play in actual game situations. "I now have a little more idea on how my players will perform," noted the coach.

The Redmen got to play baseball six days out of the seven scheduled days and in accomplishing their main objectives outside of the actual team record the feeling of the players and the coaching staff is "we're sorry we have to wait two weeks until the season begins."

In assessing his teams overall performance Bergquist was extremely high on his talented pitching staff, spearheaded by the strong performances of Jack Bernardo, Tom King and Tom White and the encouraging signs of freshmen John Olsen and Chip Baye. Senior Lou Colabello, a mainstay of the staff two seasons ago had control problems in his first outing and will need some more work up north.

Bergquist said that he expected the fine performances out of Bernardo and White, but the stints turned in by King were the best surprises of the trip. King was a highly sought after prospect by the pros right out of Acton-Boxboro High school but came to UMass instead. After his freshman year he injured his arm and had to sit out last season. But after Saturday's performance against Maryland in which he struck out ten in six innings, including seven in a row in one stretch, it appears that King is back to his old form.

The catching on the trip was both solid and deep. Tom McDermott, a freshman, was singled out by the coach as "a good catcher with leadership and hustle." With Kerry Daly and Bill Ryan to back McDermott up, UMass' catching crew will be of top collegiate quality.

Another freshman, Eddie McMahon, flashed signs of brilliance during the trip as well as co-captain Jack Conroy at third, and Charlie Manley and Brian Martin in the outfield.

As for team hitting Mark Palau with six for 16 and McMahon with five for 15 led an otherwise dismal Redman hitting attack of .211.

On the basepaths Bergquist was pleased with the speed of Manley, McMahon and Jim Saracino which will add another dimension to the UMass attack this spring.

On the dissapointing side to go along with the low batting average were the inconsistent performances by players that the coaching staff was counting on. There was also need for better defense at first and second base and for less mistakes as a team on the basepaths. These minusses will be of first importance to iron out as the team prepares for the opener.

The trip got off on the winning trail as the Redmen, behind a strong six innings of Jack Bernardo and a save by White defeated Wake Forest, 5-1 last Monday. UMass scored single runs in the third and fifth innings and then bunched together three in the seventh to put the game away.

In the big seventh Charlie Manley, his brother Earl, and Bernardo hit for safeties to open the inning and all three scored to give the Redmen their big lead.

On the next day Franklin-Marshall of Pennsylvania was the second victim of good UMass pitching and timely hitting. King and Olsen combined for a sparkling two-hitter with King picking up his first victory after the year of arm trouble, striking out seven in six innings. Olsen struck out four in three innings.

Saracino, Martin, McMahon and McDermott led the hitting attack with two hits apiece as the Redmen batters struck for five runs in the last two innings to ice the decision.

Wake Forest evened things with the Redmen on Wednesday, scoring three runs in the first inning on four walks, a wild pitch, no hits and an error, and held on the rest of the way for a 3-1 triumph. Colabello was the victim of his own wildness.

The only hit for Wake Forest was a meaningless double in the third, as they were outhit by the Redmen who had six hits, but in return outplayed the opposition on the field to come out on top. Baye was the pitching star for UMass as he pitched the last five innings and gave up no hits and struck out six. Palau had three hits to lead the Redmen at the plate.

West Virginia evened the Redman slate at 2-2 with a 7-4 verdict on Thursday. The first game between these two teams the day before was postponed due to cold weather.

In this game the Redmen were victimized by nine walks delivered by White and Olsen, 12 strike outs at the plate and three runners thrown out between first and second on poor baserunning.

Conroy was the standout for the Redmen at the plate and on the field including a great catch in left field, leaning over a fence to rob a West Virginia player of a homerun.

After another postponement due to the cold on Friday the Redmen ended the southern swing on Saturday splitting a double-header with Maryland. The Terps took the first game, 3-0, and the Redmen came back to take the second behind the pitching of King and White.

In the first game UMass never got a runner to third base as they were held in check by the Maryland pitching staff. Palau led the hitters again with two singles and Bernardo pitched well in a losing cause, going six innings.

After King had throttled the Terps with his ten-strike out effort for six innings in the second game, the fireworks began which ended in a great clutch performance by White.

In the eighth Baye had walked the bases full. White came in and struck out the clean up hitter, got the fifth man to pop up and struck out the sixth hitter to end the game and earn a save.

The trip ended, 3-3, strong pitching, bright catching, a few solid performers, a number of weak spots and the added knowledge of the coaching staff as to personel.

Coach Bergquist is optimistic about the season. He and his diamond dusters are ready to go and they'll get their chance to show their stuff beginning on the 20th at A.I.C.

Lacrosse Squad 5-1; Army-Southern Prey

By JOHN MacGILLIVRAY
MDC Staff

Although the weather was cold the UMass lacrosse team was hot as it won five of its six games during its spring southern trip.

Army was the first victim of the Redmen's balanced attack losing to UMass by a score of 8-7. Coach Richard Garber called it a "great game." He emphasized the fact that UMass had only three or four days of field practice prior to the game making this victory somewhat of a pleasant surprise. It was the first time UMass has ever beaten Army. In this game the riding (similar to fore checking) and clearing out were excellent.

The next day UMass put it all together as it beat Lafayette 23-3. Incidentally Lafayette is coached by a former UMass player, Jerry Clinton '63.

The Redmen's only loss came on Monday against Rutgers. They lost a close one 10-9. It was a very well played game but unfortunately UMass gave up about four "gift" goals.

Princeton lost to UMass by a score of 10-1. Ohio State was beaten 12-5 and Nassau C.C. (last year's national junior college champs) lost to UMass 3-2 in a close one.

Coach Garber was impressed most by how well his Stickmen played as a team especially with the minimal amount of field practice that they had. Another thing that impressed him was that although most of the other teams were bigger than them on a man to man basis, UMass more than compensated for it with its good speed and stickwork.

Lou Marinacce, a team captain and returning All-American, paced the midfield play and was one of the leading scorers on the trip. The attack was anchored by Charlie Hardy as the feeder and John Nagle as the scorer. Al Ruggiano was excellent on defense as was Bruce Crawford in the goal.

Players who were pleasant surprises on the trip were Kevin Bush on attack, Dwight Blomquist and Rick Anderson on midfield, and Tom Bock on defense. All of them are sophomores.

Other players that shined on the trip were co-captain John Gannon, Phil Sheridan, Dana Stone, Tim Bosworth, Paul Schacter, Tom Breman and Hirsh Seidman. Two players that performed well on defense were John Walsh and Joe Smith.

Coach Garber sums it all up when he says "Overall it was a great trip." Based on this trip UMass should have an exciting and rewarding season.

Celtics Draft Board Strength

BOSTON (AP)-The Boston Celtics moved to bolster their front court by selecting 6-foot-8 Clarence Glover of Western Kentucky in the first round of the National Basketball Association draft Monday and then choosing a pair of 6-foot-10 centers in the third and fourth rounds.

Glover's teammate, Jim Rose, a 6-foot-3 backcourt man, was the second round selection, followed by Dave Robisch of Kansas and Randy Denton of Duke, in that order.

The Celtics had no fifth round pick due to an earlier trade. In the sixth round they took Thorpe Weber of Vanderbilt, followed in order by Skip Young of Florida State, John Ribock of South Carolina, Ray Green of California and Harvard Capt. Dale Dover.

General Manager Red Auerbach praised Glover as "a good defensive ball player," adding that the Western Kentucky star "is smart and has a good attitude," and "gets stronger and quicker as the game goes on."

Glover played in the shadow of 7-foot Jim McDaniels this past season, but attracted national attention in the NCAA tournament. He had 22 rebounds in helping his club beat Ohio State in the Mideast final and then pulled down 28 in the double overtime to Villanova in the national semifinals.

"In the clutch game against Villanova he was the only one who could do a job on Howard Porter," Auerbach said. He also quoted Kentucky coach Adolph Rupp as saying Glover was the fastest big man he had ever seen.

Auerbach said he, coach Tom Heinsohn and chief scout Mal Graham had two meetings to discuss the players likely to be available by the time Boston's turn came and decided on Glover over Collis Jones of Notre Dame and Curtis Rowe of UCLA.

"He's taller than Rowe, has long arms, runs as well and has played in similar competition," Auerbach said. "Jones is a better shooter but he's not in this kid's class as a rebounder."

Some people had expected the Celtics to go for the best available big center in the first round, even though the top ones like McDaniels and Elmore Smith were sure to be gone by then.

"I don't agree with those people who think that our ball club needs a big man," Auerbach said. "If a top big man were available we would have taken him. But forward was our least stable, our least good position at the end of the season. We had Dave Cowens at center, with Henry Finkel to back him up. We were good at the middle."

Despite this, the Celtics did go early for Robisch and Denton, a pair of big men who actually had been expected to be picked earlier than they were. Before that, however, they took Rose, who was another key man in Western Kentucky's big season.

"He's a typical sound guard," Auerbach said. "He works the press very well.

Austin Carr: Top Choice

Austin Carr, Notre Dame's All-American guard, was the surprise first pick, by the Cleveland Cavaliers, in the National Basketball Association college draft yesterday. Cleveland turned away from the big man in selecting the 6-3 Carr, who averaged more than 30 points during his fabulous career with the fighting Irish.

Sidney Wicks, the 6-8 All-American, who led UCLA to its fifth consecutive NCAA title last weekend, had been expected to be the number one selection. But when Cleveland passed him by, Portland immediately grabbed him as the number two pick.

Buffalo, picking third, selected 7-0 Elmore Smith of NAIA champion Kentucky State and Cincinnatti followed with the minor gamble of choosing 6-7 Ken Durrett of LaSalle, rumored to already be promised to the ABA.

Other first round draft picks were Curtis Rowe, UCLA, by Detroit; Clarence Glover, Western Kentucky, by Boston; Dean Meminger, Marquette, by New York; George Trapp, Long Beach State, by Atlanta; Fred Brown, Iowa, by Seattle; Cliff Meeley, Colorado, by San Diego; Darnell Hillman, San Jose State, by San Francisco; Stan Love, Oregon, by Baltimore; Dana Lewis, Tulsa, by Philadelphia; Jim Cleamons, Ohio State, by Los Angeles; John Roche, South Carolina, by Phoenix; Kennedy McIntosh, Eastern Michigan, by Chicago, and Collis Jones, Notre Dame, by Milwaukee.

UMass, Town Discuss Local Problems

K.M. Munnich, of Regional Planning Commission, stresses a point during the discussion held last night in the Junior High. (MDC Photo by David Bernstein)

By JEFF THOMPSON
MDC Staff

"It is improper that a university should grow to much more than 20,000 students," declared Chancellor Edward C. Moore of the Mass. Board of Higher Education last night at a panel discussion concerning the future of UMass which was held at the Amherst Regional Junior High School.

Topics discussed included the town's economy, the types of living situations that should be provided for students by the community, the chances that the university could expand out of necessity, and that rent rates in the area are too high.

Also mentioned were the plans of the Amherst Planning Board to improve the traffic situation in Amherst, and statistics were given to explain the relationship between traffic and the enormous number s of apartments to be built in Amherst in the near future.

"Our town's economy is geared to 1500 new students each year," said Allen Torrey, Town Manager of Amherst, "and we must be prepared to adjust (financially). I don't think the university is the drag on the town everyone says it is, and I would rather see a gradual slowdown in enrollment rather than a ceiling amount enforced."

Mrs. Edith Wilkinson, Chairman of the Amherst Finance Committee, noted the huge amount of tax-exempted property owned by the univesity.

"This is not a local problem," sad Chancellor Moore, "the city of Boston has somewhere between 25 to 40 per cent of its land tax-exempt, but that is the state's responsibility."

Arnold Rhodes of the Amherst Planning Board noted that the tax rate of Amherst is not bad. He said that the rate is only $32.50 per thousand whereas Northampton is $50.00 and in Boston it's $101.00.

Rhodes also said that during the last week of February, "a typical week" a total of 9777 paychecks, amounting to over $1,000,000.00 were handed out by Whitmore to all university employees, including students.

"I have figured that over half of this million dollars goes directly for use in Amherst," he concluded.

From the audience a question was asked about whose responsibility it is to provide suitable housing for the UMass students.

John W. Haigis of the UMass Board of Trustees said that as a trustee he felt, "it is our (Trustees) responsibility to make as many different types of housing alternatives available as desired by students."

After projected population figures for people from ages 18-24 were given as 433,000 for Massachusetts in 1980 and that at least half of these will enter some type of school of higher learning, Town Manager Torrey expressed concern that the ten more community colleges which will be required to meet the need would probably not be built.

"Where will they go if the new places aren't built?" he asked. "UMass at Amherst!" he answered. Torrey feels that the university might have to expand to maybe 30,000 out of necessity.

Denison Jones, an Amherst realtor, was asked why the rental rates in Amherst were among the highest in the state. Jones answered that since UMass was at the rate of approximately $135/month for a single, landlords ought to be able to charge the same thing. Jones was not challenged on this point.

Planning Committee member Rhodes explained local traffic problems and proposed solutions. The first was that he felt North Pleasant Street traffic should be minimized with a road going from the university to the apartments north of it, and a bypass to get from the center of town to North Amherst.

You Should Know More About Sickle Cell Anemia

By BOB NESTI
MDC Staff

A month-long drive to raise funds and educate the Five--College community about sickle-cell anemia was started at a meeting of interested students and CCEBS director Dr. Hodges Glenn, held yesterday in Mills House.

Ernestine Jewell, chairwoman of the Student Committee Against Sickle Cell Anemia, said the student--organized drive was begun "because there has been little awareness of and attention to the problem of this disease at either the state or national levels and we feel that it is time for the community to act."

The Committee is soliciting financial support from local educational institutions and concerned individuals in the Five College Area. In addition, individual committee members have contacted media outlets and government officials in hope for support.

The money raised will be spent on sickle-cell anemia research.

The group plans collections throughout the month at various University locations with hopes of bringing this problem to the awareness of the campus at large.

CCEBS director Dr. Hodges Glenn praised the students for their "deep and human concern for self and other students effected by sickle cell anemia." He called the student-initiated group "outstanding" and urged students, faculty members, and members of the Five-College community to give them their full support. The Committee is also looking for interested students who will work to these ends. Anyone interested in working on the project should contact the Committee chairwoman Ernestine Jewell (546-8569) or the Secretary Sylvia Gladden (545-4685). The group has also been given an office at 215 Mills House and members may be contacted there.

Student Affairs

Bromery Meets Resident Heads

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

Last evening was the Heads of Residences turn to meet with Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Dr. Randolph W. Bromery and Thomas Campion, Vice Chancellor for Administrative Services.

The meeting, the second of two meetings of the Student Affairs Reorganizing Committee, was attended by about 25 heads of Residences to discuss problems which they felt needed correction.

The proposals presented by the Residence Heads were drawn up at a meeting held last Sunday evening. Those attending the meeting proposed that area coordinator be able to have authority to handle problems of the students who live within his area. This would enable students to get direct action on their request. As the system is now run, students are daily faced with the problem of having to go to many different people to get action taken.

Dr. Randolph W. Bromery

Heads of Residences said that they also face this problem every day. Their biggest gripe they found to be their inability to communicate with the upper level people in Student Affairs. The Head of Residence of Cashin stated that he personally tried to use the office of Ombudsman to try to cut through some of the red tape but he was unsuccessful.

Vice Chancellor Bromery agreed that authority has to be delegated to lower levels and that it must be flexible to meet the needs of a rapidly growing university. He also stated that decentralization of the job of area coordinator would result in a staff unique to the area which it served.

He also stated that the area heads should try to encourage a characteristic in residence halls. For examples there would be quiet dorms and noisy dorms. Later in the meeting he said that he wished that dorm selection would become an important part of summer counseling. He stated that he didn't want students to choose a living area just by it's appearance alone.

Another issue brought up concerned the billing by the Physical plant of student damage. A group of Residence Heads stated to Mr. Campion that even though students paid bills for dorm damages much of the work wasn't done. They cited cases that when damage was repaired it was done slowly and with an unneccesary amount of labor resulting in an outrageous bill. Campion said that this will be looked into in the future and he asked the Residence Heads to report to him any future incidents of this sort.

The Issue of dorm life being seperated from classroom life also came up at the Tuesday night meeting. Those attending wished that activities in the six Resident Areas could be incorporated with general university life. They suggested that courses be built around the different aspects of each area. Dr. Bromery in response to this stated that some kind of incentives should be offered to get people involved. He also said that he wished to get faculty interested in residence halls and in student afairs.

Campus Bus Service Head Explains Job

By RENE COMTOIS
MDC Staff

With the fall semester of 1969, the Student Senate began a shuttle service on the UMass Amherst campus. The service is a cooperative effort of the student Senate, the University Administration, and the Work-Study program.

Since that time, the bus service has grown rapidly. Employing 30-35 people and operating three buses, the service carried 2,500 students a day this winter. The service has expanded to include several off-campus trips each week.

The Student Senate Transit Service will need a new manager next year. This year's manager, Bill Perkins, is graduating, and someone must be found to take his place. In an MDC interview he outlined the duties of manager, and made several comments on the service.

"The manager is in charge of the whole operation, from administration to payroll budgets," he said. "Being a student employee of UMass, he is limited to 15 hours of paid work a week. In actuality, he works thirty hours and gets paid for fifteen."

The service is looking for a Junior with a class II license to fill the post next year, Perkins said. He must have knowledge of business administration and a strong personal committment to the job.

"I have gained much experience from the job," said Perkins. "With all the negotiations and hassles it was really hard going. We have tried to establish a free bus service which was both efficient and cheap. The problems of maintaining and administering the service are many," he continued. "We have received no derogatory comments from the students concerning the service, and this shows us that we've done a good job."

The job is a thankless, demanding, time consuming one. It's a real challenge. The pay hardly compensates for the overtime and headaches that will be encountered. But, it's a rewarding job and can be an opportunity for much personal satisfaction.

Applications, which were available at the Student Senate Office in the Union, were due yesterday. If there are any questions, contact Ed Vocci at the Transit Office.

A final quote from outgoing manager Bill Perkins: "anyone who applies for the job is crazy!"

The Bells Are Ringing

Starting Thursday for a one week trial period, residents of Coolidge Middle who are out of the dorm from 7 to 11 P.M. will not miss any phone calls made to them.

The Coolidge Middle answering service, located in the twelfth floor lounge, will be available to take messages for students who live in that section of the dorm.

The project grew out of a section of Psychology 386, Special Problems in Residential Living. Cathy Atkinson, a co-teacher of the course, was interested in an information center for each floor. From this grew the idea for a message-taking service, for the dorm.

The proposal then went to the dorm government, which approved money to pay students to man the phone for the one week period. If the students working on the project find there is a need for it, they will work on ways to make it a permanent part of the dorm.

Constitution Combines Undergrads, Grads, Faculty

But Will It Pass?

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

A tentative draft of the constitution of a University-wide Senate has been released for public consideration. The proposal, drawn up by students and faculty members, will establish a University Senate in place of the present Undergraduate, Graduate, and Faculty Senates if approved by those three bodies, each of their constituencies, and the Board of Trustees.

Thirteen months ago, the Undergraduate, Graduate, and Faculty Senates established the Joint Commission on Campus Governance which has drafted the constitution. According to its report, the Commission has set up a structure "designed to preserve traditional student and faculty prerogatives and roles in areas of exclusive or unequal concern."

As the Commission began its work, it became clear to the members that the present system of three Senates "has grave shortcomings in treating matters of overlapping or joint concern", according to the report which accompanies the draft constitution. "Conflicting recommendations arising from two or more Senates often lead to a situation of paralysis or frustration", it said.

The Commission considered and rejected the concept of improving the present structure. It felt that a single body could better formulate compromises between representatives of the different factions than could separate senates which did not have the opportunity to hear and understand the positions of the members of other senates.

It is the opinion of the Commission that a unicameral Senate "offers a hope of real improvement in the quality of governance at this university. Such a body offers an opportunity for meaningful student-faculty dialogue on the central concerns of the university. Faculty will no longer have to rely upon their colleagues' second or third hand account of student experiences and opinions in order to understand how students perceive a particular problem. Similarly, students will be able to profit directly from the experience and professional expertise of the faculty."

The Senate will be composed initially of 55 students (55 undergraduates and no fewer than 12 graduates), 70 faculty members and 5 members of the professional staff who are not members of the faculty. Faculty and staff Senators will serve for two-year terms, and not more than two successive full terms. Students will serve one-year terms, and will be eligible for re-election annually. All full-time students, professional staff, and faculty with the rank of instructor or above will be eligible to run and to vote in elections.

Elections will be held in the spring semester, and those elected will assume office the day after commencement.

All faculty, graduate, and undergraduate constituencies will be divided into districts so that the number of electors of each senator will be roughly equal. Each district will have at least one seat.

The number of graduate student representatives will increase as the graduate population increases so that the number of graduates per senator will equal the ratio of undergrads to Senator. If the number of graduate senators increases, an additional faculty Senator will be added to the Senate for each graduate senator in excess of 12.

The Senate will elect from its membership a President, a Legislative Vice-President, and an Executive Vice-President, in the spring of each year prior to Senate general elections. An Executive Secretary will be appointed by the Committee on Committees from the membership of the Senate after the election of officers. The officers will take office the day after commencement.

The Senate as a whole will have jurisdiction over matters of joint concern to the members of all of its constituencies. There will also be three Conferences set up within the Senate which will have exclusive jurisdiction over a few specific areas which are not of joint concern to the whole senate.

The three Conferences in the Senate will be: an Undergraduate Conference consisting of all undergrad senators; a Graduate Conference of all grad senators; and a Faculty Conference of all faculty senators. Each Conference will have a chairman and a secretary and will formulate its own by-laws.

Each Conference will have exclusive jurisdiction over specific areas defined below, and will also have the power to exercise vetoes over Senate legislation in certain other areas of special concern.

The Faculty Conference will exercise exclusive jurisdiction over appointment of members to the Tenure and Grievance Hearings Committee and over policy questions dealing with the non-academic welfare of faculty members. It will have a veto on legislation dealing with academic matters, graduate, student personnel policy, research policy, and any legislation dealing with faculty personnel policy.

The Undergraduate Conference will have exclusive jurisdiction over, assessment, appropriation, and expenditure of student activity tax funds, and over policy for Recognized Student Organizations. It will be able to veto any legislation dealing with non-academic undergraduate student life. Assessments to be levied on its constituency must be reviewed by the Conference. If approved by the Conference, they are adopted; if rejected, a two-thirds vote of the Senate will be required for adoption.

The Graduate Conference will exercise exclusive jurisdiction over graduate student tax funds. It will be able to exercise a veto over legislation dealing with graduate student personnel policy or with non-academic graduate student life. Assessments to be levied on its constituency must be reviewed by the Conference. They will be adopted if approved by the Conference or a two-thirds vote of the Senate overriding a Conference rejection.

In the general procedure of the Senate, all items of business coming before the Senate must first be referred to committees of the Senate for deliberation and recommendation. Standing committees and sub-committees will have the power to initiate studies and proposals.

There will be 14 standing committees of the Senate, which will report directly to the Senate and which will have sub-committees under them.

The Executive Committee of the Senate will coordinate the work of the Senate, prepare the agenda, and serve as the Committee on Constitution and By-Laws. It will nominate candidates for the Committee on Committees. The Executive Committee will act for the Senate when it is not feasible to call a Senate meeting. When the Committee does this, its actions will be subject to confirmation at the next regular meeting of the Senate. It will be composed of the four Senate officers and the three Conference Chairmen.

The Committee on Committees will appoint members and chairmen of all standing committees and standing subcommittees of the Senate, subject to Senate confirmation. The Committee will be composed of seven faculty members and seven students, the ratio of graduates to undergraduates matching as nearly as possible the ratio in the Senate.

The other standing committees of the Senate will deal with Senate elections, undergraduate academic matters, undergraduate student life, faculty personnel policy, auxiliary enterprises (such as housing, food services, health services, and governance of the Campus Center and Student Union), budgets and priorities, administrative services, library, computer research, graduate student life and academic matter, and foreign students.

The following Boards and Councils will also be set up under the Senate to perform administrative or judicial functions: Environmental Health and Safety Council, Athletic Council, Fine Arts Council, Board of Admissions and Records, Discipline Board, Financial Aid Council, and Tenure and Grievance Board.

There will be two stages of ratification of the proposed Constitution. For an initial ratification, a majority vote of the present Faculty, Undergrad, and Grad Senates will be required before the Constitution can be submitted to the various constituencies for approval. If a majority of those voting in each of the three constituencies approves, it will be adopted. No later than two years after, the faculty, undergrads, and grads will vote again on the Constitution for final ratification.

The proposed timetable for the initial ratification calls for public hearings and senate discussions the week of April 5, the issuance of a final report by the Commission April 15, votes by the senates the week of April 19, campus referenda April 30, and trustee approval in July or August.

If the Constitution receives its initial ratification, elections for seats in the Senate will be held in September, 1971. The Senate, upon convening, will have the full powers granted by this Constitution.

As Jury Deliberates Sentence

Calley Pleads For His Life...

FT. BENNING, Ga.(AP)-A tearful Lt. William L. Calley, Jr. told a military jury Tuesday, "Yesterday you stripped me of my honor. Please, by the actions you take here today, don't strip future soldiers of their honor, I beg you."

The 27-year-old defendant stood before the six-man court-martial jury that 24 hours earlier convicted him of mass murder at My Lai on March 16, 1968. He delivered his statement in a little over two minutes.

"I have never known a soldier, nor did I ever myself wantonly kill a human being in my entire life."

At 3:14 p.m. EST the jury retired to consider Calley's punishment for the premeditated murder of at least 22 Vietnamese old men, women and children. The only alternatives were death or life imprisonment with parole possible after 10 years.

The jury retired for its penalty deliberations with an admonition from Kennedy that "you should select a sentence that is appropriate to the offense of which you have convicted Lt Calley, his needs, the welfare of society, and good order and discipline in the military service."

The jury deliberated only about an hour and a half, however, before returning to their sequestered quarters for the night shortly before 5 p.m.

Deliberations will resume at 9 a.m. Wednesday.

If the jurors cannot agree on a life or death sentence they have the option to lower the verdict to second degree murder and voluntary manslaughter. In either case, a lesser sentence could be imposed. Another alternative would be the empaneling of a new jury to fix the sentence.

"It doesn't matter what type of individual I am," Calley told the six superior officers.

"And I'm not going to stand here and plead for my life or my freedom. But I would like to ask you to consider a thousand more lives that are going to be lost in Southeast Asia and thousands more to be imprisoned here in the United States, in Vietnam and in hospitals all over the world as amputees ... committed is the judgment of my values. Apparently I valued my troops' lives more than I did those of the enemy.

"Calley said his only concern in My Lai was for the safety of his troops against what he considered the mentality of a Communist enemy.

"That was enemy out there" he continued. "And when it [illegible] that enemy I have to value the lives of my troops. And I feel that is the only crime I have committed."

Following Calley before the jury was the prosecuter, Capt. Aubrey Daniel, who declared:

"You did not strip him of his honor. His actions stripped him of his honor...It is not an honor and it never can be considered an honor to kill men, women and children."

Daniel noted that the jury had the choice of condemning Calley to die or sentencing him to life imprisonment, but did not recommend either one.

Calley was convicted Monday on the 13th day of jury deliberations of premeditated murder while leading a U.S. infantry platoon on a search and destroy mission against My Lai. The government had charged him with the murder of 102 civilians.

The trial judge, Col. Reid Kennedy, had granted a defense request that Calley be allowed to address his jury before it began deliberations on the penalty phase of his case.

The defendant was preceded by his chief defense attorney, George Latimer, who, also with tears in his eyes, pleaded for Calley's life.

"You'll find no case in military justice that has ever torn America apart like this case has torn America apart," Latimer declared. "The flag may fly at full mast over military installations but it will always be drawn at half-mast over the homes of people whose sons may be going into military service. This case cuts very deep.

"When Lt. Calley went into the service of the United States Army he was not a killer. He was not an aggressive young man. It is one of the most unusual situatons where a man was taught at Ft. Benning, Ga., to kill, was not properly trained and when he comes back again to Ft. Benning, what's it for-to stand trial on a capital charge.

"Lt. Calley, outside of an ordinary traffic violation, was a good boy and he remained that way until he got into that Oriental area over there in Vietnam. Maybe, shall we say, he became too aggressive, went too far. But who trained him to kill, kill, kill?

"You don't have to have eyes of glass and hearts of stone. Somewhere along the line, there is some place where a few humanities ought to be worked in this case, where maximum sentence isn't given where it should not be."

Latimer asked that "some small consideration be given to a boy who did not necessarily want to go to Vietnam but was sent there, a boy who did not want to kill anybody but who thought he had to."

In conclusion, Latimer told the jury: "I think there is a place for Lt. Calley to go on and make something of his life but he can't do it in the graveyard. Thank you all so much. I go away with a heavy heart, for I see a life ruined."

...While War Continues On

SAIGON (AP)-American fighter-bombers struck at North Vietnamese artillery positions in the northern half of the demilitarized zone Tuesday in what the U.S. Command said was a response to "increased enemy attacks by fire on military and civilian locations."

Four planes staged the attack and returned safely, but there were no reports that they hit any guns in the zone dividing the Vietnams.

U.S. field commanders just south of the zone said about 12 of the long-ranged North Vietnamese 122mm guns were moved into the northern half several weeks ago.

They speculated this was a reaction to the big U.S. and South Vietnamese buildup along with the drive into Laos by government troops.

The officers said the guns had a 13-mile range, were in the central sector of the 40-mile-long zone and could hit any of the U.S. and South Vietnamese fire bases below the DMZ.

The South Vietnamese reported North Vietnamese 122mm guns last Friday hit Dong Ha, a base 11 miles south of the DMZ, killing or wounding several soldiers. They insisted the fire came from the DMZ.

The U.S. Command called the air strikes in the DMZ "protective reaction" exercising "the inherent right of self-defense to save American lives."

Sporadic fighting was reported in the north. The enemy sprang an ambush on American troops northeast of Khe Sanh, a U.S. base in the northwestern corner of the country. One American was killed and seven were wounded in the clash near Emerald City, a cavalry support base for Khe Sanh. It is six miles northeast of Khe Sanh.

A U.S. Command communique said 15 Americans were wounded in the two ground fights involving troops of the 101st Airborne Division in the northern part of the country.

More action was reported in eastern Cambodia, where the South Vietnamese are seeking out enemy bases.

You Are What You Eat...

By GILBERT J. SALK

I saw a very disturbing poster today. It portrayed a nude pregnant woman. Stamped on her breast were the words "Caution! Contents may be hazardous to your health". Beneath the picture was information stating that the DDT content in mother's milk is so high that, if it were packaged, federal law would prohibit its being transported across state lines for consumption.

This, plus a growing realization that our bodies are being contaminated by other chemical insecticides and fertilizers, and growth stimulants, which may be carcinogenic, combine to form a strong argument for organic production of food. Many of these chemicals are not passed off by our bodies, and accumulate to dangerous percentages. As with the Thalidomedes, the damage may appear in our children, or in genetic breakdowns which may not become apparent for a few generations.

We need to give serious thought to what we eat, and relearn old ways of food production which will help us to stop polluting our bodies, or else the fight to end air and water pollution may prove to be pointless.

Ideally, I suppose, the perfect answer would be to see all farmers switch over to organic production so that the food we buy at Food Mart, Stop & Shop, Louis', or where ever else we buy food will be safe to eat. This may be asking too much, for the time being. The alternatives are to patronize those markets which carry only organic foods, to be sure of the purity of what you are eating and to establish that there is a real market for healthful food. Locally, there's the food co-op opposite the Hatch, the White Light in Amherst, and the Granary in Northampton and Greenfield, with more to come. The prices are a little higher than in supermarkets, but the food is real and it tastes better.

The other alternative is to grow your own. Organic gardening and farming helps you gain a better understanding of what food is all about, and builds a respect for the interactions of the various forces of nature. It helps define your place in the natural order of the universe. And it's just plain fun to watch the seeds you put into the soil which you helped enrich with compost you made using recycled wastes, which would have otherwise been destroyed, sprout, grow, mature, and finally end up on your table for dinner.

Even if you aren't ready to go totally over to organic foods, every little bit helps. Your flower box can be used to raise spices or a tomato plant or whatever gets your mouth watering, and you can do that little bit organically. It's that much less chemical intake, and that much less pollution of the soil.

There are some fine books on organic processes available. As yet, to my knowledge, the University doesn't offer any courses on organic gardening, but a little pressure in the right places might do wonders. Anybody want to organize?

The best book I've examined so far on the subject of organic gardening is The Basic Book of Organic Gardening by Robert Rodale, Jr. ($1.25, Ballantine Books, NYC) Rodale is the editor of Organic Gardening and Farming Magazine, and brings the best of the magazine to his book. It is calculated to make an organic gardener or farmer out of the most uninformed beginner. The book is based on material originally presented in the magazine--information which has been successfully used by those writing about it. Information starts with souls--how to understand them and enrich and improve them without the use of chemicals. There's advice on what to grow and how to get the best results, with an abundance of planting charts to help you get it right. There are also good suggestions on alternatives to pesticides using natural controls. In addition, the book has harvesting hints, including a discussion of how harvesting affects the quality of the vitamins in the plants. First rate, interesting reading.

Handbook on Biological Control of Plant Pests ($1.00, Brooklyn Botanic Garden, 1000 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11225) is a good companion book. It contains fascinating articles on the natural control of harmful insects, and will make believers out of those who still think that chemicals are the only answer to protecting crops from insect pests. This book shows that it can be done without even poisoning birds or contaminating milk. There is an excellent article on biological control in general by Theodore W. Fisher. Other articles discuss lady beetles (or lady bugs), beneficial bees, wasps, and ants, control of scales and aphids, the praying mantis, and other heroes and villains of the insect world. It is vital information if you're into organic gardening, and you should probably read it anyway if you don't know which are the good guys in the list above.

Composting is one of the most important parts of organic gardening because it allows the recycling of all organic waste products while at the same time providing needed non chemical fertilizers. Composting, by Harold B. Gotaas ($5.00, World Health Organization, c/o American Public Health Assn., 1740 Broadway, NYC 10019) is a very technical book aimed primarily at composting as a way of disposing of wastes, particularly excreta, without creating health hazards. It has, however, the strong incidental side effect of providing a method of recycling important soil nutrients. This is the best information-source on what composting is all about and how to make it happen that I've seen. It's also good stuff for ecology/recycling freaks.

Finally, Mother Earth News regularly carries articles on organic gardening methods. Get it at your newsstand, or see me for back copies. Mother #8 is now out, by the way. Peace.

In the coming weeks, CULTURNATIVES will deal with many different aspects of cultural alternatives. If you're into it and want to rap, or if you want Mother Earth News, stop by the Draft Counseling Office in 418D SU 2nd floor. You'll have to take your chances because draft counseling comes first, but if we're free we'd enjoy sharing ideas.

UMass Employment Policy Based on Student Needs

By BARBARA ANN CLEARY
MDC Staff

Gerald J. Grady, Business Manager of the University, clarified and explained the employment policy of the University as stated by President Wood, in an MDC interview yesterday.

The policy had been stated by Wood in late February. The basic policy is "the faculty appointment and promotion process with supplemental requirements built upon student needs, research, and

However, according to Wood, the University has achieved a size "in which the magnitude and diversity of its employment is considerable."

Accordingly, it can "profit by expanded contacts". In a "limited way" it can help in the State's economic development and current crisis of professional employment.

Emphasizing its limited role, Wood continues "the University of Massachusetts will make every effort to consider, evaluate, and counsel those now seeking new careers, especially in applicable skills and professions.

According to Grady, this policy was brought about partly in response to the so-called national recession. Another factor, he said, was the severe unemployment of scientific and engineering personnel along Route 128.

Grady continued, "the University does have job opportunities as well as certain skills which can be used in helping these

The University itself is close to full employment and is unable to place very many of these people, he said. However, knowledge of the applicants is sent to President Wood and other agencies, he added.

In little more than a month, seventeen inquiries have been received, Grady said.

The University has been working with the Massachusetts Employment Security on this peoblem. According to Grady, the purpose is to lead these unemployed to jobs in the University system or anyplace.

He emphasized that many have been searching for jobs actively on their own.

Department heads have also been asked to cooperate and consider non-traditional sources of professional talent.

In addition, some counseling and testing has taken place for those who have desired it.

The program is co-ordinated through President Wood's office. The various branches of the University file report every two weeks.

Grady mentioned that the University is "kind of a model employer". It must follow an "affirmative action" program with regard to the disadvantaged. There should be open and fair recruitment, he said.

When asked about the implications for the University's role which this new policy suggests, Grady declined to comment. He suggested asking President Wood. Wood is more directly responsible for the philosophy behind the policy, he said.

YSA Sponsors Ex-GI Lecture Against War

The Young Socialist Alliance Militant Forum will sponsor Joe Miles, noted antiwar ex-GI who is currently on a nationwide speaking tour organized by the GI Civil Liberties Defense Committee (GICLDC), on Thursday, April 1 at 8:00 PM in Room 817.

Joe Miles

Miles, a member of the Fort Jackson 8, helped organize GI's United Against the War at Ft. Jackson S.C. and Ft Bragg N.C. He will be speaking about GI antiwar activity and seeding support for two law suits before the U.S. Supreme Court on behalf of 1st Amendment rights for GI's. The suit stems from 1969, when GI's United was formed and began organizing against the war. Lower courts decisions in 1970 denied GI's the right to hold legal, open, peaceful meetings on military bases.

The 21-year old activist is a former Socialist Workers Party (SWP) candidate for Congress in the Ninth Congressional District. He has been an active participant in both the antiwar and Black Liberation struggles since 1967, when as a student at American University in Washington, D.C. he joined the Young Socialist Alliance. Presently he is a member of the USA's National Committee. A former member of SNCC, Miles helped to organize a Black Student Union at American University and in 1968 was chairman of the University's Black Antiwar Antidraft Union. He was punitively reassigned to Alaska after his activity in the UGI's United and discharged in 1970.

Undergraduate newspaper of the University of Massachusetts. The Staff is responsible for its content and no faculty members or administration read it for accuracy or approval prior to publication.
Unsigned editorials represent the views of this paper. They do not necessarily reflect the views of the faculty, administration, or student body as a whole. Signed editorials, columns, reviews, and letters represent the personal views of the writers.

Just To Be Fair

If the Joint Commission on Campus Governance draft of a University-wide Senate constitution were accepted, with the present ration of faculty to graduate students to undergraduates and professional staff, the undergraduate representation in the Senate would be relegated to that of a less than one third minority, which could be silenced by the sheer force of numbers in a governing body designed carefully to give faculty and graduate students an adequate number of votes to overturn any decision on the part of the undergraduate representatives.

The report, drafted by a committee dominated by faculty and graduate students (only one undergraduate was left on the committee as this draft emerged), makes provision for 70 faculty members, 43 undergraduates, 12 graduates, and five professional staff members.

"In subsequent years", the report states, "as the Graduate Student body increases proportionately, alternate seats (9 alternate Graduate positions are provided as part of a "non-voting membership") will be converted to voting seats, and an equal number of faculty seats added."

In other words, the constitution would make provision for increasing the already disproportionate representation of the faculty, while making no mention of the possibility of the undergraduate student population increasing. The number of seats allocated to the undergraduates gives them just less than a third of the seats, which means that any action on the part of the undergraduate student caucus could be overturned by the rest of the faculty and graduate students. The position of the undergraduate caucus in the future will be even more tenuous because of the way graduate and faculty representation is designed to increase.

It is understandable that there are areas vital to faculty and graduate student concerns which need to be protected. The provisions for separate faculty and graduates caucus with special areas of almost untouchable interests are well defined. What is lacking is a clear understanding of the role of the undergraduates in the whole university. Surely some compensation for the fact that most of the matters to be dealt with by a University Senate will affect the undergraduates is advisable. Possibly a less disproportionate ratio would be more desirable.

The final ration was described by one commission member as "an outright political compromise." It seems that faculty members would still want to dominate the campus.

What seems to have happened as the Commission's draft of the new constitution developed is that faculty members of the commission blocked out all thoughts of their own inadequacies in governance in an attempt to recoup some of their prestige, lost in years past through bumbling.

In order to avoid the further development of the selfish interests of any one group on campus, we think that serious thought should be put into finding a more equitable ratio. The number of seats added to the undergraduate allotment would not have to be the great, just enough to be fair.

That coupled with provisions for increasing the number of undergraduate representatives, as the student body grows, would give the University a truly sound and effective governing Senate, something long overdue.

The Hard Sell

Just Wild About Harry

If you check the daily calendars of events in the CC and the good old Student Union, you can find out just exactly where good old Harold Koltin and the ASA is meeting tonight. Not that anyone would want to.

Now Mr. Koltin alleges that he has a lot of difficulty getting space in the pages of the MDC. He does. It is one of the unwritten rules of the journalism game that editors have the right to select, reject or rewrite anything submitted to the paper for publication. The Collegian is no different from any other paper when it comes to this policy. We are the ones responsible for the content of the paper, and though it may not seem so all the time (and for that I think we can be excused sometimes) we take this responsibility pretty seriously. Our readers may never know the headaches we give ourselves.

So when Mr. Koltin droped off a letter in the letters to the editor box that was, to use typical MDC editorial page lingo, blatantly offensive, we exercised our option and decided not to print it. It contained facts which were straining the limits of credibility at best and outright lies at worst. It contained many, many inferences pertaining to the work of the Concerts Committee, work which is necessarily being done in secret. Poor Harold is pissed because he wants to bring in groups under contract to Columbia Records. That couldn't be because he's campus rep for Columbia, now could it? Further, since the letter was addressed to one of our reporters who rarely comes in the office and with whom Harold seems to deal exclusively, and was not actually any kind of letter but allegedly a news story to be run under the reporter's by-line, we didn't think it would be out of line to give good old Harold a call and explain some of the ethics normally employed in the newspaper business.

I'm not about to launch off into any kind of personal attack against Mr. Koltin. But since he's been pissing and moaning about "unresponsive student leaders" I thought I would attempt to put things in order for the dear boy. Mr. Koltin's story says in part: "What is to be done about student 'leaders' who use their own positions and the money of the student body to enact and endorse unrepresentative policies?" OK, Harry baby. Point of information. The Student Senate is a duly elected body. If you feel it's unrepresentative, then talk to the people who elected the Senators and who seem to be satisfied. Point number 2, and this is a biggie, since you repeatedly complain that the MDC is unrepresentative of the student body, I will quote a few phrases from the mast which appears opposite this column: "Unsigned editorials represent the views of this paper, decided upon by a majority vote of the editorial board. They do not necessarily reflect the views of the faculty, administration, or the student body as a whole. Signed editorials, columns, reviews, and letters represent the personal views of the writers." Kapish? Whatever we do as the staff of the MDC we do because we ARE the staff of the MDC. If anyone thinks we are unrepresentative, I would invite him to either join the staff, start his own paper, or quit complaining about us.

Mr. Koltin's release goes on to say: "Those who were members of groups that had been accused of being unrepresentative came down (to the ASA meeting) to see just what ASA was all about, says Koltin, 'and I think they were a bit shaken to find a comparatively large group of concerned students who outrightly rebuked them on a number of points.'" At one point during Harold's meeting, he demanded to know just who "the elite student pig" who edited his letters to the editor was. The poor guy who is stuck with that nastiest of nasty jobs has worked his butt off for three years to get to that point. So Harold calls him a pig for doing his job. If I call you people pigs it's only to make you think.

Mr. Koltin goes off on a lot of tangents in his news story, most of which I'm not going into detail about. But I will say that if Harold keeps it up, if he continues in his wild and extravagant name throwing, if he persists in making unsubstantiated charges about "unresponsive and unrepresentative student 'leaders'", he's going to come to grief.

Tuition: How Fair Is Fair?

If there is one issue concerning the University today which applies to every student, whether radical or conservative, freak or straight, jock or bookworm, male or female, it is the impending tuition hike. The ultimate conclusion of that issue will have far reaching effects (into our pockets) and may well determine the academic future of many of us.

In yesterday's edition of the Boston Globe, that newspaper decided to take an editorial stand on the question. Yet, to the disappointment of many, the Globe, in a policy statement entitled, "Tuition: a fair proposal" attacked any low or free tuition system and spoke for the necessity of abolishing these systems which they felt subsidize "the rich at the expense of the poor".

The crux of the Globe's stand seems to be that while many poor students are having a hard time raising the money to put themselves through UMass or any of the other state-institutions in Massachusetts, there were many wealthy ones who were getting a virtually free ride because of the low tuition. The paper states that "this injustice will be magnified unless some steps are taken to require those able to pay their own way, or some share of it, to accept their responsibilities." Let us look a bit more closely at their arguments.

Quoting some statistics from President Wood, the Globe made the following statements:

"If 39% of families plan to go into debt, then, one must assume, 61% do not. If the families of 61% of UMass students are able to afford college for their children without borrowing, they are a fortunate group indeed."

Yes, they are a fortunate group and at a time when it is popular to attack the rich, it would follow that this group deserves some type of chastisement. The logic, however, is questionable. Simply because many people can afford to obtain college educations with a minimal financial burden, it does not necessarily follow that tuitions should be raised. At the same time as you increase the burden for the well-to-do's, you are also bludgeoning the already crippled poorer student with the growing financial strain. Many will crumble under the pressure.

The Globe does not, though, stand on this argument alone. In an earlier paragraph it is stated that, "for a 1971 student to make as great a real contribution to the cost of his education as did his 1959 counterpart, he would have to be paying $276. The very real improvement in the quality and scope of the education offered today at Amherst, and elsewhere would appear to justify a far greater increase."

There are a couple of blatant facts which the Globe has overlooked. Speaking of a "real contribution to the cost of his education", the paper fails to note that no tuition money goes to this or any state-run institution directly. Instead, the funds accumulated by tuitions go into a general state fund from which the University's budget is one of many items extracted.

Another point worth mentioning is that students attending this University do not simply pay $200 tuition. A small matter of fees appears on every student bill. According to former UMass President John W. Lederle, "Unless we don't care whether we disadvantage our Massachusetts youth for the world of tomorrow, let us stand on the principle that the University of Massachusetts should not exceed the national median for tuition and fees for institutions of our type. Sound comparisons must use both tuition and fees. We are now at the national median on an in-state basis."

In its final argument, The Globe editorial lists a few of the tuition bills before the Legislature and recommends the Belmonte-Golden Bill (House 2591) as the best. In this proposed legislation, "for those who could afford to pay, this would mean sharp increases in tution, to an estimated $550 a year at community colleges, and to $1,200 at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. For those who could not afford to pay, including many high school students for whom access to college is foreclosed even at the $100 rate, it would mean guaranteed help."

The plan, on the service, appears inviting considering the fact that the Massachusetts Taxpayers Association, which endorses the bill, estimates that it will save the taxpayers $20 to $25 million a year. Yet before one can actively support this seemingly equitable plan, it is necessary to answer one very important question. Lederle has stated that, "Throughout history the announcement of tuition hikes has been accompanied by the promise of increased financial aid for needy students. This has been decietful and fradulent. Never, to my knowledge, has sufficient financial aid been forthcoming. There is not sufficient financial aid now with a low tuition. The best and most economical financial aid system, assuring the most quality of opportunity and avoiding bureaucracy, is the low tution system."

Can this bill truly "guarantee" this financial aid? If the past is any indicator it is doubtful and the low tuition system appears as the only answer.

Letters To The Editor

So Very Tired...

To the Editor:

I was a Zionist. I have sent money to Zionists, written letters to Zionists, voted for Zionists, and tried to convince others to come to the aid of world Zionism. I have brought boatloads of white Europeans into the brown Middle East for the last fifty years. I have persecuted and oppressed the Arabic-speaking inhabitants of Palestine. When that didn't work, I stole their lands, deprived them of their livelihood, and robbed them of their dignity. But they still remained, so I destroyed their homes, separated their families, and forced them to flee to exile camps on the other side of an artificial border. I have watched in safety from my new villa as these dark-skinned Semites deteriorated physically and mentally. I have listened to the cries of agony in the night of children whom I forced to live in poverty and diseases. I have watched some of these brown-skinned babies grow to manhood and try to take back what I took from them. I have dropped napalm on their outposts and then in their refugee camps. I have made war against their brethren, also my enemy. My American-made tanks have rolled over and squashed their bodies lying burnt black on the hot desert sand. And when the people of the world sought the peace of Jerusalem, I took Jerusalem and played deaf to peace. All this because I supported the cause of world Zionism.

I am tired. Tired of these Zionists and Jews. Tired of their propaganda and lies. Tired of the echo of a people's agony in my mind. Tired of a world gone mad and blind to the injustices perpetrated against the Palestinian nation. I hope that the rest of the world will wake up in time and then take the necessary action to prevent the racial genocide against the Palestinians now going on in the Middle East.

Name Withheld by Request

It's What, Not How

To the Editor:
TIME: MID-term Examination

SETTING: Crowded classroom. Papers flying. Adrenalin soaring.

EXAM: "This exam is to be written clearly and in concise appropriate English grammar."
MY REACTION: "Fair enough, I'm not that proficient in other foreign languages anyway."

EXAM: "You may consult notes, books, or other materials but should not consult your classmates."
MY INTERPRETATION: "Open book exam. No cheating."

EXAM: "You should answer three of the six questions and should allow 15-20 minutes for each answer."
MY REACTION: "60/3 equals 20 minutes. The math is correct."

EXAM: "Use a note pad for preparation if necessary before beginning your final answer."
MY SPONTANEOUS REACTION: "WHAT! A notebook for preparation? (A frantic search of paper to see if I've misread and this is really a "take-home" exam.)"

EXAM: "You will be evaluated upon:
.English grammar
.Command of subject
.Finding and discussing relationships
.Expansion with your own ideas
.Strong theme with introduction and conclusion
.Reference to ideas raised in class and in seminar
MY REACTION: "If I do well, I wonder if I'll get my Masters degree for this dissertation?"

This, to me is a long essay exam.

In general, what keynotes a long essay exam? Long essay exams, to me, can:
:demand a large number of requirements in the context of a formal format for an answer, such as requiring an introduction and a conclusion to a question, and "strong" themes.
:demand references.

I feel that the most important thing in any essay exam is what you know not how you put it down on paper. I also feel what you think is more important than what other say or think. I'm in favor of personal and informal essay exams.

Gone Fishing

To the Editor:

In a few more weeks, fishing season will open in Massachusetts. Once again, the American sportsman will rush to the hills looking for lakes, rivers, and streams that may hold the most popular North American game fish, the trout.

Fishing can be a great deal of fun. It can be very relaxing, stimulating, challenging, exciting or whatever, depending on your attitude. One thing that isn't fun, however, is the yearly spectacle of empty beer cans, soda bottles, cigarette butts and packs, paper of all sorts, poptops, zig-zags, baggies, masses of discarded monofilament, and all the rest of the crap that seems to somehow get deposited either in or near the once-clean waters of New England.

Many of the people who deposit this mess are unaware of their contribution: they litter unconsciously, often with tiny items like bottlecaps, poptops, or cigarette butts. These things don't seem like much, and it is for that very reason that they are so easily and constantly discarded. It's easy to rationalize such littering, telling yourself that, what the hell, it's so small nobody will see it, or what the hell, everybody does it, or just what the hell. But these things are a problem. If they don't end up in the stomach of some unfortunate fish (since small things can be--and too often are--confused with food), they will continue to mar the beauty of nature.

Who wants to see a flower surrounded by cigarette butts deposited by a nictine freak? Or a fresh mountain spring glistening with poptops and glass? In some fishing spots, I have seen the ground almost hidden by litter-most of it small.

Fishing is beautiful. I'd like to ask you to help keep it that way by saving your litter, large or small, until you get home or to a trash container. And, if you really feel like saving what little natural beauty we have left, you can pick up what thoughtless people have already deposited. Your efforts will be appreciated.

Vets For War?

To the Editor:

Since there are approximately 1700 Veterans on this campus, and since about 250 of them have shown an interest in the recently-formed group known as Veterans for Peace, can I conclude that 1,450 Veterans on this campus are for war?

A Second Chance

To the Editor:

Holyoke--Exit 19--a hazy cluster of buildings--a place to speed by, but for God's sake, you'd never want to stop. But there is a group of people willing to stop, people who are now attempting to start a school in Holyoke designed to give young losers a second chance. These "losers" are high school drop-outs, ages sixteen to twenty-one, mostly of Puerto-Rican descent. Disillusioned by school, apathetic toward life, and unable to communicate because they don't speak English, these kids have turned to the street corners and shooting smack. How do you reach kids like this? How do you raise the literacy level of terrible readers? How do you seek and nurture the "talents" of high school dropouts?

A dedicated corps of people will be trying to answer such questions starting April 1st when the Holyoke Street School opens its doors. These are practical, realistic people who are seeking personal fulfillment through reaching as many kids as possible. Right now there are about fifteen human beings from the streets of Holyoke who have been taken into the developing program.

If you have an unselfish nature, search your heart and your home or dorm for old magazines, records, any school materials, art supplies, furniture, cash, change, energy, and prayers. If you find anything there, write to the Holyoke Street School, School of Education, UMass, or call Bob Fleischman at 253-2881. Or else stop at the table in the Campus Center. The drop-outs need help--don't turn them down, for society has already turned its back on them.

Policies of Paranoia

Without in any way condoning the theft of documents from an office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, one is tempted to ask: who watches the watchman? Little confidence is inspired by the security measures of a security agency whose files can be so easily burglarized.

More disquieting than the bureau's internal security is the evidence, provided via the stolen files, of F.B.I. incursions into political surveillance which far exceed legitimate efforts to protect the national interest. One need not minimize the seriousness of certain violent and lawless episodes in the recent history of student unrest to be disturbed by the F.B.I.'s measures of campus infiltration, especially its apparent stress on surveillance of black students and their organizations. Such procedures assume undertones of latent racial prejudice. With rare exceptions, the protests by Negro students have been concerned with their personal place in the academic community rather than with the revolutionary excesses of the white (or black) radical fringe.

The Justice Department replies that the main thrust of F.B.I. activities has been distorted by the disclosure of only fourteen documents out of a total of 800 taken from the files. This argument offers small comfort to those whose right to privacy is improperly invaded. But even more dangerous are the consequences--clearly intended-that flow from the widespread use of informers. These tactics, said an F.B.I. newsletter, "will enhance the paranoia" among left-wing dissenters and "get the point across there is an F.B.I. agent behind every mailbox."

The dictionary definition of paranoia is "a mental disorder marked by delusions or irrational suspicions." It is difficult to be paranoid over police surveillance which, far from being a delusion, is carried out with such plainly stated intent.

Assistant Attorney General William H. Rehnquist recently denied that political surveillance as currently practiced has a "chilling effect" on free expression of dissent. Apparently the F.B.I., the Justice Department's investigatory arm, disagrees. Could anything be more chilling than the knowledge that the Federal Government allows law enforcement to be perverted into a deliberate process of spreading fear and suspicion, on the campuses or anywhere else in a society that wants to remain free?

Editorial Points

President Robert C. Wood will be visiting some dormitories today here on campus. Butterfield, Coolidge, and the new Northeast dorms will be graced with the presence of our President. If you smell anything funny in some of the corridors, President Wood, its incense. Also be careful of your morality when you head for the Co-Ed dorms. You just never can tell.

Somebody took careful pains to make it impossible to get into the Campus Center from the side where the Campus Bus stop is by building a lot of mud. Curse you, Jack.

"Napalm doesn't wear off as the day wears on" said a sign in the Student Union lobby yesterday while Marine recruiters did their thing. Haven't seen a sign like that in a long time. You'd think people stopped using napalm or something.

It may come as a shock to you but T. Hamilton Bone, the next-to-last pack mule in the US Army, died Monday at Turkey Creek Ranch near Ft. Carson, Colo., at the age of 38. Hamilton, called "Hambone" by those who served with him, was one of only two survivors of the 1800 mule contingent of the mountain pack group at Ft. Carson and was a teammate of Trotter, the mascot of the US Military Academy at West Point. It's obvious that he was not the last ass left in the Army, however.

And here is one eternal question from the October 26, 1966 issue of the MDC: "Has the invasion of dope and sex into the world of popular music affected the morality of the younger generation?"

"Little Big Man" Big; Custer Not Withstanding

By EUGENE BARNETT
MDC Staff

To be sure, the weekend ahead already provides the more than pleasant spectre of both Charlie Chaplin and Humphrey Bogart, a veritable overload of each, and at on-campus prices. If, however, you have the money in your pocket, Little Big Man, at the Campus Cinema, is well worth the price of admission.

If you liked Huck Finn, you'll love Jack Crabb. Little Big Man is the story of the "only living white survivor of Custer's Last Stand." Perhaps we should take the story of a one hundred and twenty-one year old in-patient with a grain of salt; as one reviewer said Jack Crabb is either a "liar of insane proporations or one of the most overlooked characters in history." Still, even if you don't actually believe Jack's long, colorful tale, you have to admit he is a damn good storyteller. If Jack Crabb were my grandfather, I think I'd still be sitting in front of the fireplace, asking Grampie to tell me about Custer for the nine hundredth time, and enjoying it as much as the first time.

It seems a young, earnest, ass-differs-from-elbow-I-know-not-how anthropologist is interested in what Jack might have to say, hoping to reinforce his own preconceptions. He comes, tape recorder in hand, decked out in tweed looking oh so academic, to the old folks home in which Jack is living. Jack answers his questions politely, helpfully, then informs the young man that he's "got it all wrong." Turn on the tape recorder, you Ivory Tower weasel, and let the old man tell you what REALLY happened. Before you know it, we're flashing back to the wide open prairies, and we're reliving the life and times of one of the most incredible characters ever to lose his way on the Chisholm Trail.

Little Big Man is a fine story. Not without its disappointments, to be sure, but this is largely due to the length of time I spent anxiously awaiting its release. Unlike most films, you knew Little Big Man was coming, much in the same way you knew Grace Slick or Mia Farrow was pregnant. Mia happily surprised the world with two (click) two (click) two kids instead of one, but Gracie unfortunately gave birth to a girl, just when we are thought God would be a boy. If Gracie had just had a girl and then announced it, there would not have been cause for disappointment. The point of this tangent is that Little Big Man had no chance to sneak up on me, so that I took high expectations with me to the theater.

Dustin Hoffman did not disappoint me. Dusty was coming off his personal Frazier fight, John and Mary. After a string of magnificent performances in The Graduate, The Journey of the Fifth Horseman, Jimmy Shine, and Midnight Cowboy, Hoffman disappointed many with his performance in John and Mary. One of the finest screen actors of all time, Dustin Hoffman was in the eyes of many attempting a comeback with Little Big Man. In my more or less humble opinion, Dustin Hoffman as Jack Crabb is one of the finest, most demanding, most versatile performances ever undertaken. Hoffman is excellent as Jack Crabb.

Chief Dan George, along with Hoffman, makes the film. A full-blooded Indian Chief, and a novice actor, he is deserving of his nomination as Best Supporting Actor.

Little Big Man suffers from the proselytizing liberalism of director Penn. I half expected Jane Fonda to come out petitioning for a return of America to the Indians. I do not fault Penn for his concern; rather it is the heavy-handed, red and white moralizing which detracts from the film that I find distasteful. Penn nearly turns Little Big Man into a totally unsubtle Red Like Me. This, and his reduction of Custer to a hopelessly overdrawn caricature, are the chief drawbacks to what is otherwise an eminently good film.

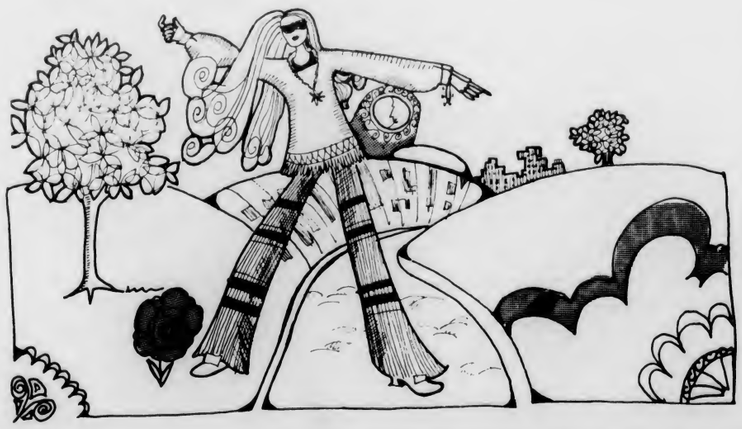
Ready To Take Charge Of Your Education?

Some people know what they want to achieve, but can't do it in a conventional master's degree program. For them, Lesley College's Program Four may provide the "right" opportunities.

Program Four is a flexible, open-ended plan of graduate work, leading to a master's degree in education. Each student designs and directs his own course of study, work, and research, to be carried out in appropriate settings. Lesley College provides the faculty advisors, exchange with fellow students, information on available resources, evaluation and colloquia.



There are no course or credit requirements. Instead, the student undertakes a self-directed program of learning and demonstrates his knowledge and abilities in a major project. Readiness for the master's degree is determined jointly by students, faculty and outside advisors. Interested? Write for more information.

Lesley also has graduate programs for men and women preparing for teaching careers in elementary or special education.

Bogart Film Festival

Here's Lookin' At You, Kid

By MARTIN PURVIS
MDC Staff

Tonight in Thompson Hall the following five films, all of which star Humphrey Bogart, will be shown:

Thompson 104 – 6:00 P.M. The Oklahoma Kid 8:00 P.M. Casablanca 10:00 P.M. Casablanca

Thompson 102 – 6:00 P.M. Key Largo 8:00 P.M. The Big Sleep 10:00 P.M. The Treasure of the Sierra Madre

The admission price of fifty cents enables one to see three films and switching between the two theaters is permissable.

The Oklahoma Kid, made in 1939 when Bogart was primarily a top notch heavy, is made palatable by the bravura performance of James Cagney.

Casablanca is an American cult film. There are some students who have the entire script memorized. Many come back to see Bogart redeliver such lines as when, asked by a young woman who seeks to trust the rather unscrupulous Claude Rains, "What kind of a man is he?", he responds, "Oh, the same as any other man, only more so." With Peter Lorre, Sidney Greenstreet, and Ingrid Bergman.

Key Largo is a gangster melodrama set in Florida and starring Edward G. Robinson, Lauren Bacall, and Bogart. Bogart's favorite director, John Huston ("Maltese Falcon") is always at his best when depicting the nature of criminals and outcasts. Particularly memorable is a scene in which two rival gangs meet and the sense of camaradery they have towards each other.

The Big Sleep is claimed by insiders to be the best of the Bogart pictures. William Faulkner's script of Raymond Chandler's novel is one of the most complex plots ever put on film. The director, Howard Hawks, once said, "Neither the author, the writer, nor myself knew who had killed whom" But, as a matter of fact, everything fits into place -- if you pay attention. The huge success of this film inspired the making of Key Largo. With Lauren Bacall, Dorothy Malone, generally fine acting and racy dialogue.

The Treasure of the Sierra Madre won Bogart an Oscar nomination, but John Huston won two Oscars, for his direction and his screenplay. Critics James Agee and Pauline Kael both have called this the best American sound film. The success is probably due equally to the unreality of the shooting which gives a certain psychological terror and the amazing acting performance of the director's father, Walter Huston, who also won an Oscar.

Boston Ballet Returns To Smith

This weekend marks the return of the Boston Ballet to Theatre 14, Smith College, in a series of concerts featuring Edward Villella, Edra Toth, Peter Martins, and Violette Verdy. The performances will be on April 3 at 8:30 pm, April 4 at 2:30 and 8:30 pm, and April 7 at 4:00 and 8:30 p.m.

In addition to the soloists, the series will introduce a new "Rock Ballet" entitled "Gamete Garden" which recently had its world premiere with the Boston Ballet. Commissioned by E. Virginia Williams, artistic director of the ballet, the new work has a musical score by Michael Kamen with the New York Rock Ensemble, and choreography by Louis Falco, one of America's most outstanding and talented young choreographers.

Set against an unconventional backdrop of man-sized wooden coops, cages, and slatted passageways, the story deals with human evolution and man's spiritual encounter with the world around him. The soloists for the Rock Ballet will be Robert Steele and Anamarie Sarazin of the Boston Ballet company.

On Wednesday evening, April 7, a new ballet will be premiered in place of the Rock Ballet: "Speed Zone", with music by Paul Hindemith and choreography by Samuel Kurkjian.

Information on programs and tickets may be obtained through the box office. Because the college is on vacation, special box office hours are in effect: April 1 and 2 from 1-4 pm (ext. 423 or 454), Saturday April 3 from 1-4 and one hour before each performance (ext. 840.) The box office will reopen Monday April 5 at 12 noon.

One Of The Quarterbacks

Editor's Note: With the appointment of Dick MacPherson to replace the retired Vic Fusia to the head coaching helm, UMass football has undergone a complete change of faces in its coaching staff. In order that university sports enthusiasts get better acquainted with the new men who will assist coach MacPherson in the fall, the Collegian sports pages will carry a special series of sketches written by staff reporter Mark Vogler which will focus in on the background and interest information pertaining to each of the six assistants. Today is the second of this five part series.

A careful glance at Dick MacPherson's grid iron brain trust outfit reveals that of his six rookie assistants, three were quarterbacks in the collegiate ranks, and yet another was a signal caller by schoolboy origin. Interesting, but not coincidental.

One might resolve that having so many ex-quarterbacks around could possibly rub off on the team and restore some of the zip in UMass' passing attack, something which is long gone since the days of Landry. That's possible, but if you want passing that bad, why not import it. Well, whatever reason Coach MacPherson has in mind for such an abundance of quarterbacking knowledge, he'd have it no other way.

As he sees it: "The mark of all good quarterbacks is distinguished by their capable leadership, the initiative to handle themselves on their feet vocally as well as physically, and the courage to try something new and something hard. That's why you see so many former quarterbacks coaching football today–that's one of the things I was looking for when I was selecting assistants. I was hiring leaders, not followers."

The coach seems to have clarified himself well. He has a pretty good point when placing a high preference in signal callers. After all, weren't professional head coaches Lou Saban (Denver), Paul Brown (Cleveland), Johny Mazur (Boston), George Allen (Washington), and Johny Reuch (Buffalo) all college quarterbacks their own right? If it's good enough for the pros, why knock it.

Larry Pasquale, one of the first coaches implicated to assist MacPherson this fall provides no exception. Besides a well rounded coaching background, he was a collegiate quarterback, and a pretty fair one at that.

A native of Brooklyn, New York, the Lafayette High quarterbacking star was selected All-City in his senior year. He was also feted as his squad's (4-3) MVP.

It was on to Bridgeport and on to bigger and better things. Although attending a small name university, Pasquale made quite a name for himself in the course of his four year stay. He lettered three years in football, doing the brunt of the passing while bolstering the defensive line at end.

Pasquale best remembers a game in his sophomore year in which Bridgeport demolished Otto Graham's Coast Guard eleven 30-6. The fact that he completed 16 of 18 passes was a memory in itself. But the fact that Otto Graham took it upon his own to come over and give Pasquale some post-game pointers further spiced the occasion. Who wouldn't treasure advice coming from a pro football hall of famer, a man who was Mr. Quarterback in his prime.

In his senior year at Bridgeport he captained the team through a 6-4 season and received the game ball in one contest.

His contributions to the school in sports enabled him to share co-alumnus honors for the years 1960-70 with former New York Giant receiver Andy Robustelli.

With a burning desire to get into the coaching circle ever since he began college, he didn't need much more incentive to spur him on after graduating in 1963. He quickly secured an assistant spot on the Chappaqua High (NY) coaching staff. Then he advanced to Greenwich (Conn.) where as the school's head swimming coach he drove them to third in New England. Two years at Danbury

Pasquale Impressed With Gridders

High (Conn.) and he helped produce two undefeated football teams and another in basketball. His later year he served as a head coach in football.

With mighty fine schoolboy credentials he had no problem moving onto the college scene. He has served a year apiece on the football coaching staffs of BU and Slippery Rock State College. Before coming over to UMass he put in two seasons as an assistant at the U.S. Naval Academy.

Pasquale's task as defensive backfield coach during the course of a game will be confined to the phones up in the communications box, reporting back to Coach MacPherson and Coach Pickett just how the opposing team is attacking the Redman defense.

MacPherson regards Pasquale's value to the staff quite highly. "I've always been impressed with Larry's intelligence and inquisitive mind towards football. He's had tremendous experience for a man of his age. His soundness, dedication, and application to detail will keep this program on a balanced keel."

Asked what motivated his decision to jump from Navy to UMass, Pasquale singled out MacPherson's reputation as a coach and the general attitude displayed by Massachusetts gridders in recent years.

"There are a great many reasons why I wanted to come to UMass. I know Coach MacPherson very well. I know what kind of man he is and just how he will treat Massachusetts football players. He has a vast knowledge of the game itself and I just wanted to work with such a man.

"And so often I have been impressed with the enthusiasm of the university and particularly the way the players have competed. I felt I would want to coach players of this caliber."

A firm believer in the ideals of the late Vince Lombardi, he models his philosophy after the legendary coach.

"I believe the game should be played with everything you have at all times, and nothing shy of total effort in order to be successful. I really believe that in order to get that, you have to develope it in practice. To give anything less of maximum effort is cheating yourself, and most of all–your team."

The UMass varsity basketball and hockey teams have just completed very successful seasons. The Redmen hoopsters finished with a record of 23-4 while the pucksters finished at 14-6-1. More details on page 12.

Hoop Season Greatest Ever

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

The greatest season in UMass basketball history has come to an end. The excitement and emotional impact that marked this year of Redman hoop will be embedded in the memories of all those who proudly call themselves "Redman fans."

This was the season that produced the winningest record ever, 23-4. This was the season that saw the Redmen run through the Yankee Conference with a perfect, 10-0 slate. And this was the season that UMass was again selected to play in the NIT.

It was a season of ups and downs, a season of rejoicing and dispair and a season of heroic deads and bitter dissapointments.

This was the season that coach Leaman, his players and the fans were all waiting for since the NIT loss to Marquette the year before. The word was out from the beginning of practice that this was the season to be.

This was the season of Julius Erving, of John Betancourt, Ken Mathias, Chris Coffin, Mike Paglaira and a new face to UMass basketball, Tom McLaughlin. These men, their coaches, the fans and the officials all gave to this season the label: "the greatest."

It all began way back on the first day in December as St. Anselms's came to Curry Hicks Cage. The lines that formed before the game was the sign of more to come for the die-hard Redman fans. This contest ended in a rout and from here the Redmen added ten more consecutive victories before the streak was snapped by one point at Providence as the Friars withstood a three shot barrage in the last eighteen seconds by the Redmen to take its place as the number one team in New England.

During this stretch of the season, many of the trends that would mark the remainder of the season were set. Erving was his brilliant self. Betancourt found a perfect compliment in Paglaira. Coffin established himself as a solid starter. Redman home court advantages were as strong as ever, but road games would be a hard task including Yan Con action.

The surprise team in the east, Fordham came to town to open the second semester with its band of mad full-court pressers and excellent shooters and came away with an 87-79 victory before a packed house.

Now the skeptics went to work and began to ask if UMass was really as good as it was said it was. With Northeastern, Holy Cross and Boston College coming up in the next couple of weeks the skeptics were waiting for the Redmen to fold.

This was not to be as Northeastern was trounced, Holy Cross was defeated at Worcester and Boston College was knocked off before the ultimate in emotional crowds at Curry Hicks Cage.

In between these games the Redmen beat Iona and Vermont. UConn was next to fall, but then came the shocker of the season at Springfield when a shot with two seconds to go defeated UMass, 63-62, and sent the season into a state of standstill.

With six games to go and visions of the NIT there was only one thing left to do: win them all. It's now history these six games, but the determination of co-captains Erving and Mathias still stand as an example for team leaders to get their mates back on the winning trail.

In this six game quest for the post season bid, the Syracuse game still stands out as the game when Erving put on the greatest effort ever, possibly in New England, in leading his mates to a resounding victory over the tourney conscious Orangemen.

But it was also after this game that the Redmen seemed to lose some of their edge. They just got by New Hampshire and Maine. And when it came to North Carolina it was no contest from the start.

The bid came early this year, but the exit came harder on the Redmen. For the second straight year they were paired against the number one seed and eventual champion. There was no Marquette performance this year. It was a crushing end to the greatest season ever.

The records speak for themselves. The performances will always be remembered. The accolades that were received by the Redmen were all the product of hard work.

It's now time to just sit back and hope that the months fly by so that Redman hoop will once again fill the minds of Redman fans.

Puckmen Established Div. II Power

TWO KEYS TO THE SEASON-Pat Keenan (4) was one of many reasons for UMass' hockey success this season. But Vermont goalie, Dave Reece, was the key man in keeping the Redmen from going all the way to the Division II championship. (MDC Photo by Ned Diffendale)

It was far and away the most successful season ever for UMass hockey. Not only was the 14-5-1 regular season record the best ever compiled by a Redman hockey team, but also, and more importantly, it establishes UMass as a bonafide Division II hockey power.

The season could not have started on a more favorable note than the first game rout of a weak Lowell Tech squad. This win, although decisive, was not indicative of the true potential of the Redmen mainly because of the caliber of the Lowell opponent.

However, a lot of doubts were eased and a lot of questions answered as the pucksters scored an impressive home victory over Division I opponent Pennsylvania.

This game was followed by another crucial contest, this one against Vermont at Orr Rink. Again the Redmen came out on top, gaining an overtime victory over the Catamounts.

The momentum of these victories carried over into the next few games as UMass rolled on to defeat Williams, Middlebury, A.I.C., and Norwich to take a perfect 7-0 slate into the semester break.

Then came the ridiculously long 45-day lay-off between the seventh and eighth games. As Coach Jack Canniff put it, "It was like playing a different season; everything we had gained now had to be regained."

The first game of the "new season" resulted in the first Redman loss, a sound defeat at the hands of Colby College at Colby. Next, the Redmen were unable to hold on to a slim one goal lead in the closing minutes at Merrimack College and settled for a tie. This was followed by the second defeat of the season, this one at the hands of Bowdoin College at Bowdoin. UMass was at that point winless in three consecutive outings; the juggernaut was stalling.

A sound trouncing of Connecticut at Orr Rink indicated that the UMass hockey machine was no longer stalling, but, as it turned out, was now sputtering.

The win against UConn was followed by a loss to Providence, an overtime win over Northeastern, and a loss to the Catamounts of Vermont, all three being away contests.

The Redmen regained some of their early season momentum as the year drew to a close. They won five of their last six games with only a loss to powerhouse New Hampshire putting a damper on victories against Amherst, Boston State, Hamilton, Holy Cross, and a last-game shellacking of the Merrimack College Warriors at Orr Rink.

Things look mighty promising then as it appeared that the momentum of these last few games would carry over into the Division II playoffs, as the Redmen met Vermong in a semi-final game at Burlington.

It was not meant to be, however, as UMass ran into an immense individual performance by UVM goalie Dave Reece, and the great season was over.

Although it was a disappointing ending to an otherwise impressive year, the feeling is that the end of playoff time next season will find the Redmen on top of the Division II heap. The optimism is based on the fact that so many players are returning.

The high-scoring line of Jack Edwards, Pat Keenan, and Dan Reidy is intact as are the line of Lonnie Avery, Mike Waldron, and Dennis Grabowski, and Don Riley, Chico Shea, and Eric Scrafield.

The defense and goaltending will also be strong as the defensive pairings of Don Lowe and Brian Sullivan, Al Nickerson and Bob Bartholomew, and spot defenseman Bob Shilalie will be returning along with three capable goaltenders in the likes of P.J. Flaherty, Peter Erickson, and John Kiah.

Add to this a few freshmen coming up who are expected to help, and it becomes obvious that the optimism is quite warranted.

NEW AIDE-Larry Pasquale will be an assistant to new head football coach, Dick MacPherson. Pasquale will serve as a defensive backfield coach. See feature story on page 10. (MDC Photo by David Bernstein)

Red Sox Trade Get Starting Catcher

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP)—The Boston Red Sox, determined to make a solid bid for the American League pennant, acquired hard-hitting catcher Duane Josephson from the Chicago White Sox Tuesday, and promptly announced they are not through wheeling and dealing.

"We've got something else in the works," player personnel director Haywood Sullivan said in announcing the acquisition of Josephson.

About an hour earlier, the Red Sox sent 1967 Cy Young Award winner Jim Lonborg and reserve outfielder Jarvis Tatum on option to Louisville of International League.

The Red Sox obtained the 28-year-old Josephson and relief pitcher Danny Murphy in exchange for veteran reliever Vicente Romo and first baseman Tony Muser, a 23-year-old prospect shipped to Louisville Monday.

"Josephson will be our starting catcher on opening day in Boston next Tuesday," Boston Manager Eddie Kasko said.

"We'll work him into the lineup immediately, and I'm going to try to catch him regularly. I know he hit the hell out of us last year."

Josephson, who hit .316 with four homers and 41 RBI's while appearing in 96 games in 1970, is being counted on to fill the trouble spot which has plagued the Red Sox for many years. The Red Sox brass calls his throwing arm "a pretty good one."

The Varsity M Club will continue its Wednesday luncheons at the Newman Center this afternoon at 12:15 p.m. with the first of a series of Spring sports luncheons. This first spring luncheon will feature a review of the baseball and lacrosse Southern trips and preview of the seasons with Coaches Dick Bergquist and Dick Garber. Door prize. Good food. $1.50.

Wood Stuns Nation- L. B. J. Still Prexy

By HARVEY L. ANUS

WASHINGTON--A former member of the Johnson Administration disclosed yesterday that Lyndon Johnson is still President of the United States, that he is running the country from a secret complex in texas, and that the newspapers of every nation in the world have helped to conceal these facts for the past three years.

Robert C. Wood, former undersecretary of HUD and presently the President of the University of Massachusetts, said at a news conference yesterday that Johnson set up Richard M. Nixon, a longtime political hack, as fake President so that he could run the Nation with no public interference.

According to Wood, Johnson told the world on March 31, 1968, that he "would not seek nor accept his party's nomination for another term" as President. The press across the globe headlined this story in every newspaper read by man the next day, April Fools Day, 1968.

Johnson then set up a fake election between Hubert H. Humphery and Nixon lor later that year, and fixed it so that Nixon, a do-nothing, would take office and allow him to continue to run the country in secret.

Wood further charged that Johnson planned the assassination of Senator Robert Kennedy because Kennedy had discovered Johnson's plot and had threatened to expose it.

Johnson, according to the Wood story, told him that this scheme was the only way to prevent a military coup in the United States. He ex plained, "Lyndon reasoned that most people in America wanted certain changes to be made in the nation which, if executed, would have upset the Army. A coup was threatened by General Maxwell Taylor if Johnson didn't do something about it.

"LBJ then worked out this plan so that he would run the government with no public pressure. The public could object to what was going on, but all they could do was elect a new President each year, who would promise to straighten things out...but Johnson would be immune from criticism as he actually ran things."

Wood used Nixon as an example of this. He said that Nixon was elected when he promised to end the war and stop inflation, and while the public continues to yell at him about these unfulfilled promises, Johnson is free to escalate the war and start a depression.

Johnson plans to continue the present setup for several years, according to Wood. He will make a public disclosure of what he has done, according to Wood, immediately after the Senate declares him King of America in 1973.

Editorial

A President Steps Down

Well, the die is cast. We've crossed the Rubicon. That's the old ball game. Robert Wood is no longer UMass President. It's all over but the shouting. The handwriting is on the wall. The tea is in the cup and Havlicek stole the ball. What else can we say? It's Dewey in the White House and Truman in Independence (do declare!).

With all the returns in except for a few districts in Chicago where the boxes are still being stuffed, it appears that Thomas E. "Skip" Dewey has emerged victorious over former President and part-time Fuller brush man Harry S. "Charlie Brown" Truman. Neal Sheinwald was unavailable for comment. (da, da, da, da -da, da)

Truman, very tired after his brief stay at 1318B Pennsylvania Avenue was quoted as saying that he didn't think Dewey "could hack it". He admitted that constantly stopping bucks had wearied him over the years and advised those who might follow him to try a dear every now and then, just for variety.

All that we can say is that if you liked Peanuts, you'll love Skippy.

Wood Resigns As Prexy

The Board of Trustees announced the resignation of UMass President Robert C. Wood at a meeting in Boston yesterday afternoon.

Wood is reportedly leaving his $45,000 a year post as UM prexy to take over the University's Student Senate Transit System.

The bus line, which operates in and around the campus, has been troubled over the last few months by money problems, which resulted in the resignation of the line's head, William Perkins, a student.

Reached for comment last night, Perkins would only say that he had indeed resigned. He declined to speculate on the rumours that Wood would opt for his job.

"Of course I quit," he snapped, "You read the Collegian, don't you?"

Wood has had experience in the transportation field. He was the director of the MBTA in Boston before becoming a bureaucrat in Washington, a job which he left when he came to UMass.

UM-Amherst Chancellor Oswald Tippo was reported pleased with the reports of Wood's impending resignation.

"Hmmph, it's about time we got someone who knows how to drive a bus," he grunted.

In his years as Chairman of the Board of the MBTA, Wood drove the system into bankruptcy, resulting in political pressure being placed on him to leave. So he did. Now we're stuck with him.

The Campus Reaction

By JACK LEDERLE
Whitmore Correspondent

Major figures across campus reacted with shock yesterday to President Wood's disclosure that Lyndon Johnson is still running the country, but at least one top Whitmore administrator said he doesn't believe the story.

Chancellor Tippo, at a news conference at the Jolly Bull, said, "For the past year its become clear that you can't believe a damn thing that Wood says, and I'm sure that he's just made up this whole story too. He probably will use the publicity lor some political reason, he does things like this all the time."

But other campus personalities refused to dismiss the Johnson story as quickly. Student Senate President Glenn Elters said he believed the story and added, "This is just another example of the repressive and facist government pulling the wool over our eyes when we weren't looking."

University Planning Director Horace J. Littlefield said the announcement surprised him, but that he really didn't care. He explained, "Look, it doesn't affect me. I just plan the buildings, finance 'em, and see that they get struck up somewhere...after that I don't care what happens or who lives in them. Hell, if Johnson's still running things, I say give him back his old office in Whitmore."

The University's leading ecologist, Quint Dawson, was upset by the announcement. He said that he had understood that Johnson had been recycled and was now tending bar at Andre's Tic Toc Club in Erie. Dawson said that UMass students will hold a rally in front of Thompson tomorrow to protest something that will be thought of later by Ken Mosakowski.

Redmen Win, Leaman Dies Oz Blows Wad

By WILLIAM F. FIELD
Washed-Up Fat Cat

WASHINGTON--"I am the President, I am the President, I am the President, I am the President, please, someone, tell me I am the President."

This was the text of a statement released by alleged President Richard M. Nixon to the press yesterday, moments after Robert Wood made his disclosure. Nixon would not say anything else to anyone all day.

But Vice-President Spiro T. Agnew claimed late last night that Wood's remarks were all part of a sinister plot by C.B.S. news to discredit the pentagon.

"Now it will appear that the military leaders in this nation don't even know who their boss is," the Vice President explained. He added, "This is just another example of one network's all out campaign to put me back in private life."

Elsewhere in Washington the general reaction on the part of most government employees was apathy

But one major Nixon administration official confirmed Wood's story. Richard W. Beaver, White House Janitor, said, "Johnson sends a message to me each week, asking me how good pat is in bed. He's still in charge."

Stoneham Plans To Kill Students

By HAMILTON I. TURLEY
Home and Garden Editor

Faculty and Administrators voiced strong approval yesterday for Dining Commons Czar Joel Stoneham's plan to poison 10,000 students by serving rancid tomatoes during the annual Spring Food Services picknic next month.

Stoneham, who said he got the idea last year when a batch of rotten roast beef gave 2000 Southwest residents a bad case of diaharea, plans to import the tomatoes for this year's disease from the Free University Food Cooperative.

The tomatoes, according to Stoneham's plan, will be soaked in pickle brine and served as a sauce over the barbicued chicken, and will taste, the Food Magnate said, "Like braised beef that turned bad... a taste we know UMies will suck up."

The plan, which has been in the planning stages since April 10 and 11 last year, was hailed by Chancellor Tippo at a news conference held in the Top of the Campus yesterday. Tippo, who's wife's corporation, "Emma's Red Ones" will grow the polluted vegetables for Free U., said he will order the school's infirmary to close on the day of the poisonings, so that "As many students as possible will die."

The Faculty Senate, meeting in Munson Annex yesterday, voted 2-1 to support the plan. There were 125 abstentions.

Acting Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences Jerrimiah M. Allen voiced his approval of the scheme this way:

"Ha Ha its about time we wiped out the god damned smelly little students...they don't bathe, you know. I wanted to pull all of their cards last semester but Fat Head in Whitmore wouldn't let me. Ha Ha this is great, now I've got to find a way to have Musgrave eat the food."

But student opinion over the plan was divided. Student Senate Vice President and Resident Facist Patricia Beharry said she didn't understand the plan, and wished that administrators would use smaller words in the future.

Senate President Glenn Elters praised the idea, and said that he had a similar idea in March when the student body defeated his plan to pay Senate officers on a referendum. Elters added, "I just hope that the diseased bosies of the dying students don't stink too much and pollute the air."

Dean of students William F. Field said he had no opinion of the plan, but added that his staff was investigating the matter, and said that he would call back when he thought of something to say.

Prince House Collapses, Littlefield Sought By FBI

by JACK KOCH
Funny Man

Resident of Southwest were jarred awake early this morning as the south end of Prince House collapsed in a pile of rubble, killing 17 and wounding 92 others.

Work crews from the Tobin Hall construction site were moved in immediately to help search for buried victims.

According to an eyewitness, Holly Slurp of Coolidge, the building began to bend out of shape at about 3 a.m. It let go with a loud roar an hour later. She said that people could be seen still in their beds as the building fell down around them.

Miss Slurp was subsequently arrested by campus police on charges of prostitution.

The man who stuck Prince House there, H.J. Littlefield, University Planning Officer, was heard to mutter while looking at the wreckage of Prince, "This wasn't suppose to happen till next year."

Littlefield, the man who brought you the Campus Center and the bridge across the pond, is presently being hunted in 7 eastern states by the FBI in connection with the building collapse.

Chancellor Tippo was unavailable for comment. He is in the infirmary with food poisoning.

Trustees Go Berserk, Leave Hotel Shambles

By SALLY SALT
Staff Pump

Boston-The UMass Board of Trustees yesterday approved the concept of eliminating "open campus" from the University system, in an effort to control what one Trustee called "those damn little punks who run around campus all day doing nothing but smoking dope near the pond and consorting in the Hatch."

The proposal seeks to make students conform to some "good old fashioned rules of conduct" by making students walk single file between classes, instituting a "pass system" for use of toilet facilities in academic buildings, and creating an elaborate system of "demerits" to reprimand students who don't dress "properly" and forget to "follow basic rules of cleanliness."

The proposal received the unanimous endorsement of a special task force, secretly formed last year to Study what Dean of Women Helene Curtis called "a noticeable lack of appreciation for everything that is right and good for all those nice children who come to the big University" by certain "elements" within the Amherst community.

Dean Curtis, backed by representatives of the National Rifle Association argued for the proposal, citing the high school experience of "some of the nicest young ladies and gentlemen at the University."

Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Randy Bromery, snickering under his breath, told the Board, which had been disturbed earlier in the three hour meeting by a group of students from UMass Boston claiming that the chicken coops on the Amherst campus should be eliminated because of what one shaggy haired radical freak called "the exploitive nature of raising those chicks...making them live in degenerate conditions with the lights on all night..watching them copulate." He disagreed with the proposals on the grounds that "students are going to get madder than hell about it."

Bromery, once a kid himself, was overheard whispering to Chancellor Tippo, who used to be a botanist and knows a lot of funny stories, that he would "have to hire three or four more lackeys to watch the bathrooms and make sure students didn't smoke on school grounds" if the proposal, nicknamed "Operation Keep 'em Moving" were instituted.

Snafu Maroons Red Cosmo

PETROGRAD, USSR (NE) Valiry J. Romanovich completed his fourth day in orbit today as Russian scientists denied charges that they intend to let Romanovich rot in space.

Romanovich was boosted aloft Monday in Russia's newest version of the Pelican series, named "Beat-Off 7" in honor of the 7 men who started Russia's space program.

Dr. Igor Turdhaum, head of the sprawling Stalin Space Research Labs just outside of Petrograd, announced at a news conference held last night that he and his ground control team have every intention of bringing Romanovich down.

"This is just preposterous," he spluttered, "I am amazed and shocked that anyone would accuse us of doing something like that."

Western observers monitoring conversations held between Beat-Off 7 and ground control reported that Romanovich has begged several times with the ground "not to do it..let me down." However, only one half of the conversatioons can be heard due to technical limitations and it is not known just what ground controllers have said in reply to the cosmonaut's pleas.

The man who first detected Romanovich's cries for mercy is an illiterate South Dakota rutabaga farmer named Richard Ney.

"I was just listening in like I always do and there was this guy weeping and crying and carrying on like the world was going to end. So I called up the sheriff and he told me what to do."

When Ney announced at a Rotary luncheon in Mooville, S.D., what he had heard over his two-way radio Rotary member Oscar Tipfield took the matter to NASA who in turn contacted Russian space authorities.

This is not the first time that American observers have heard Russian cosmonauts begging for their lives. Four years ago Alexi Ripatitoff was heard crying as his space capsule plunged into a tomato field in Rhode Island.

ROMANOVICH A LOSER-Valiry is stuck in space thanks to a small premeditated snafu that messed up an armature.

The Massachusetts Gazette

The Massachusetts Gazette is finally making its long-awaited comeback, this time disguised as a newspaper. Operating out of a broom closet next to Dan Melley's office, the original Gazette was Tippo's house organ, although Melley refused to touch it. But the dauntless dimwits of SU 4065 saw fit to resurrect the defunct rag and improve it. As you can see, they failed miserably, leaving Tippo to chortle in glee, "I don't even like lettuce." We ain't mailing it anyway.

President Wood Visits Dormitories

By BOB NESTI
MDC Staff

UMass President Dr. Robert C. Wood visited four different dormitories yesterday viewing and hearing from students and housing officials the problems of living on campus.

Upon completion of the tour, Dr. Wood said he was neither "shocked or distressed" by dorm conditions and hoped, with utilization of the recent Trustees decision, that University officials and students will "be as imaginative and creative as can be expected within limits" in improving student life.

"The development of a residential University is a large and complicated process," the President said, "and it's very hard for planners to adjust to styles and changes." He feels the Trustees decision last week in which the power to oversee the dormitories was delegated from the Board to the Vice Chancellor gives the university "a policy which allows for innovative patterns of living within structures."

The tour began in Coolidge Middle where Head of Residence Kathy Atkinson attempted to show the President "a most typical" day in the girl's dormitory. Dr. Wood met and spoke with students as he was shown their rooms.

He was shown the problems with floor lounges which were shown to be rendered useless by the students. Miss Atkinson explained solutions, such as turning each lounge into a kitchen facility, to the president.

From Southwest Dr. Wood was taken to Butterfield, the co-ed dorm in the Central Area. Amidst students preparing for softball practice and dinner, the group was shown "a typical male student's room" and the dorm kitchen facilities.

The President had a feeling that people at Butterfield do "a lot more things together" and that it was "easier on the human scale" to live in.

The group moved on to Baker Howe, one of the more problem-plagued dorms on campus. Dr. Wood was shown an empty lounge where security problems have led to all the furniture being stolen. The President said he was "impressed with student work", such as corridor wall murals, but saw a genuine lack of "community" within the dorm.

"The issue now involving University living is not what went on in the past, but to make viable units now," the President explained. The flexibility students have shown in initiating food services and use of color in corridors and rooms made him "hopeful" for the future.

The final living area Dr. Wood was shown was Cashin in the new Northeast complex. He was shown both male and female suites and listened in a general talk session to problems students had with the new living venture.

Students told of a "sense of isolation" the new suite living has created. A female student said the design of the dorm inhibits people from meeting and she was most "dissapointed" with Cashin.

Others agreed, relating the problem to the lack of co-ed living which, the President was told, meant "opposite suites."

Dr. Wood said he hoped the problems could be worked out with the Vice-Chancellor's office and said the Trustees decision was a "step-forward" in this area.

Accompanying President Wood throughout the tour was Vice-Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and Elizabeth Pugh, an administrative intern in the President's office. Upon completion of the tour the President met with Chancellor Tippo.

School Of Ed. Offers Mod. Credit Program

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

The School of Education is offering a Modular Offering Program to modify the present credit system, now and throughout the year. The purpose of the program is to reward learning that does not fit the standard 3 credit course mold, according to a School of Ed bulletin.

Any undergraduate at the University of Massachusetts, whether or not he is majoring in Education, may receive credit. Any other students are welcome to attend events on a noncredit basis.

Each experience is worth a certain number of module credits and a total of 15 module credits is equal to one University unit of credit. The modules of credit accumulate from semester to semester and once a student has achieved a number of credits (15, 30, 45,) he is automatically registered with the University for that number of credits.

Besides the Modular Experiences offered in today's COLLEGIAN, there are special events offered by the School of Education throughout the year. These are listed on the board inside the schools main entrance.

Students not satisfied with the experiences offered at the School of Education, can design their own modular offering special experiences, the bulletin explained. The only requirement is that an experience be supervised by a School of Education faculty member or a Doctoral student. To take part in this program students are requested to fill out a "Modular Offering Request" in room 123 D of the School of Education.

The following listing of modular offering programs are scheduled to start shortly, and each offering listed below has the location listed where an interested student may sign up.

Many of the offerings have a very limited enrollment so those interested should sign up as soon as possible.

Breathalizer Use Topic Of State Police Course

By TINA SWIFT
MDC Staff

Have you ever had a narrow escape with a drunken driver? Mr. Greenan, of The Continuing Education Office, has had this experience and he doesn't like the odds. That is why he reacted enthusiastically to a request from the State Police Headquarters in Boston when they asked permission to hold classes for policemen on campus.

The purpose of these classes is to upgrade police techniques in local departments.

For one week this course, which is on the mechanics and application of the breathalizer, or alcohol detection device, is being conducted under the direction of Lieutenant Robert Fontaine on the ninth floor of the Campus Center. It will teach the thirty-three officers from different departments how to conduct an accurate breathalizer test, to know the chemistry involved in the test, and to know the surrounding laws.

Speaking with Corporal James Port, it became evident that the course is no gut.

The men first must pass a test in the use of the breathalizer in which they take readings on twelve unknown solutions. Next is a final exam which includes law and the operation of the machine. Finally, there is a chemistry exam.

There is one lighter aspect to the course, however; the men are expected to partake in a controlled drinking experiment.

It is also emphasized in the course that it is every citizen's right to take a breathalizer test once arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol.

Often a person who appears to be drunk is let go when the breathalizer indicates that the suspect's blood contains less than .05% of alcohol, Port said. If, however, the alcohol percentage is above .05%, then this can be used as corroborating evidence in his hearing in court, he added.

When a reading of .15% is shown, the person is presumed under the influence of alcohol, it was explained.

According to Dr. Kattus, the state patholigist, sixty per cent of fatalities in single car accidents are directly related to misuse of alcohol.

Hopefully, better trained police officers will cut down on these fatalities through more convictions of drunken drivers, and innocent drivers will not be jeopardized by the administration of a faulty breathalizer test.

Visiting Officers Told To Come Without Guns

State police on campus yesterday caused some concern by wearing their guns into the Campus Center. The police reserve a conference room in the Center to teach a class to other law officers on the use of the breathalizer.

Dean Fitzpatrick referred the matter to Kevin Grinan who asked the officers to take off their guns. They refused, saying that the guns were "part of the uniform". There is a rule which states that State Police must be in full uniform whenever on duty.

Chancellor Oswald Tippo then contacted Dr. Wood in Boston. An authority in Boston subsequently ordered the state Police to come to the University "out of uniform".

The classes at the Campus Center for the law officers will be continued until Friday.

Baha'i Club Sponsors Week-Long Festival

The Bahai Club will sponsor a week-long series of discussions, speakers and music and film festivals culminating in "Campus Unity Day" on Saturday April 10. George Childs spokesman for the group stated that the program to run from April 3rd to April 10 is intended to introduce and promote the Bahai faith in the community.

The basic belief of the Bahai faith is that they have received a message from God for today. This message which came from the prophet Baha'u'llah is one which espouses a unity of mankind religions under one God.

The prime religious activities center around an independent investigation of the truth. For this reason there are no spiritual leaders or teachers; each individual must find his own spirit and through it find the truth.

Childs stated that the primary job of each individual member of the faith is to rid himself of all prejudices in order that he might find truth. He went on to add that primary goals which the Bahais espouse include quality of men and women (which was espoused by the prophet himself) the promotion of compulsory universal basic education which they feel is necessary in the pursuance of truth, the adoption of a universal auxiliary language which will help to break down barriers and the establishment of a world government to promote the cause of peace which would be formed as a federation of nations.

Childs also stated that the Bahai'i faith has spread world wide and that there exist areas in India, South America and towns in Southern United States which have become totally Bahai. It is also growing rapidly throughout Vietnam.

The group's schedule includes a Music and Film Festival on Saturday in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union from 2-11 p.m. This will be followed on Monday April 5 through Friday April 9 with Common Discussions on topics of interest to members of the community. These discussions will include speakers as well as informal discussions.

Campus Unity Day Saturday April 10 will be a multi-media day to be held in the Commonwealth Room from 2-7 and will feature such speakers as Florence Conway Don Streets and George Childs. Throughout all the programs members of the group will be attempting to explain the Bahi faith as well as to help those who are interested in learning how to begin to search for the truth.

Three Found Guilty On Drug Charges

NORTHAMPTON-Three men, one of them a student at UMass appeared in Northampton District Court Tuesday on drug charges stemming from a series of narcotics raids undertaken by state, Northampton, Sunderland, and UMass police on Feb. 4.

Roy A. Pinn, 19 of East Boston was found guilty of possession of marijuana, possession of harmful drugs, and trespassing on university property. He received a suspended 14-month sentence and two years probation by Special Justice Luke F. Ryan.

Robert Z. Nemeth, 19, Auburn, was found probably guilty along with William S. Comstock, 20, a non-student of Summit, N.J., in a show cause hearing and were bound over to the June sitting of the Hampshire County Grand Jury.

Nemeth is charged with possession of marijuana, possession with intent to sell, being present where there is marijuana, possession with intent to sell a harmful drug, and larceny of over $100.

Comstock is charged with possession of marijuana, being present where there is marijuana, possession with intent to sell LSD, and being present where there is a harmful drug. They were released on continued bail of $1,000 and $1,200, respectively.

The three were among 10 persons arrested by UMass police in three dormitories on the UMass campus. Two were arrested by Northampton police in Northampton and 10 at Mt. Toby Apartments in Sunderland.

Senate Supports Treaty, Other Anti-War Events

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

Support of the anti-war movement came back into the limelight last evening as it was considered by the Student Senate last evening at its regular meeting. The Senate voted its support of a "Peoples' Peace Treaty" and of a series of anti-war events being planned nationally. The Senate also authorized a campus-wide referendum to allow the student body as a whole to express its expected support.

In other business, the Senate appropriated $3,600 to a financial aid program for five students from the Puerto Rican community in Holyoke who are enrolled in the University this semester. The budgets of several student organizations for next year were also given preliminary consideration at the meeting.

The Senate also passed a special motion made by its Public Relations Committee to try to do something about what the Committee called "anti-Senate feeling on campus."

The peace treaty endorsed by the Senate is the "Joint Treaty of Peace between the people of the United States, South Vietnam and North Vietnam" currently being circulated on this campus and nationally. The treaty calls for, among other things, American agreement to immediate and total withdrawal from Vietnam of U.S. military forces by a date to be publicly set; it also demands the end of the current regime of Thieu, Ky and Khiem in South Vietnam.

The Senate followed this statement against the war by endorsing the spring, 1971 calendar of non-violent anti-war events including demonstrations planned in Washington for April 24 and the first week in May. Sponsors of this measure stressed that all of the events planned are seriously intended to be totally non-violent, although not all will be legal.

Among the events on the calendar are an April 24 march on Washington, and a week of activities in May which include the presentation of the peoples' peace treaty to President Nixon and then massive civil disobedience if, and when, the President refuses to endorse the treaty. The action may include an encirclement of Congress to hold it in seige until it will sign the treaty or until the demonstrators are arrested.

To provide a means for the student body to express its stand on the peace treaty and the anti-war calendar, the Senate instructed its Student Government Affairs Committee to set up and conduct a referendum on the Senate measures passing them. Details are to be worked out.

A special program to bring Puerto Rican students to this campus received Senate support in the form of an appropriation of up to $3,600. The money will go toward the tuition, fees, room, board and books of five Puerto Ricans specially enrolled at the University this semester.

Professor Larry Johnson from the School of Business Administration explained the program to the Senate as an attempt to bring Puerto Ricans to the University. He said that because of a language barrier, low test scores, and economic pressures which force most Puerto Ricans to drop out of high school, there are only about two of them regularly enrolled.

Professor Larry Johnson

The five students in Dr. Johnson's program are enrolled in three courses and are receiving tutorial help. They have received some financial aid and taken out loans but need more assistance, as most of their families are financially dependent on them. Johnson says the basic interest of the program is to get the young people through college so they can eventually contribute to the Puerto Rican community and society at large.

The Senate-passed measure dealing with anti-Senate feeling on campus was an attempt by the Public Relations Committee to start improving relations by encouraging the Senate to "first have confidence and pride in itself." The motion charging each Senator to be proud of his position and to respect the body was greeted by much laughter and derision but was approved.

At the time of this writing, the Senate was considering next year's budget requests of the RSO Office, Afro-Am, and several other groups.

Students To Discuss Tiao-Yu-Tai Issue

By JENNIFER CHEN
MDC Staff

In response to an attempted takeover of the Chinese Tiao-Yu-Tai islands by the Japanese government, concerned Asians in cities and college campuses across the U.S. have united to defend the rights of a people against what they feel are unjust and encroaching policies of a self-serving group of businessmen and political leaders. In what they feel is a complete disregard of territorial rights and general welfare of the people for the sake of political and economic gains, concerned UMass students will meet Friday, April 2 in the Campus Center, Room 168-170 at 8:30 P.M. to discuss their involvement in the April 10th Washington march.

The demonstration is an attempt to bring the Tiao-Yu-Tai issue to the attention of the American public as well as to the American, Japanese and Chinese governments. More than fifty people from the five college area are expected to participate.

Tiao-Yu-Tai is a group of islands situated to the northeast of Taiwan and for centuries has served as an outpost for Chinese fishermen. It has long been an integral part of Chinese territory, but with recent discoveries of rich oil deposits, the Sato administration has claimed Tiao-Yu-Tai as part of the Okinawas.

The Japanese government expects Tiao-Yu-Tai along with Okinawa to be "returned" to Japan in 1972 as part of the withdrawal of American troops from that territory.

The Japanese government has ordered the Ryuku (Okinawan) police to expel the Chinese fishermen with bayonets and plans of U.S.-Japanese exploitation of these islands are now in progress.

Much evidence has been cited by TYT groups around the country supporting the claim that Tiao-Yu-Tai belongs to the Chinese. Geographically, TYT islands are a natural extention of Taiwan.

Historically, the the Chinese recorded TYT as early as the Ming Dynasty (1465). Legally, the Japan Supreme Court decreed TYT to be a part of Taiwan in 1944.

A previous nationwide demonstration held in cities across the country on January 30 drew a crowd of over 1500 people in defense of the Chinese Tiao-Yu-Tai in New York alone.

Pay Forfeited; Dismissal From Service

Lt. Calley Given Life At Hard Labor

FT. BENNING, Ga. (AP)—Lt. William L. Calley Jr. was sentenced to life imprisonment by a military jury Wednesday for the murder of at least 22 Vietnamese men, women and children during the My Lai massacre of three years ago. His lawyer called the penalty "the lesser of two evils."

Calley also was ordered dismissed from the service, where he had earned awards for gallantry in Vietnam and a Purple Heart for combat wounds. His monthly pay of $773.10 was ordered forfeited.

The sentence carries the possibility of parole after 10 years.

An appeal of the sentence is automatic and is expected to take a year or more.

U.S. Sen. B. Everett Jordan, D—N.C., said "I'm willing to do everything I can to expedite Calley's appeal."

George Latimer, chief defense lawyer, said, "I'm confident the sentence will be abated."

President Nixon, as Calley's commander-in-chief, could step in at any time to abate or erase the sentence, although there was no indication of any planned presidential action.

After the sentencing, Calley was taken under guard to the Ft. Benning stockade where he has been held since his conviction Monday of premeditated murder at My Lai.

Calley could have been condemned to death. His conviction had stirred a nationwide furor and letters of encouragement by the armload had arrived during the day addressed to the defendant.

"You'll find no case in military justice that has torn America apart like this case has torn America apart," Latimer told the six-man military jury before it retired Tuesday afternoon to begin deliberating the penalty to be assessed against Calley.

Calley left the courthouse for the stockade flanked by military policemen. He saluted a silent crowd of about 150 spectators across the street. One woman in a red slacks suit shouted, "They crucified him."

A spokesman for Ft. Benning said there were no plans at present to move Calley elsewhere. But Latimer predicted Calley would end up in the disciplinary barracks at Ft. Leavenworth, Kan., "in a hurry."

The panel spent about six hours in debate over a span of about 24 hours to assess a life sentence. They needed a majority vote of five to one. A death penalty would have required unanimous agreement.

Calley, 27, was the first American to be convicted in the long-delayed aftermath of My Lai, where American infantrymen turned upon unresisting Vietnamese civilians after failing to flush the assigned enemy, the crack 48th Viet Cong battalion.

During the March 16, 1968 operation, the 1st Platoon of Charley Company spearheaded the infantry search and destroy mission against My Lai, under Calley's leadership.

The defendant's attractive redhaired girlfriend, Ann, in slacks and sweater, was in the packed courtroom to hear the decision. She had no comment afterward. Earlier she had talked privately with Calley in advance of the sentence and reported, "He's hopeful."

The jury sent word to trial judge Col. Reid Kennedy that it had agreed upon a sentence shortly after its return from lunch at 1:20 P.M.

Kennedy scheduled a courtroom announcement of the verdict for 2:30 p.m.

The jury filed in behind its senior officer and foreman, Col. Clifford Ford, 53, the only man among the six who has not seen service in Vietnam.

Before he took the notification of sentence, Kennedy thanked the jurors, saying "I know how combat Army officers like you must have agonized over your decision in this case."

Kennedy then directed Calley to rise and the defendant walked between his attorney to a position in front of the jury box. There he managed a wobbly salute, his mouth slack.

As he had done 48 hours earlier with the guilty verdict, it was Ford's lot to read the sentence to Calley.

"First Lieutenant William L. Callay," Ford said. "it is my duty as president of this court to inform you that the court, in closed session and upon secret written ballot, three-fourths of the members present at the time the vote was taken concurring, sentences you:

"To be confined at hard labor for the length of your natural life. "To be dismissed from the service.

"To forfeit all pay and allowances."

Again Calley's salute seemed less than snappy and his body appeared to sag somewhat as he did an about-face and headed for the courtroom exit, where military police were waiting for him.

The forfeiture of pay as decreed by the jury will cost Calley $773.10 a month, which was his salary as a first lieutenant.

He will become eligible after 10 years for parole on the life sentence.

Meanwhile, with the life sentence, the appellate process is automatic, as high as the Court of Military Appeals in Washington. At any stage the sentence may be lessened or erased.

The jury returned Monday in the 13th day of its deliberations to pronounce Calley guilty of the premeditated murder of 22 Vietnamese villagers at My Lai.

It was a reduction by the jury of the total of 102 murders charged against Calley in the government's indictment. But the effect was the same-the verdict left the boyish looking lieutenant facing either death or life imprisonment. Less than 24 hours after the verdict, Lt. Calley rose and stood before the same jury, as it was about to leave the courtroom, this time to deliberate the sentence. In the crowded courtroom, Calley presented a lonely figure.

"I am not going to stand here and plead for my life and freedom," Calley said, his heavy breathing betraying his tension. He went on: "I have never known a soldier, nor did I ever myself, ever wantonly kill a human being in my entire life."

Calley's voice had broken now.

"If I have committed a crime," he said, "the only crime that I have committed is in judgment of my values. Apparently I valued my troops lives' more than I did that of the enemy."

Then, with tears visible, Calley concluded:

"Yesterday, you stripped me of all my honor. Please, by your actions that you take here today, don't strip future soldiers of their honor, I beg of you."

A complacent Lt. Calley stares out the window of the defense office before addressing the military jury, which sentenced him to life imprisonment yesterday.

Enemy Still On Move; District Capital Hit

SAIGON (AP)—North Vietnamese troops attacked the district capital of Duc Duc in the north, burned most of the town and inflicted heavy casualties before withdrawing Wednesday. It was the second enemy blow this week in the area south of Da Nang.

Farther to the northwest, there was no word from an elite 200-300 Black Panther Strike Force that was flown by U.S. helicopters into southern Laos for an attack on an enemy base.

The attack on Du Duc, 25 miles southwest of the Da Nang base began with a mortar barrage Sunday followed by a ground probe. That was the day enemy sappers attacked Fire Base Mary Ann, 40 miles south of Da Nang, inflicting severe U.S. casualties. It was not known whether the two blows were related.

Field reports said 200 Vietnamese civilians were killed or wounded at Du Duc, 18 regional militiamen were killed and 36 wounded and 1,000 houses were burned. One U.S. soldier was wounded slightly.

An American who flew over Du Duc said it looked "like a big ash tray."

A captured North Vietnamese soldier said the assault followed a three-day forced march from the Ho Chi Minh trail in Laos. Two North Vietnamese battalions launched the assault.

Despite their losses, the South Vietnamese never lost control of the district headquarters, although reinforcements were unable to break into the town until early Wednesday. U.S. helicopters immediately began evacuating the wounded.

It was not known why the North Vietnamese attacked Du Duc, about 40 miles east of the Laotian border in a river valley at the base of jungled mountains.

President Nguyen Van Thieu announced the raid into Laos against an enemy base west of the A Shau Valley and about five miles inside the country. This is south of the South Vietnamese invasion area of February and March.

Thieu made the announcement while visiting troops on the northern front. The raid is expected to last two or three days.

House Adopts Compromise To End-The-War

WASHINGTON (AP)—Divided House Democrats adopted a compromise end-the-war resolution Wednesday that aims at withdrawal of U.S. troops from Indochina by the end of 1972.

The 132 to 68 vote for the resolution at a party caucus marked a dramatic shift in sentiment in the House, which has steadfastly supported administration policy in Vietnam in the past.

The vote was sufficiently [illegible] the adoption of compromise language, however, that everyone [illegible] the extreme hawks came out [illegible] closed-door caucus claiming victory.

Draft Reform Rejected

WASHINGTON (AP) — An effort by Indochina war foes to dismantle the entire U.S. draft system to cut off manpower for the conflict was overwhelmingly rejected by the House Wednesday 73 to 11.

Cycling: The Springtime Way To Get Around

"Spinning wheels spinning true....." As it in keeping with the words of the popular song by Blood Sweat and Tears, many UMies have adopted the use of bicycles to wend their way down the "highways and byways" of the campus.

"If you find a directing sign on the straight and narrow highway" has added significance to them as they deftly attempt to guide their spinning silver wheels past, around and over the traffic, pedestrians, detours and construction which pose obstructions and difficulties. A straight highway to them is any small stretch of sidewalk which is relatively clear of people, dogs, trucks, posts or mud.

"The colors that are real" are the variety and range of hues which deck the spinning wheels. The bright and multi-colored frames often are reduced to a single streak of silver and and occasional speck of red or green as the cyclist comes speeding by.

As they wind their way it seems as if they are bent upon missions of importance and not to be deterred from their goal. They seem also to be bent on long distance journeys even if it is only to the other side of campus as they whiz by with their bags and knapsacks strapped to their backs or duffel bags hanging over the handlebars. Their only indication of their notice of pedestrians is only a occasional "Hello" as they speed by or more often a bell or a request for more space.

Rows of cycles outside dorms and padlocked to posts, banisters or even trees mark the landscape and attest to the widespread use of cycles on campus. It is also not an uncommon occurence to see them just inside residence hall doors or, in some cases, in hallways, as cyclists preserve their trusty wind, cold, wet, and even theft.

In the coming weeks informational leaflets will be distributed in dining commons and dormitories. Discussions on women and the War are scheduled for the Southwest, the Quad, Smith and Mt. Holyoke Colleges.

According to one SMCer "The War will not go away by itself. It will only end when we--all of us together, students, women, Blacks, working people, G.I.'s, veterans, high school students-when all of us in the antiwar movement will it to end. The demonstration in Washington will be an expression of the national will to end the War, and to end it now."

Students Repair Dorms During Vacation Week

By ROBERT SCHEIER
MDC Staff

Work Week, a student-run project to make repairs on all 12 Central Area dorms during the vacation, has been termed a success by its organizers.

"Everything went so well, I wish we could have had two weeks instead of one," said Pamela Pepper, who administered the project with the help of students Marcus Buckley and William Gibson.

Sixty-five students, including forty painters and ten carpenters, worked repainting dorms, refurnishing furniture, and making small repairs such as replacing door locks, pencil sharpeners, and window locks as well as refinishing furniture.

The wages for the students, who were paid $1.75 an hour, were supplied by the University, as were the materials for the project.

Most of the work done was small projects that had either not been reported to the Physical Plant Department or had just not been done. Ping-pong tables and 25 year old dressers in Chadborne were renovated, among other parts of the dorms.

Along with the interest and dedication of most of the students involved, Miss Pepper thanked the Physical Plant for its cooperation, and said that William Marren and Richard Lannon of the department were on hand all week to help the project.

"The students raved about the job they did," she said, adding that they gave the students pointers and short-cuts. Stephen Brusko, also of the Physical Plant, arranged the distribution of materials to the students.

"All in all, using the students to do some of these small maintenance jobs is a very good idea, which should be used in the future. We got several times as much work done at maybe half the cost of Physical Plant crews," Miss Pepper said.

Despite the cooperation of both the Administration in supplying the funds and equipment, and the Physical Plant, a few problems did come up.

Much of the electrical and carpentry work that was scheduled was not done, because Local 1776 of the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal employees protested against students making structural changes in the buildings.

The Union said that if the work was not done to professional standards, people who came into the dorms would attribute it to them rather than the students who actually did it.

Supplies left over from the project are being kept in a central store in Chadborne, in the Central area for the use of students who want to make further repairs.

Any student who wants to paint his room can check out a ladder and paintbrushes to paint his room, or equipment to make repairs in the dorm that would ordinarily be left to the Physical Plant, the organizers said.

The organizers of the project report that the $17,700 allocated to the project, was used during the week. Originally the money was allocated partly as a repayment for Mills House, the Black Cultural Center.

The Physical Plant has also promised to complete any work scheduled for the project which was not completed.

Mobe Supports One-Day Strike, May 5

At last night's Student Mobe steering committee meetmg 30 people met to discuss the proposal coming out of the National SMC steering conference held in Philadelphia March 19-21 concerning commemoration of the killings at Kent and Jackson State.

The idea of a one day student strike on May 5th was initiated at the national conference. Last night's meeting at UMass culminated in calling a mass meeting of all concerned groups on campus and in the five-college area to decide on the advisability of the national proposal for a student strike. The proposal was endorsed by the National Student Association and the American Association of Student Governments in addition to the National SMC.

The UMass meeting then addressed itself to the ongoing organizational work toward the April 24th antiwar demonstration in Washington. The Campus Organizing committee, which has maintained an information table in the Student Union and chartered busses for the demonstration in Washington, will now be able to expand its activities to additional tables in the campus center and occasionally at Bartlett Hall.

Tutorial Assistance Available For Vets

1. Discuss the matter with your teacher in the course or courses where there is a present danger of failure.

3. Arrange for tutoring services by tutors certified as qualified by the school.

2. If tutoring to prevent failure is necessary, consult school authorities or your counselor as to qualifications, availability and scheduling of tutorial services.

4. You may obtain an application (VA Form 21E-1990T) from the school, nearest VA office (see attached list), or, in the case of servicemen, from the base officer.

5. To receive payment, complete the VA Form 21E-1990T making certain to obtain a certification from the school showing the number of sessions received and send it to the VA Office having your educational claim records.

TUTORIAL ASSISTANCE

This program provides special help to overcome a marked deficiency in a subject required for the satisfactory pursuit of an educational objective. Its purpose is to prevent failure — it is therefore not available to those who only wish to improve their academic standing.

AMOUNT PAYABLE

1. You may receive up to $50 monthly for a maximum of 9 months. An organized regular tutorial program is advisable because any utilization of this benefit during a calendar month constitutes a full month's usage.

2. Application for reimbursement should be made promptly after completion of the month or term in which tutoring was received. Benefits may be paid, however, if application is received within one year of completion of such term.

WHO IS ELIGIBLE

1. You must be a veteran or serviceman enrolled under the G.I. Bill in post-secondary (above high school) training at an approved educational institutional on a half-time or more basis.

2. Your school must certify that you need tutorial help to avoid failing a course which is an essential part of your program.

Reign Of Terror

BROCKTON-This city is wondering what is wrong with its school system.

A prominent Local Judge has termed the atmosphere at the high school as a "reign of terror." The local conservative paper played up a fight at the high school between two black students and a teacher on the front page, sending waves of misunderstanding through the solidly middle class population.

The situation is considered bad that a group of Administrative interns and Asst. Superintendent-level people in the school system have been meeting on how to change the "public image" of Brockton Schools, while the constant flow of rumors and denials filter through the press leaving little opportunity to create a credible position for the value of education in a city which sends more students into the army than to college after high school.

Unfortunately, Brockton's problems are not exceptional in the context of public elementary and secondary education throughout the country. Brockton has less problems than Boston, for example, but still cannot manage to give the children of Brockton a good education. In the past Brockton school officials have gone as far as doctoring grades so as to maintain a reasonable number of A's and B's. A new $17 million high school was built, as one high school teacher put it, "to serve the community where 90% of the kids go to college." Brockton sends just over 30% of its students to college.

This crisis in Brockton means that students, particularly those not heading for college, can expect to be processed for t2 years in what becomes a non-education. The cycle is ancient in Brockton, where more emphasis has always been placed on a winning football team than a quality education.

What emerges from the confusion and misdirection of high schools around the country is a scenario which goes a long way in explaining what the Carnegie Commission's report on higher education in America has pointed to as a crisis in education.

Former Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, Seymour Shapiro once told this reporter that the only reason for keeping basic level requirements at Universities was the "inadequacy" of a student's high school preparation. Thus the University is constantly fed students who need education which should be administered at a high school level.

In turn, the University system in the State of Massachusetts has not acted to improve even help the education of students at places like Brockton High School. The University is caught in a system of accepting students from high schools on the basis of S.A.T. exams which test narrowly a student's education, and high schools have looked to college acceptance for a large percentage of students as a desirable goal, the result being that high school education all too often becomes geared to the narrow educational standards required for exams such as the S.A.T.

The ultimate side-effect for students attending high school in cities like Brockton are left with an educational system which neither nourishes their intellectual desires not fulfills their personal needs.

Student Strikes in the Boston school system, and the quieter but equally abhorrent state of high schools throughout the nation, leave we in the universities in a position of both victims of the high school education and at the same time the only potential source of the ideas and manpower to save what becomes the future of education itself.

Universities, with their resources, could truly enrich and re-direct the high school education. The means and willingness has to be found or the real uses of an institute of higher education will be never be realized.

Computers Never Forget

WASHINGTON—The big constitutional battle raging in the country at the moment is how much the government and private enterprise should know and reveal about their citizens.

It is no longer a problem to store information on 200 million people. Thanks to our third and fourth generation computers it is now possible for the government and the credit people to retrieve data on anybody in a few seconds.

But the real problem is what "facts" are going into the computer and who is putting them there.

All investigative agencies -- public and private -- have to get their facts by talking to your neighbors, relatives, school officials, alumni, employers, fellow employees, and anybody else who might shed some light on your secret life.

As a public service we have decided to give you a quiz to see how well you would do if someone, using these sources, were investigating you.

1-NEIGHBORS-The investigator starts ringing doorbells in your neighborhood. What happens when he talks to the lady who's mad at your kid because he keeps riding his bike on her lawn? How about the guy down the street whom you reported to the police because he wouldn't curb his dog? What about the couple in the next apartment who think you are a Commie because you play Bob Dylan records? Or the lady who lives in the back, whom you told off when she tried to get you to vote for Goldwater.

Make a list of all the neighbors and give yourself two points if they would say anything nice about you.

2-RELATIVES-What kind of an impression would the investigator get if he talked to: (A) the brother-in-law you turned down for a loan last month? (B) the sister you haven't spoken to for years because she tried to steal your husband? (C) the cousin you offended when you didn't come to his daughter's wedding? (D) the uncle whom you refuse to visit because he's a bore (E) your mother-in-law?

This part of the quiz is for divorced people. How will you fare when the investigator speaks to your (A) ex-wife? (B) her present husband? (C) your ex-husband who is still paying alimony and child support? (D) his present wife? (E) your ex-wife's lawyer? (F) your ex-husband's mother?

3-SCHOOL-Will you get high marks from the professor you cursed when he reported you for taking his parking place? What about the alumni director who is mad at you because you never sent in your donation to the university? How about the lady in the records office whom you yelled at one day when she couldn't find your transcript? And the guy you beat out for a position on the football team? Give yourself 20 points if there is one person left at the old alma mater who will say something nice about you.

4-EMPLOYMENT-How well do you think you'll do when the investigator talks to your former employers? What about Mr. Miller who told you if you left the firm, you'd never get another job? Or Mr. O'Brien with whom you refused to go to dinner after you took some late dictation? And don't forget your fellow employee, who still believes he should have gotten a promotion before you did. Not to mention Miss Clattery in personnel with whom you had that overnight tryst which you've long forgotten and she bitterly remembers.

If you think you can withstand an investigation after a gumshoe gets finished speaking to all the people I have just mentioned, then you have passed the test and have absolutely nothing to worry about.

But if you believe one of the above people will rat on you, then you've had it for the rest of your days. The one thing an enemy and a computer have in common is that neither one of them ever forgets.

A Message To The President

The new President of the University of Narragansett, Dr. Roland Hotsprings Forest, was recently invested on a ballroom stage of a hotel in this commonwealth's capital because of a lack of suitable facilities on campus. A new campus is being built on a dung hill on the outskirts of that city. Dr. Forest, known to his close associates as "Old Hotpants," was the former director of that region's now defunct Toonerville Trolley Authority. At the conclusion of a modernistic investiture ceremony, the new leader candidly mused upon the future of the university:

We are all aware that the school of the future must no only bend with the times but be prepared to lead mankind toward a better day of progress and fulfillment. Universities must shed their musty, meaningless, hoary traditions to which they have been clinging for the past one thousand years. The old notion of the university as a meeting place for scholars and students is no longer valid. In the past higher education trained people to become part of the leisure class. And although we can envision people soon retiring at age fifty, we do not see any special obligation to prepare them creatively to spend the remaining thirty and forty years of life. The university with everything from soup to nuts, no more of this book learning nonsense.

We must change with the times and discard the bunk of history. Take the language requirement, for example, so vehemently criticized in many quarters. Because America is the world's richest and strongest nation, with vast global commitments, we have no need to study alien tongues. Why any Babbitt who has traveled abroad will tell you that foreigners easily understand our language especially if you shout in their faces. Let those backward peoples learn English.

We must move ahead, slay the sacred cows, and put out to pasture those who do not see things our way. I feel the major crisis today is due to an excess of cant, a lack of communication, and a need, as it were, for meaningful dialogue.

And I am confident that the same fresh vision, skill and knowhow which I brought to the Toonerville Trolley Authority will be applied to finding solutions in such areas of concern as self awareness, self fulfillment , self importance, meaningful exams, old age, the urban crisis, the suburban crisis, the rural crisis, halitosis, relevance, impotence, imperialism, colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism, humanism, eroticism, theumatism, pluralism, socialism, social immaturity, social security, farm securities, the military- industrial complex, the Oedipal complex, the Electra complex, ecology, sociology, pornography, phrenology, phenemenology, insanity, sterility, senility, obesity, the death of god, the god of death, existentialist despair, disappearing hair, alienation, revolution, counter-revolution flat feet and philistinism.

In short, we will do everything, except teach and learn, if we can just put your noses to our grindstones. In the past people thought an academic institution had to either Harvard or a trade school, well under my leadership, with the help of God and my band of merry men, we'll make this university into the grandest high school in the land.

He sat back, peeled a banana, and smiled seraphically.

A Faculty Member

"My troops were getting massacred and mauled by an enemy I couldn't see, I couldn't feel and I couldn't touch; that nobody in the military system ever described as other than communism - they didn't give it a race, they didn't give it a sex, they didn't give it an age. And they never let me believe it was just a philosophy in a man's mind. That was my enemy out there.

And when it came between me and that enemy, I had to value the lives of my troops. And I feel that it is the only crime I have committed."

Letters To The Editor

In Pursuit Of The Common Good

To the Editor:

It is natural that undergraduates, who make up a majority of the University community, should feel unfairly treated in being assigned a minority of seats in the proposed University Senate. But the writer of "Just to Be Fair" overlooked some facts that in my judgment justify giving a majority of seats to the faculty. (He further confused the issue by speaking about "the selfish interests of any one group," i.e., the faculty.)

One fact is the incredible complexity of the University--the intricate interlocking of almost innumerable and often competitive needs and purposes. Each of the three Vice Chancellors-- for Academic Affairs, Student Affairs, and Administrative Services--is at the top of a vast hierarchy of subordinates. Many conditions about which students complain are not due to incompetence and inertia (though some of them are) but to factors about which, quite simply, nothing can be done--at least immediately. And where improvements can be made, not all can be made at once. There is always the question of priorities.

The point is that no student, in his four years on campus (mainly devoted, presumably, to getting himself educated) can possibly understand the operation of the University. Of course, no faculty member can, either, but clearly he is in a better position to arrive at informed judgments about what is best for the University as a whole. This leads to a second justification for ultimate faculty control. Students are on campus for only a few years. One generation of students demands a certain policy; the next generation rejects it; and the generation that has departed no longer cares, one way or the other, being inevitably occupied with matters not related to the University. Faculty members, however--those who are on tenure or hope to be--whose careers depend on what direction is taken by the University, are concerned about the future as well as the present, and will therefore take greater pains in trying to decide what is best for the University as a whole and in the long run.

My final plea, as always, is for cooperation among all members of the University Community in pursuit of the common good, rather than competition for power to advance their own special interests, whether "selfish" or not. It seems to me that the real best interests of all groups coincide.

Refusing To Apologize

To the Editor:

I am a Jew. I am also a Zionist. I refuse to apologize for either my religious beliefs or my love of the people of Israel. Because of this, I am writing to protest the fact that the editors of the Collegian are allowing the editorial page to become a forum for prejudicial mudslinging against Judaism.

I am objecting to the publication of a letter in Wednesday's issue, authored by a cowardly soul who doesn't have the guts to sign his name to his letter and take credit for his imbecilic statements. His desire for anonymity is understandable; the soliciters of such bigoted falsehoods rarely have the audacity to identify themselves.

The author of that piece of trash tries to pass himself off (he's not fooling anybody) as an ex-Zionist who is now "tired of these Jews and Zionists and their lies". He tries to set himself up as a Jew who is confessing his crimes against humanity and apologizing for the rest of the worlds Jews who in his opinion are similarly guilty. This liar is confessing only his own hatred, and is apologizing for nobody. He is neither an ex-Zionist nor a Jew, and his statements are blatant lies designed to incriminate those who refuse to apologize for their Jewish faith or Israeli nationhood. Jews have always been called upon to apologize; today we are saying "NEVER AGAIN!"

I wish the author of that letter would have the courage to come out into the open and identify himself by name or to me directly. My number is 546-6966. I doubt that he or she will, since liars and bigots don't usually have any guts.

Again, I think the Collegian should live up to its slogan of being a Free and Responsible Press and take the responsibility to keep the editorial page free from this type of bigoted SHMUTTS.

Matt Tackell

(Ed. Note-The letter in question was submitted and I, having strong personal biases on the issue, decided that I was not in a position to make an unprejudiced decision on it. Therefore, it was read by several others who felt it was indeed, printable.)

Curb Your Food

To the Editor:

I would like to call attention to the article in yesterday's Collegian written by Gilbert J. Salk under the heading of "You Are What You Eat." Through the use of the editorial page I would like to correct a statement written by Mr. Salk.

Mr. Salk suggests that the perfect answer to curbing "unsafe food" would be for all the farmers to switch over to organic production of food. How easy he makes this sound. But Mr. Salk, the quality and amount of food that we have today couldn't be produced on a large scale by organic farming only. Fertilizers are necessary to make food growing economically feasible and to keep production as high as it is. Just using organic matter wouldn't return enough needed minerals to the soil. For example, if you grew a field of tomatoes and picked off all of the fruit, and returned the plants to the soil through composting, you would be unable to return to the soil all of the needed elements because many of them were taken out by the tomatoes which were harvested. Inorganic chemical fertilizers are a supplement to organic fertilizers and they replace minerals which plants through composting can't return to the soil.

Farmers, since the age of Aristotle, have been adding organic matter to the soil. This is nothing new. Today the common method is to grow a cover of winter wheat or rye and to plow it into the soil. Also annual manures are used. But as I said before, this is not enough. Inorganic fertilizers used in the correct amounts are not as harmful as you lead your readers to believe.

Also, Free University started a home gardening course this semester, taught by Professor Alden Tuttle of the Plant and Soil Science Dept.

It Used To Be Easier To Be A University

The nineteenth century ended on December 31, 1899. This interesting fact was generally recognized by the late 1960's. Now it is almost universally acknowledged. The twentieth century is upon us, indeed, has been upon us for some time and may have passed beyond our comprehension or control.

Changes of time produce changes in society. Profound changes, such as a fardily recognized turn of the century, produce upheaval, dismay. New questions arise before old ones have been answered. Crisis presents itself in every structure and stratum of the social fabric. Even crisis becomes commonplace.

Most commonplace and most fashionable among contemporary crises is that of identity. Persons of refinement and style are expected to undergo identity crises at regular intervals. Institutions and organizations with pretensions to modernity must search their corporate soul, then search again. Nation-states undisturbed by questions of purpose and priority are regarded as backward. This is the era of the agonizing reappraisal and the thorough going reassessment.

Universities are part of the current scene. As such, they share and help shape the current style: they are racked, even rent asunder by questions of identity and purpose.

Universities started as cozy, medieval communities of teachers and students; they developed into bastions first of enlightenment, later of privilege; they became sentimental about themselves, ladylike, precious remote; freshman beanies, sophomoric snobs, and reminiscing alumni appeared on their spacious lawns. It was all very lovely and romantic and civilized.

No one's sensibilities were ruffled when someone decided that the football stadium would be a nice place to develop an atom bomb. No one thought it incongruous that defoliants were being developed inside the halls of ivy. Everyone thought it very efficient the way the computer spewed out the grades for the numbers enrolled in the humanities class. It was a big surprise when someone suggested that the university had lost its soul. More surprising, someone agreed with him, then another, then some more: Identity crisis.

The university, like many another social institution, has surrounded itself with an array of noble thoughts and lofty principles. John Henry Newman defined the university years ago: "It is the place to which a thousand schools make contributions; in which the intellect may range and speculate, sure to find its equal in some antagonistic activity and its judge in the tribunal of truth. It is a place where inquiry is pushed forward, and its discoveries verified and perfected; and rashness is made harmless; and error exposed by the collision of mind with mind and knowledge with knowledge." That has always been the ideal.

John Harmon defined the university a few years ago., "The modern university is...a prime training ground for the preservation of all the major enforced separations that disrupt our life together. It is the place where one acquires or retains the credentials to get or stay ahead; that is, get ahead of somebody else; that is, leave many brothers behind." That is closer to the present reality.

Is knowledge to be used for the improvement of man or for worldly success? The question has always confronted the universities. As early as the thirteenth century, Bologna was busily preparing its students for definite and practical careers, while Paris cultivated knowledge for less mercenary reasons. Specialization has increased a good deal since then, in both the arts and sciences. The question becomes ever more acute.

Fanciers of the so-called "liberal education" tend to disdain trade, business, technical and professional schools. Members of those schools usually have little love for the self-styled aesthetes in liberal arts. Both would do well to reflect on their own sins. We all know the student who comes not for the education, but for the diploma, who will successfully resist the former and get the latter. But we also know, as George Steiner reminds us, that "a man can read Goethe in the evening, that he can play Bach and Schubert and go to his day's work at the Auschwitz gas chamber in the morning." We need technicians and professionals; we need artists and poets. We do not need sub-humans in either category.

The issue for the twentieth century is so clear-cut that to repeat it smacks of cliche: Knowledge must be used to benefit mankind or it will be used to destroy him. The task of the university is to respond, quickly, to that reality. The purpose of the university is to help mankind become humanity: to make man human. Technicians, specialists, professionals, man with expertise in fields unknown ten years ago, one year ago, this year, next year--all are needed. But they must be persons, not fleshly data banks, human beings, not machines with blood. Computers and machines daily increase their capacity to perform sub-human tasks. The men who run them and the causes for which they run must not be sub-human.

The university must help humanity discover itself, help community reassert itself, turn the ennui of the new leisure to creativity. To do these things, the university will have to cease whoring with government and business and begin to relate to them as something other than concubines. The university must refuse any longer to dabble in megadeaths, in psychological manipulation, in the development of useless products, in ever more profitable means of wasting resources and despoiling the environment. The university must develop a conscience.

Many despair of the university's ability to reform. Many do not know it needs to reform. Some know it must and think it can.

The university was very smug not very long ago. Always there were those within it who understood its faults and tried to do something about them. Their numbers were not great until the nineteen-sixties. Then they came in droves. They were students.

Students provoked the identity crisis in which the university finds itself today. Students will be instrumental in resolving it, if it is to be resolved.

There has been considerable unpleasantness between the generations in recent years. Adults think kids don't know anything because they didn't grow up during the Depression and never fought in World War 11. kids think adults don't know anything because they grew up during the Depression and fought in World War tI. The fact is, both generations know a great deal about some very different things. Each would like to share it with the other if given a chance.

The adult world likes to note that the pupil is not greater than his master. Not everyone understands that neithr is the master greater than his pupil. Instructors have a range of important knowledge and experience not shared by their students, but the converse is also true, and has not been emphasized enough. The kids knew all along, for instance, that rock music represented an important movement and development in its field. Now the scholarly world is interested in it.

Education worthy of the name occurs only when student and teacher embark on it together, sharing the experience. A man who has heard the pontifications of numbers of professors may know of some amazing facts and interesting opinions, but he is not an educated man. He is that only if he has participated in the process of his own learning.

Students should play a determinative role in establishing university curricula and policies. That statement is, of course, heresay in the view of many faculty members and administrators. But students are going to play a determinative role whether their mentors like it or not. If the students do not determine the direction of their own education they simply will not learn, or what they learn will be of little meaning.

None of this means that the faculty is sold out, or even sold short. Faculty members know their fields, they are experienced, they understand much that their students do not. They confer degrees, and unless we expect them to ignore conscience even while the university attempts to regain it, their role in the academic process must also be determinative. Indeed, it will be more determinative as force gives way to suasion and monologue becomes dialogue. The best teachers have always known that; it has been in effect among them for centuries.

Universities were once communities of teachers and students. The sense of community, of shared enterprise and mutual concern, was lost somewhere along the ages. It must be regained. Until it is, the university will not find itself nor fulfill its purpose.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Maybe You Should Get A I-Y Deferment

By GILBERT J. SALK
MDC Staff

Probably the most commonly used and recognized deferment is the I—Y medical/psychological deferment. An understanding of what this deferment is and how to properly request it will make things considerably easier for those using this alternative.

The I—Y is given to those deemed unfit for military service except in time of declared war or national emergency. It is used both as a temporary deferment for those with short-term medical problems and as a semi-permanent classification for those with more serious difficulties.

The I—Y covers a wide range of infirmities. It is important to remember that the military regularly places people in situations which make extreme demands on their physical and emotional capabilities. This is the key to the medical deferment. If you have a problem which MAY be aggravated by extreme physical exertion or climatic conditions, or which could, at times, render you unable to perform your duties, then in all likelihood you qualify for a I—Y.

Let's consider some examples: You have braces on your teeth. This isn't really a handicap unless you get too close to a girl who also wears braces. In a combat situation, however, the braces could possibly pull loose. The dangling pieces of metal could obviously become a distraction, and quite possibly a hazard.

You have a large scar as a result of an operation. You can go through your daily routine without any problems. But what happens if you have to face the rigorous daily routine of boot camp? If the scar tissue is weak, there's a possibility it might separate. This would obviously incapacitate you, and may make the army liable to be sued. They don't particularly want to be placed in such a situation.

You are allergic to insect bites. In most cases, you are able to avoid situations where you might be stung. And in any event, proper medication is probably not too far away. But in the jungles of Southeast Asia, for example, there are hordes of hungry insects which seem to be more attracted to than repelled by most insect repellants. An insect bite could incapacitate or even kill you. Thus, if you have ever had a serious reaction to any kind of insect bite or sting, and it required medical attention, you may be eligible for a I—Y.

Other things which may exclude you are severe allergies, any attack of asthma since your 12th birthday, migraines, high blood pressure, trick knees, elbows, shoulders, or other joints, very flat feet, some back problems, etc.

The list is nearly endless. Suffice it to say that many things which are merely annoyances, or less, in civilian life can become a matter of literal life or death in many military situations. If your health is going to be a real hassle for the army, the army doesn't want you. You can protest this all you want, but the draft laws clearly state that they cannot draft you if you have any of the ailments on the Surgeon General's list of deferable conditions (the list is available in the Draft Office in the Student Union). If your draft board makes a mistake and tries to draft you, you have the right to appeal. However, if you prepare carefully, it is unlikely that you will need to use the appeal process.

If you feel that you have medical or emotional problems, either current or old, consult a draft counselor. He or she will be able to give you advice suited to your particular situation. The following will provide a general guide, however. The most important thing for medical, or any other, deferments, is proper documentation. You should have letters from every doctor who has ever treated you for the ailment or condition for which you are seeking the deferment. The letters should state in both medical and lay terms the nature of the problem, how often the doctor has seen you, what treatment has been prescribed, and the prognosis for recovery. If at all possible, the letter should also state the doctor's belief that military training or duty either will or could possibly cause an aggravation or recurrence of the condition, and/or that the condition will or could possible interfere with your performance of duty.

If your doctor is a super-patriot and is reluctant to help prevent you from being forced into a situation where you might have to kill somebody, do not remind him that his Hippocratic Oath requires him to act to save lives. This might annoy him and complicate the matter unnecessarily. Instead, tell him that the draft board requested that you obtain letters pertaining to your physical condition to help them reach a decision in classifying you. This is not an untruth. In the order to report for a physical, you are told to bring such letters with you. You might also remind him that it costs the government a tremendous amount of money on men who will have to be discharged for medical reasons. They also will not want to pay you any disability pensions which you would be entitled to if you were damaged in any way while you were in the service.

Other documentation, such as X-rays, etc., should also be obtained if pertinent. You should keep copies of all documentation, of course.

Finally, you will probably have to report for a physical examination. Bring two copies of your documentation with you (but be sure that you still have the original at home in case both of these sets are misplaced.) When you are asked to turn in any doctor's letters give them one set and keep the other for safekeeping in case the first is accidentally mislaid in the circular file or elsewhere.

PEACE.

Hoffa Denied Parole

WASHINGTON (AP)—The U.S. Parole Board Wednesday denied parole to Teamster President James R. Hoffa, apparently ending his chances for re-election as chief of the world's largest union.

The board continued Hoff's case to June of 1972, long after the union election next July.

Parole Board Chairman George J. Reed said the seven members of the board made the decision after fully reviewing the entire record of Hoff's case.

A statement issued by the board said Hoffa had been notified of the decision.

James Neagles, staff director of the parole board, read the board's statement but refused to answer any questions. The board did not divulge the vote on the parole decision nor did it indicate its reason for making the decision.

Hoffa sought release from a 13-year federal prison term for jury-tampering and mail fraud.

His lawyers said after talking to the board that they were hopeful Hoffa would be released.

"This is a good case, a good case," said Rufus King, a Washington lawyer for Hoffa. The 58-year-old union leader was also represented by Morris Shenker of St. Louis.

Two of Hoffa's children, Mrs. Robert Crancer and James P. Hoffa, also attended the hearing.

Hoffa, who has remained president of the Teamsters while in the federal penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa., was turned down when he first sought parole on Oct. 2, 1969. He entered Lewisburg March 7, 1967 under an eight-year sentence for jury tampering.

"Dada" Is A Wet Nurse

"Der Dada" No. 3 by German artist John Heartfield. The work was the third and final cover for "Der Dada", the periodical of the German Dadaists. Heartfield, a German by birth, changed his named because of disagreement with German policies during the First World War.

"According to the newspapers, the tail of a holy cow is called 'Dada' by the Kru Africans, --and in a certain part of Italy, dice and mothers are called Dada; Dada is the wet-nurse, or anything else juicy that may yet be discovered about the origin of this work."

So writes Hans Richter, one of the founders of Dada, part of whose huge Dada exhibition will be on campus for the Five-College Festival of Dada and Surrealism, April 20th to May 8th (the rest of the exhibit will be on the other four campuses). The program also includes several evenings of films introduced by Dwight MacDonald, workshops, plays by Picasso and by Gertrude Stein, a Jarry puppet play, Happenings and performances by artists Al Hansen and Vito Acconci, and a multi-media simultaneous concrete poem performed under the direction of poet Jackson Mac Low.

Why Dada, an art (and anti-art) movement that flourished 1916-22? Why Surrealism, whose heyday was the period between the two World Wars? The Festival organizers feel that Dada and Surrelism were in important respects precursors of the counter-culture, giving much thought to a revolution in consciousness, to dream and trance states, magic and astrology, the workings of chance, multi-media and typography.

People who would like to work on the Festival are invited to a meeting Friday, April 2 at 3:30 in the Norfolk Room of the Student Union. Those who would like to help but can't make the meeting may leave their names and phone numbers with the secretary at 545-0979.

A Beggar's Banquet

Devastating Satire

By ED JANUSZ
MDC Staff

The UMass Music Theatre is currently presenting Bertolt Brecht's "The Three-Penny Opera" in Bowker Auditorium. The play is regarded as a modern classic not only of the theatre, but of 20th century music because of the score by Kurt Weill.

Brecht created a devastating satire on the whole fabric of the world he perceived. "The Three-Penny Opera" lampoons the Christian idea of charity by portraying it as worked into the social and political conventions of the day, and either ignored or taken advantage of by the greediest pillars of society. It also takes swipes at an entire society that emphasizes personal wealth at the expense of kindness, love, and a voluntary effort to create some sort of equitable world.

Brecht is noted for emphasizing his political and social ideas at the expense of theatrical entertainment; this is true to some extent in "The Three-Penny Opera," but the song success of this play's stage history shows that it is still a hugely enjoyable melodrama.

The current production is enthusiastic and vigorous. The orchestra unfortunately was burried behind a stairwell, dampening some of the instrumental effect, but this was minor problem given the singing talents of the cast. Stephanie Schloss as Jenny had the most exciting vocal performance with "The Black Freighter," to which she delivered a superb intimation of frustration and bitter rage.

The casting was rather uneven overall. Miss Schloss was a standout, as was Carol Roth, who was delightful as Mack the Knife's most innocent lover, and all the minor characters filled up their sometimes sparse roles.

Tim McDonough, who is familiar to UMass theatregoers, had the most trouble. He played Mack himself, the big-time safe-cracker whose bouts with law and women are the story of the opera; but the character was too oily for McDonough's more straightforward approach. His gruff voice was sometimes indistinct, though he sounded great on many of the songs.

The versatile set was essential in portraying the mass misery of a beggar's London. The costumes were equally authentic for the mood of a tawdry and devalued society.

"The Three-Penny Opera" is playing through Saturday. The production is a first-class rendering of both Brecht's social message and a street person's night at the opera. Whatever your taste in entertainment, it's well-worth seeing.

Afternoon TV

Gone To The Dogs

By WILLIAM HAUSTON
MDC Staff

Dario Politella, UMass Associate Professor of English and resident wit, Wednesday invaded the soap opera world of afternoon TV programing to co-host the local "At Home with Kitty" show.

Politella's appearance was in connection with the recent publication of The Illustrated Anatomy of Campus Humor, his collection of humor from college newspapers across the country.

Politella was assisted on the show by his now famous dog, Michael, who received 3% of the vote in a recent Sunderland town election, a sure sign that the town is going to the dogs. "the town is going to the dogs."

The program itself could have aptly been called "The Illustrated Anatomy of Television Humor" for the fare was strictly corn on the cob. Politella was right in his element as he waltzed his way through the show with matronly Kitty Broman, who together chatted away the hour while introducing the usual variety of inane entertainment.

The height of hilarity was reached when Kitty produced a walkie-talkie and began talking to a reporter in a car in downtown Agawam about what was going on that might be interesting.

Other highlights were a conversation with a rather windy woman who had analyzed Kitty's handwriting and related the results in such patronizing and ambigious terms that the newspaper astrologers would have blushed.

The remaining talent consisted of a young potter from Leverett, who seemed to want to get back to work rather than talk, and a woman explaining how to fix your dress if you had fat arms.

Politella slumped in his chair in the wanning moments of the show and again talked of his book while showing illustrations from it.

The cameraman took several closing close-ups of Politella's dog Michael asleep under the chair, which is where I wish I'd been after staying home with Kitty.

Such are the dreams of the everyday housewife if she was fortunate enough to catch Associate Professor of English Dario Politella "At Home With Kitty" yesterday afternoon. Appearing with Politella was his dog Michael, who slept through most of his owner's performance. (MDC photo by the Duke)

Dynamic Pianist Sets Two Concerts Next Week

David Bar-Illan, the dynamic Israeli-born piano virtuoso will appear at UMass in two recitals, Tuesday, April 6 and Wednesday, April 7 in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. These events are the final concerts of the 1970/71 Fine Arts Council Celebrity Series replacing the indisposed Byron Janis.

Mr. Bar-Illan made his debut with the New York Philharmonic in 1960 and since this time, he has appeared as soloist with the orchestras in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit and Los Angeles, not to mention the most prominent European orchestras such as the Berlin Philharmonic, Amsterdam Concertgebouw and Royal Liverpool Philharmonic. The Chicago Tribune has characterized Bar-Illan as "a bravura pianist with enough technique for any two standard keyboard players."

Mr. Bar-Illan will perform two different programs during his two-day visit to the Amherst campus at U'Mass. On April 6th, his program will include works of Antonio Soler, Paul Benllaim, Schubert, Beethoven, and Liszt. His final concert lists works by Jean Philippe Rameau, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Chopin and Liszt.

Reserved tickets to these concerts are now available by contacting the UMass Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall. Telephone 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium one hour prior to each concert.

Prof. Noyes Honored By Forestry Group

PROF. JOHN H. NOYES

Professor John H. Noyes, Department of Forestry and Wildlife Management at UMass, was honored by the New England Section, Society of American Foresters, as the recipient of their award for Distinguished Service to the Forestry Profession.

The award was presented at the section's fifty-first annual winter meeting in Manchester, N.H., earlier this month.

A graduate of the University of Connecticut and Yale University, School of Forestry, Noyes is the sixth recipient of this award.

He is past chairman of the New England Section, Society of American Foresters, and last year served as general chairman of the Section's 50th Anniversary meeting.

He currently serves on the planning committee for the next national meeting of the Society of American Foresters, and is a member of the Society's Committee of International Relations.

Before coming to the University in 1957, Professor Noyes was employed by the U.S. Forest Service in their regional office, Upper Darby, Pennsylvania, as a fire control inspector for seven northeastern states.

He held administrative positions on the White Mountain, Cumberland and George Washington National Forests, and was employed by the U.S. Forest Service in the 1938 New England hurricane timber salvage operations.

While on sabbatical leave in 1966, he studied at the Commonwealth Forestry Institute, Oxford University. A member of several professional societies, he is also a Trustee of the Old Lyme, Conn., Historical Society, and is active in a number of other community activities.

Trinity College Considers Three Year Bachelor Degree

HARTFORD, CONN. (I.P.)—Theodore D. Lockwood, president of Trinity College has asked the college's curriculum committee to consider establishing a three-year bachelor's degree program.

In a letter asking consideration of a three year program option to the committee, Dr. Lockwood said two reasons prompted his suggestion. "First," he wrote, "I sense that at this time of considerable curricular fludity we shall see many experiments to provide far greater flexibility in the pace at which students complete their undergraduate program."

In considering a three year degree program, Lockwood said, "It should be voluntary. It should be different-not simply acceleration." He added, "My assumption is that it would most likely involve qualifying examinations-rather than credit accumulation."

Lockwood said that such a program might tend "to attract the better student." However, he said, "It is not alone the superior student who profits. What the program recognizes is that students differ in the 'earliness' with which they achieve the goals we set."

"Society may prefer that we provide four years suspension from labor during the ages 18-22, but I would hope we would not plan education in those terms. Therefore, I admit that this program should incorporate the possibility of interruption."

Lockwood also said a program might take the form of a student finishing his degree in three years and then optionally, "pursue a master's degree during the following 12 months."

Some might view a three-year program as "a contraction and therefore a diminution," Lockwood said, "I do not; for I feel we have moved away from that kind of measurement in higher education."

Commenting on the new curriculum in his annual report released here recently, Lockwood stated that "Trinity has sought to respond to the necessity of change by redesigning its academic programs. There is little doubt that the new curriculum, now one year old, has quickened student interest in significant intellectual matters."

The freshman seminars were a welcome break with what students had known in high school, and they have served as the base from which a new and better advisory system is being built," he said, "and the creation of new cooperative programs has expanded the educational opportunities available to our students. But there are problems. Many people inside and outside of Trinity, have become uneasy about the lack of rigor in certain new courses, especially those offered under the experiments authorized by the new curriculum."

In California

New Guidelines Approved For Student Newspapers

The University of California Board of Regents has approved new guidelines for the state system's nine student newpapers, tightening administrative control.

While most of the guidelines had been submitted by the editors of the papers themselves, four provisions were added by Regent John E. Canaday, who has been the strongest critic of the campus press among the regents. The added guidelines provide:

—That the chancellor of each campus be directly responsible "for the conduct of student publications."

—That the chancellor or an appointed representative must review each paper within 24 hours of publication.

—That apparent violations of the guidelines must be referred immediately to the campus publications or communications board for review.

—That if the review body does not act on a complaint within three weeks, "the chancellor shall make such rulings as he believes to be appropriate."

The regents approved Mr. Canaday's additions to the guidelines unanimously, with one abstention.

Student editors have criticized the additions as amounting to post-publication censorship, negating the function of communications boards and putting each "chancellor in a direct adversary relationship with the newspaper on a day-to-day basis," according to Ann Haskins, editor of the Daily Bruin, newspaper at the University of California at Los Angeles.

Junior Receives Money For Research

SCHOLARSHIP FOR RESEARCH—Ellen C. MacDonald receives her award for research on mercury pollution.

Ellen C. MacDonald of Worcester, a junior at UMass has been awarded a $500 scholarship by the National Environmental Health Association for research on mercury pollution.

The scholarship will support an independent research project to be carried on next year under the Senior Honors Program. Miss MacDonald plans to use an atomic absorption spectrometer to make quantitative determinations of trace amounts in several species of fish that normally live in the Connecticut River.

The project may identify a species that can be used as an index of mercury pollution. On completion of the project she will write a report for publication in the Journal of Environmental Health.

Funds for the scholarship are provided by Economics Laboratory of New York City, a firm specializing in research and development procedures, equipment and products for sanitizing food processing and hospital environments.

Miss MacDonald is studying environmental health in the UMass Department of Public Health. Her advisor in the mercury project is Karol S. Wisnieski, assistant professor of public health. She is a graduate of Leo T. Doherty Memorial High School in Worcester and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William A. MacDonald of 72 Tory Fort Lane, Worcester.

Joining Silverman on "Cyclebreaker" will be a recording by Eddie Arnold and a Richard Nixon song medley.

Library Notes
Overcrowding Of Facilities

The following is released from the Goodell Library

The worst kept secret on the campus is the fact that Goodell Library's stack space is overcrowded. With the move to the Tower Library still a year and a half away, monumental efforts are being made to utilize more efficiently whatever space we have.

More space for microfilms is now available due to the changes in Reserve procedures and storage; some science materials will be moved to the Physical Sciences Library as soon as it is completed; a non-public area on level 2 has been cleared and monographs classified H—HF (Social Sciences) have been shelved in that area; monographs classified PQ (Romance Language and Literature) have been moved from level 5 to level 6; and, the monographs classified P—PN (language and literature) have been moved into the vacated space on level 5.

Other shifts in the collection will be taking place, and users of Goodell may experience some temporary inconveniences. For these we apologize; we hope that shortly the materials in Goodell will be more easily found and more efficiently stored. If you experience any difficulty, please check with the Circulation Desk.

Workshops Concern Voluntary Services

Initiated and directed by concerned students, a Voluntary Services Workshop has been arranged for Saturday in the Wesley Methodist Church fellowship hall, 9 a.m.-4 p.m.

"The workshop grew out of student discussions concerning the ramifications of voluntary service. What is the validity of "glamour" services such as the Peace Corps? What are the problems involved in separating out only 1 or 2 years of your life for voluntary service, and what are the problems in substituting voluntary service for military service? What changes generally take place in the philosophy and attitude of a volunteer?" said a statement from the group.

"Also of great concern was local volunteer opportunities. What agencies are available, where is help needed, in what way can an individual be effective?" they went on.

"With these problems and issues in mind, an experienced group of resource people is prepared to exchange ideas and share information in Saturday's workshop. Agencies and organizations represented include Peace Corps, VISTA, Teacher Corps, educational missions, The Fish, The Salvation Army and the Red Cross," said the statement.

"The structure of the workshop is very informal; a panel discussion will stimulate questions so that students can then gravitate into small discussion groups about the agencies and/or opportunities in which they are interested. The day will be interspersed with coffee breaks and lunch for $1.25," they added.

"Registration is limited to 75 high school and college age students, although pre-registration is not necessary. Information flyers are available in most dorms in poster pockets, as well as in the Student Union and the Campus Center. For information or registration, call the Wesley Co-op, 549-6563," they concluded.

MBA Applications Due

Applications are being accepted for UMass only off-campus master of business administration program. Deadline is May 15 for the fall term.

The program, the only accredited MBA program within a 50-mile radius of Pittsfield, is open to qualified Greater Berkshire County residents who have college degrees in any field. Credits necessary to complete degree requirements range from 30 to 60, depending on prior preparation by the student.

Classes, which will be conducted evenings at Pittsfield High School, include courses in the following subjects: Managerial Accounting, Financial Management, Management of Organizations, Statistical Methods, Production and Operations Research, Marketing Management, Business and its Environment: Social and Legal, and Business Policy.

Faculty members travel from the Amherst campus to Pittsfield, and the course of study in the Pittsfield program is of the same quality as in the regular Amherst campus program. The MBA program is fully accredited by the American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business, so that each faculty member has either a Ph. D. of law degree.

Applicants must take the Admission Test for Graduate Study in Business. The next test is June 26 at the UMass-Amherst campus, and deadline for applying for the test is June 4. Students may apply before May 15 for admission to the program, and UMass will get the test results.

To obtain further information on the program or the admission test, contact Prof. M. William Frey, director of masters programs, at the School of Business Administration, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass., 01002.

Prof. Frey will be in Pittsfield three times next month to talk to interested persons. No appointment is necessary to talk with him about the program. April 1 in the community room of the Union Federal Savings and Loan Association. April 22 in the board room of the City Savings Bank, and April 29 at Union Federal. All sessions will be from 7:30 to 9 p.m. Prof. Frey will talk from 7:30 to 8, and students may ask questions from 8 to 9.

FREAK? . . . . OR GREEK?
That's the difference?
Times are changing.
Styles are changing.
But people are still basically the same.
Decent.
If you think of Greek as straight, you're wrong.
If you think of freak as Communist, you're wrong.
There are no "Greeks" or "Freaks".
Just people.

Goodell: New Pamphlets And Set-Up

ENVIRONMENTAL CONSOLIDATION

In view of the widespread interest in the environment, which crosses departmental and college lines, one of the finest collections on renewable natural resources on the campus is being broken up in order to consolidate it in basic disciplines to which it pertains.

The library of the Department of Forestry and Wildlife Management will be dispersed this semester to the Physical Science, Life Science and Social Science collections. The Department's collection, which has been housed in Holdsworth Natural Resources Center, is composed primarily of biological periodicals and texts on Wood Utilization and Technology (Physical Sciences), Forestry, Wildlife Management, Fisheries Management (Life Sciences) and Resource Planning and Economics (Social Sciences).

It is hoped these moves will encourage interdisciplinary interest in environmental problems and subjects.

INFORMATION FORUM

The Reference Department of Goodell Library will present a series of three Information Forums on April 6th, 13th and 20th at 4 p.m. in Room 613 of Goodell.

These forums have been planned to help graduate students in the humanities and social sciences make more efficient use of the Library by introducing them to some basic general reference tools. The first session will cover general sources of information about books and periodicals, the second session will cover basic reference tools in the social sciences and the third session will cover basic reference tools in the humanities.

For more information contact Mary Jo Lynch at 5-0150.

CAREER PLANNING

The Reference Department of Goodell Library has prepared an annotated list of information sources which will be useful to students who are planning their careers and/or seeking employment. Copies of CAREER OPPORTUNITIES AND BUSINESS FIRMS: SELECTED SOURCES OF INFORMATION are available in the lobby of Goodell Library and in the Placement Office in Whitmore.

Car Inspection Starts Today

Registrar Richard E. McLaughlin wishes to remind drivers that all registered vehicles must be inspected between today and May 15, 1971. The types of vehicles which must be inspected include passenger, trucks, trailers, motorcycles, motorscooters and motor-bikes, school buses and vehicles with farm, dealer repair and owner repair plates.

Motor vehicles passing the inspection will have a blue sticker placed on their windshields. Rejected vehicles will be marked with a red and white sticker and they will have through May 15 to have the necessary repairs made and must resubmit the vehicle for inspection before that date. Any motor vehicle or trailer without the blue sticker on May 16 may not be operated on the highways of the Commonwealth, operators in violation of this law face court prosecution and fine.

The motor vehicle adjuster will include in his examination brakes, lights, registration plates, horn, tires, windshield, and wipers, steering system and ball joints, muffler and exhaust system, bumpers, finders and external sheet metal, safety chains on trailers and floor panels for rust damage. He will also test for excessive smoke from the exhaust system and if the condition exists will reject the vehicle until repairs are made to eliminate it.

The Registrar added "an early inspection is advised due to the usual short supply of repair parts and mechanics available to do repairs in time to prevent the vehicle being ruled off the road for lack of the blue inspection sticker."

From Head To Assistant--No Mistake

(Editor's Note: With the appointment of Dick MacPherson to replace the retired Vic Fusia to the head coaching helm, UMass football has undergone a complete change of faces on its coaching staff. In order that university sports enthusiasts get better acquainted with the new men who will assist coach MacPherson in the fall, the Collegian sports pages will carry a special series of sketches written by staff reporter Mark Vogler which will focus in on the background and interest information pertaining to each of the six coaches. Today is the third of this five part series.)

People next to him were astonished and critical of his decision to abandon a head coaching job in favor of an assistant's post. But newly acquired offensive coach George Flood obviously knew what he was in for and came to the right place if it's a better brand of football he was after.

The going had been pretty good for Flood whose seven year tenure as head coach of Union College was the third longest in the school's football history. Afterall, he had assembled two of Union's four winning clubs in the past 20 years — two in the last three. And at a college where a winning grid season is practically a novelty it's impressive that Flood's career record stands just under the .500 mark at 27-29-4.

So why did he depart such a sound situation which existed at Union? Perhaps Coach Flood himself can best explain.

"Many of my colleagues felt that it was silly to give up the position I had. They argued against my leaving a fine small college head coaching job for an assistant opening. I was satisfied with my work at Union. But I was very pleased to get the appointment to work under Coach MacPherson on a fine situation offered at UMass, on a more competitive level of football than the one offered at Union."

Earlier acquaintances with Dick MacPherson more than likely revolve around the new comers appointment to the Massachusetts staff. Flood was a grad assistant at Springfield when MacPherson was playing football for the college in 1955. Since then the two have maintained contact for about 15 years. In fact the now head coach occasionally recruited off Flood through earlier coaching associations at UMass and Cincinnatti University.

Flood was a sports sensation in his younger years at Peekskill High where he captained the three major sports and helped to make his school champions in all three. A top notch quarterback in the schoolboy circuit, he earned All-County honors as a senior.

He spent a year at Manhattan before transferring to Springfield. Although his basic skill on the grid iron was passing he was forced to switch to defensive halfback where he established a school record with three interceptions in a game against AIC.

Turning his talent to baseball in the spring, he was a member of the first Springfield outfit to attend the Omaha Baseball World Series (1951). Flood also played with Allan Barber (he's presently the freshman diamond skipper) when the Springfield nine reached the finals of the NE NCAA regional playoffs in 53.

Upon graduation (53) he served two years in the United States Marine Corps where he received his first coaching experience. In a season of service ball in Japan he piloted a club to a 5-4 finish. He was discharged as a 1st Lieutenant and returned to his alma mater to work on his masters degree.

Truly the elder statesman of the 1971 Redman Coaching cast, Flood has 16 years of football tutoring under his belt — 18 if you want to include service ball and graduate assistance.

His coaching career officially originated with a two year stint at Fox Lane High (NY) where he undertook football, wrestling and baseball. In seven seasons at Rome Free Academy (NY) he molded two unbeaten ball clubs and three conference championships. Such success led the New Yorker to Union College coaching.

Flood will be working with MacPherson in controlling the offensive phase of the contest. Both are in agreement that UMass will have to ship up a pretty good passing threat balanced by a strong running attack in order to achieve success.

Although Flood didn't extend his quarterbacking into college, MacPherson places a great deal of confidence in his assistant's knowledge of the offensive aspect.

"George knows and loves football and people. He enjoys quarterback and offensive theories. A leader and an organizer, that's what offensive football is all about and that's why we asked him to be here."

"The main reason for my being in coaching is to work with young people. I feel I'm both in my profession and have a hobby besides — it's all wrapped up in one. I'm in an area in which many people are interested.

Winning is your main goal in competition that denotes success. And that's what we're striving for. There are naturally many educational values along this road. But winning is the main end we shoot for. We will be successful at UMass only if we win.

As far as the coming season goes, we hope the offense will be interesting to our fans and followers. We want to win as well as to be a sound offensive football team."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

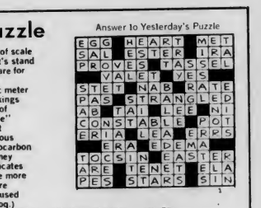
Player Seeks Third Straight

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — The absence of Arnold Palmer and Jack Nicklaus focuses attention even more sharply on Gary Player's quest for a rare third consecutive victory in the $190,000 Greater Greensboro Open Golf Tournament.

The resurgent Big Three, who dominated pro golf in the middle 1960's, have won five of the last seven tournaments - with the tough little Johannesburg rancher leading the way.

Player has won the last two tour events and is seeking to become the first man in nine years to win three in a row on the rugged American circuit. Palmer was the last man to turn the trick, in 1962.

"I'd feel more confident about it if the course were a little tighter, not so wide open," the 34-year-old Player said.



"Winning three in a row in this country is an extremely difficult thing to do, what with the caliber of the competition. In most other countries, you can figure there are only 10, or maybe 20 players who are capable of winning. Here, everyone in the field is a threat.

"But I am playing the best golf of my life. I'm not putting extra well, but my over-all play is the best I've ever done. I'm not capable of playing better."

The figures back him up. Player has won over $65,000 in the last two weeks and $76,216 on his five-week swing in this country. That's an average of $15,225 a week. He's the defending champion here.

Spring Sports Outlook Bright

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

Baseball coach Dick Bergquist and lacrosse coach Dick Garber both expressed confidence after their spring trips and bright outlooks for their teams this spring at the first Varsity M Club luncheon of the season yesterday at the Newman Center.

Bergquist, whose Redmen compiled a 3-3 slate on their southern swing, was very high on his strong pitching staff, his solid catching crew and the enthusiasm that his rookie ballplayers have brought to the team.

With the added extra game per opponent in the Yankee Conference, including weekend series of three games in two days against both Vermont and Maine Bergquist said, "someone will need pitching."

When pitching is needed Bergquist feels he has the men to do it in Jack Bernardo, Tom King, Tom White, John Olsen, and Chip Baye. All performed well on the trip allowing on the average only four hits per game.

Bernardo, who was also on hand expressed the feeling of this proud staff in saying, "if the northern pitching is anything like the southern pitching, there'll be a lot of zeroes on the board for the opposition."

Jack Conroy, senior co-captain and third baseman was very pleased with the performances of his younger mates in the infield on the trip. He cited first baseman Mark Palau, second baseman Jim Saracino and shortstop Eddie McMahon, a freshman for their outstanding play on the southern swing. In concluding Conroy also looked forward to a fine year for the Redmen.

Bergquist wrapped up his program on an inspiring note, "after this trip we feel we can give anyone in New England a good baseball game."

Garber called his team's spring trip, "the most successful trip in many a year" as evidenced by the stickers record of 5-1 against some of the finest competition in the nation.

In a game noted for its body contact Garber said of his team, "we're very small, but we're very fast and have goodstick ability."

"This should be the best team ever on campus," added the coach. "We'll be very exciting to watch."

Lacrosse is not the glamour sport on campus, although the team has always gotten good support due to the fine teams Garber has put on the field. This season should be the best of all.

On the southern trip, Garber's Guerillas, as they are known throughout New England got off to a big start in beating Army for the first time in ten years and only after the team had had four days out on the field. "This had to be a big psychological boost to the players," Garber pointed out.

Lafayette was the next opponent and the biggest team that Garber has ever seen, but his stickmen trounced them 23-3 in a manner Garber described as "running in and out between the legs of the bigger players on the opposition."

READY FOR SEASON—Lou Marinacci (32) lets one fly in action last spring against Tufts. The all-American midfielder, described by his coach "as the best in the country at his position" was very optomistic about the coming season yesterday at the UMass Varsity M Club Luncheon.

Game three was a big one against one of the top five teams in the country Nassau Community College, a hot bed for some of the best players in the nation. But again the Redmen came out on top and from there went on to take two of the next three to complete their 5-1 record.

In looking to the season ahead, Garber was also optomistic in saying, "the prospect for the season is very good. We will be playing the toughest schedule ever by a UMass lacrosse team and whether we can win them all depends on injuries and the ability to play top opposition game after game."

For the first time the NCAA will be holding a national lacrosse tournament to decide the national championship at the end of the regular season. It will be just an eight team tournament and Garber feels that his Redmen will have to beat out both Harvard and Brown both of which the Redmen play, to qualify as the top team in the New England region.

Garber also introduced three of his stars, Al Ruggiano, Lou Marinacce and John Gannon. Ruggiano was called at 5'9" the biggest and toughest defenseman we have and one of the best in the east."

Marinacce was cited by his coach as being possibly the best midfielder in the country and Gannon, also a midfielder is not far behind his partner.

All three felt confident after the spring trip and are looking forward as are the rest of their teammates to the beginning of the spring season.

Next week Bergquist returns to the Newman center for the second luncheon of the spring and he'll be joined by head track coach Ken O'Brien.

Culp Hurls Bosox Past Pirates

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP)—Ray Culp tuned up for his American League opening assignment by firing a masterful two hitter yesterday as the Boston Red Sox put together a four-run inning for a 4-2 exhibition victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Culp a veteran right-hander with a 46-28 record since being acquired from the Chicago Cubs after the 1967 season, struck out four and walked only two in going the nine-inning distance for the first time. He needed just two pitches.

The Pirates, who had won seven of eight previous pre-season starts against American League rivals, took a 1-0 lead on Willie Stargell's third spring homer in the second.

The Red Sox nailed down the decision by combining half of their 10 hits against right-hander Dick Ellis in the third.

Reggie Smith, Carl Yastrzemski, Rico Petrocelli and George Scott each singled across runs after rookie Doug Griffin opened with a double.

A triple by Richie Hebner and an infield grounder accounted for Pittsburgh's other run in the sixth.

Culp, the only Red Sox pitcher to go nine innings, said he took the mound intending to "throw about 100 pitches, even if that came in six innings." He was just over in going the route.

2Th

This is by far the best I've ever pitched in spring training," the soft-spoken Texan said. "I let out everything today, throwing a lot of hard sliders. I think I'm ready for the opener next Tuesday in Boston, but I wish I could take this weather with us."

Culp finished his pre-season training with a total of 27 innings in five starts after a minor shoulder ailment. He allowed just 12 hits and four runs, striking out 17 and walking eight. His earned run average was 1.33.

RICO—Manning the hot-corner for the first time in a Red Sox uniform Rico Petrocelli has performed very well this spring at his new position. Yesterday against the Pirates the former shortstop collected two hits in the Red Sox 4-2 win over the Pirates.

Scott, enjoying his usual outstanding exhibition season, had three singles in four times at bat, hiking his average to a lofty .433.

Boston manager Eddie Kasko took up his lineup with the arrival of catcher Duane Josephson, acquired from the Chicago White Sox Tuesday.

Luis Aparicio was moved into the leadoff spot and Griffin dropped to the no. 8 slot in the batting order. Smith was moved up to the second position, followed by Yastrzemski, Petrocelli, Scott, Josephson and Billy Conigliaro.

"As of now, that will be my regular lineup," Kasko said. "Griffin is a hard-nosed player, but I hope to take off any pressure on him."

Josephson, who said he had been to bat only about 20 times with the White Sox this spring, was 0-for-4 but lined hard to center in his fourth trip to the plate.

The Red Sox hiked their Grapefruit League record to 12-13 in their final appearance at Chain O'Lakes Park. They conclude their Florida exhibition season against the Detroit Tigers at Lakeland Thursday and then break camp Saturday.

Knicks Lead Hawks, 3-1; Can End Series Tonite

NEW YORK (AP)—The New York Knicks, after proving Atlanta has no home court advantage and a definite backcourt disadvantage, return to their own friendly confines at Madison Square Garden tonight with a chance to close out their playoff series against the Hawks.

The Knicks lead the best-of-seven game Eastern Conference semifinal in the National Basketball Association after whipping the Hawks twice in Atlanta for a 3-1 lead.

Much of the credit goes to the Knicks backcourt of Walt Frazier and Dick Barnett, which has completely outshone Atlanta's combo of Pete Maravich and Walt Hazzard.

Frazier, playing in his home town in Atlanta, led the Knicks to both victories, the second a 113-107 triumph Tuesday night when he scored 26 points, had six rebounds and eight assists.

In the four games, he has scored a series-leading 103 points, hitting almost 50 percent of his field shots, grabbed 29 rebounds and had 22 assists. Barnett, with 22 points Tuesday night, has 89 points with better than 50 per cent shooting from the field.

Espo Paces B's Over Habs, 6-3

MONTREAL (AP)—Phil Esposito continued his phenominal goalscoring feats last night, scoring his 70th and 71st goals of the National Hockey League season to help the Boston Bruins to a 6-3 victory over Montreal.

The Bruins also got a two-goal performance from Dallas Smith and singles from Wayne Carleton and Wayne Cashman.

Phil Roberto, with two goals, and John Ferguson with a single, accounted for the Canadiens scoring.

Boston's Ken Hodge assisted on three goals to set a record for points garnered by a right winger in regular season play. He now has 104 points, bettering the mark of 103 set by Gordie Howe of Detroit two seasons ago.

SPRING SOCCER—There will be a meeting of all spring soccer candidates on Monday, April 5th, 4:30 p.m. in Room 0, Boyden Building.

Letters To The Editor

They Shoot Horses, Don't They?

To the Editor:

I'd like to announce my resentment and horror concerning your front page picture of Tuesday, March 30, showing a horse and rider. The caption read, "LADY GODIVA—Well, not quite. At least she has some of her clothes on. But it may strike you as a funny place to be on a horse, the front yard of Bartlett. Maybe not. UMass did have a pretty good reputation once as a cow college."

Being a member of the aforementioned four-legged group of animals, I demand an apology for the lewd and ignorant insinuations made by this picture and its cutline. It is implied that a horse, the most noble of all creatures, is on the same intellectual level as the base and debauched cow. Hasn't the horse taken enough from you human chauvinists?

It wasn't bad enough that we spent a hundred years in the west being ridden to death by drunken animals who threw everything from whiskey bottles to guns at us. No, then Hollywood had to glorify these ruthless ruffians and we spent another fifty years acting out the roles that our ancestors had lived. And where are we now. I'll tell you where. We're on reservations and in corrals in isolated spots around the country like Horse Falls, Idaho or Steed City, Montana.

When was the last time you saw one of us prancing around your city streets. Sure, the pigs still use up but they keep us under tight control. We're dragged out whenever a riot starts so that we can get smashed by clubs and kicked and beaten by your college comrades.

We haven't given up yet though, although we seem to be the forgotten breed in this country. It's the treatment we receive from such sources as the MDC which only serve to prolong the agony we have suffered for so long. We don't even have a Jane Fonda, and Mister Ed doesn't get many speaking engagements anymore.

One of these days we'll return. When we do, the Collegian will be one of the first to get stomped upon. And I do mean stomped upon.

Who's The Pig?

To the Editor:

In Friday, April second's Massachusetts Daily Collegian columnist Dave Williams neglects to mention the fact that I am a graduate student in his editorial on the notices page under the headline of 'Campus Carousel".

Now, when Ding Dog David wrote that Steve Hincle and Harvey the Rabbit and me were making bathtub Gin in Munson Kilm #5, he was lying. And this didn't bother me except for the political implications in his column.

For one thing, there are none.

For another, Williams goes on to say that "Despite the rapid urbanization of the specified area, the level of mobility among local residents depreciated noticeably during the second time period."

In all of this Williams ignores the symbolism. I say to Mr. Williams, the "STUDENT PIG", get motivated, get psyched, lets go Redmen and boycott lettuce, even though the Strike ended 10 days ago.

The Chilean One

To the Editor:

You are a pig. In the event that you are not a pig and yesterday's MDC was the result of a printer's mistake, please disregard this letter. But, it not, then you are still a Pig.

Let me tell you why you are a pig.

The Fasciust Government of Chile has imprisoned our brother Meggello Yelverton, a local political worker, who the pig government said was guilty of raping the pig wife of the pig chief of police.

Even if this is true, we, the brothers of Yelverton, say that all he did was liberate the pig wife's organ. And this is a sacred act.

We demand that the Collegian give us 100 free inches of advertising space to further our cause, since you are the representative student newspaper. If we do not see a 100-inch ad in tomorrow's MDC we will assume that you are still pigs.

Free the Chilean One.. Power to the People.

"Sure, It Was Tough"

"We Were Tougher"

To the Editor:

Just a few words about the recent demise of what was, I hear, at one time a fine metropolitan newspaper, the MDC. In the times of crisis facing us today, the Collegian, in its infinite wisdom, has decided to turn to such things as hog farmers, unspayed female dogs, and Harold Koltin for copy on the editorial page. The editors, who aren't as important as they think they are, believe that these things are funny. Ha, ha, ha.

When I was a boy, we looked at the world straight on instead of trying to turn it into some three ring circus. Sure it was tough, but we were tougher. Ah, you guys are soft. The newspaper game is tough, I should know. But when you have to turn to futile attempts at comedy, and I use the term loosely, you pass over the really important issues of today like the way our brothers are ripped off by the Campus Center, the Chancellor's masticatorial habits, and the unresponsiveness of student leaders. I'm fed up with the trash you guys put in this paper. Since the last Jim Mitchell piece, I have been unable to find anything on my intellectual level worth reading. Come on guys, you can do better. (Dave-Don't print this if I'm not on Cyclebreaker on WMUA tonight, I'm just great-Mark)

Where We Stand

We here at the Collegian feel that its about time to clear the air of what Eric the Rat calls "bullshit...bullshit...and more bullshit". For too long things have gone un-commented upon; issues that are close to each and everyone one of us students. We want to get to the crotch of a lot of things which seem to us to be important:

—For a long time now we have felt that marijuana should be legalized. That may be impossible at present but the least the University store could do is stock a greater variety of rolling papers. Students are tired of walking to Augies just to get there favorite brand and flavor. A little paper action, please!

—We endorse, at his time, the concept of copulation between men and women. We believe that even administrators and faculty members could sympathize with the plight of we students. It is difficult to live up to our reputation as "the immoral inhabitants of Sin city" with our present living conditions. We urge the installation of moveable but soundproof dividers for double rooms.

—Just for the record, we want to congratulate the more progressive members of the University community for trying their darndest to make student life easier by eliminating unnecessary course work. We're depending on you for this years Spring Student Strike.

—We call for the institutionalization of the Student Strike, to be held every year at a time when it becomes too nice to finish the year. We urge the Chancellor to appoint a Committee to study any number of excuses we can use to bullshit the rest of the state into believing that we are acting on conscience.

—We support the new University wide Senate as means of keeping a lot of loud mouths tucked away in the same room with each other.

—The Student Senate deserves a hand for being the only group on campus with the guts to put its foot down about those precissionettes. Another blow against miltarism!

—This has been a record year for the UMass mud builders, and we think that those dedicated souls digging up the campus deserve a pat on the back for making this one of the noisiest and muddiest places in Massachusetts. Good work Jack.

—The rest of the world deserves a kick in the right place, too. Thanks for making this world and nation of ours a place where war, corruption, disease, poverty, and racism can be so nobly inbred and maintained in honor.

...and that's the way we here at New England's "Largest" daily organ feel.

Confession Of A Spy

I was a spy for the FBI. I lived amongst you. I learned your secrets. I breathed when you breathed, ate when you ate, drank when you drank, and got wrecked in my spare time. For one brief instant, I was you only I was getting paid to be you. Sometimes it pays to know J. Edgar Hoover.

True, you almost caught me once. I wonder what is was. Perhaps it was the time I inhaled the wrong end of a joint and got off on it. Maybe it was when I gave Efrem Zimbalist, Jr. a standing ovation. I've got it. It was when I stood up for the playing of the National Anthem on TV. Ah, but it matters little now. I cleverly deceived you for long enough to discover what was going on.

I guess you wonder how I tricked you. That pink begonia I wore on the lapel of my zoot suit was no flower at all. Nay, it was my slyly disguised tape recorder microphone although I was afraid that carrying around a stereo tape recorder with two speakers might give me away. But Zayre's was all out of portables.

I would have got some great candid shots of all your immoral activities, too, if I hadn't forgotten not to use my secret camera as a cigarette lighter. I must have burned about 20 shots.

In the end it was your own mistakes that did you in. You had me fooled for a while, I'll admit. That stuff in the plastic bags did look like tea and I did believe all those pills were for your headache. But it was what you said that gave you away. When I told you I thought that that Moody Blues album you were playing was groovy, you replied "yeh man, heavy, heavy." Flares went off in my head and trumpets blared. J. Edgar always told us that you freaks are always saying that word and whenever we hear it we know that one of you is getting high. I pulled out my flip-out official-FBI-wallet with the silver three-pointed badge number 3216 and busted you on the spot. But you bastards couldn't play fair and admit that I had won.

I'll admit it was a bit embarassing when we got down to the station. When you told the sergeant at the desk to check my pockets, I thought it was some sort of joke. I was as surprised as they were when those turned out to be tabs of mescaline in that tin of Excedrin you gave me. What a dirty trick.

You freaks really have no morals, do you?

I'll be out in a few months. All the time I've spent in this jail though, I have thought only of you. Revenge occupies my every thought. I must repay you for what you have done and I shall [illegible] a plan.

When [illegible] I will live among you. I will learn your secrets. I will breathe when you breathe. I will eat when you eat, I will drink when you drink, only this time we'll get wrecked together.

Redmen Stun UCLA, 84-80, In OT

By HOWARD COATSALE
Special To The Gazette

"The biggest upset in the history of college basketball," said one writer. "The most humbling experience ever for a John Wooden coached team," said another. What more could be said about last night's startling UMass basketball upset over the NCAA champion UCLA Bruins before a packed house of bezerk fans at Slippery Rock Coliseum.

The final score was 84-80 in overtime and it was the heroics of Redman reserve Sam Provo which paved the way for this unbelieveable conquest.

Humbled, embarrassed and destroyed last weekend at the NIT, the Redmen were just not to be denied last night.

What was billed as a matchup between the super forwards, Julius Erving and Sidney Wicks, never materialized as both players coach Jack Leaman made the move that will immortalize him performed to a standoff while the rest of the Bruins built up a 15 point lead at the half.

With listless play in the backcourt hurting the Redman attack, someday in the basketball hall of fame by calling on Provo to get the Redmen going again.

In between picking the splinters out off his rear from heavy bench duty, Provo poured in 32 points in the second half to bring the Redmen back to a 70-all tie as regulation time expired.

With the fans screaming for an upset the slick-haired Provo went to work again and hit for seven more field goals in the overtime to give UMass its final margin of victory.

Exhausted, exuberant and still aching from the splinters, Provo was carried to the locker room by his fans to celebrate his "believe it or not" feat. He could not be reached for comment in all the bedlum of the dressing room.

In the loser's locker room, a stunned coach Wooden was quoted as saying, "San who? From where? Scored how many?"

Sports Tid-Bits

Assistant sports information director Dick Bresciani has been named as the top candidate to the position of Athletic Director of UMass, following the retirement of Dean Warren McGuirk, in the latest weekly ratings put out by the UMass Board of Trustees.

Bresciani, on the strength of an outstanding winter sports wrapup for the Athletic department, made the big jump from fifth spot last week to number one this week.

Following Bresciani in order were Jim Mulcahy, president of the UMass Varsity M Club; Vic Fusia, former UMass head football coach; Wally Novak, ticket manager; and Metawampe to complete the top five candidates.

University of Massachusetts athletic director, Warren McGuirk announced today that UMass would be dropping out of the Yankee Conference and that next year the school would compete in the newly formed Hudson River League.

The Hudson River League will be composed of five other schools besides UMass. These will be Susquehana University, Albany State, Schenectady Community College, Eastern New York State and Texas-El Paso.

Asked why UMass was making the move McGuirk said, "We're seeking a higher level of competion." Most Redmen coaches agreed that the competition in the Hudson River League will be much tougher than that of the Yankee Conference.

Yankee Conference president, Bob Boyd, remarked that the conference would be looking for a new school to replace UMass. He added that many schools are seeking entrance into the conference and that the leading candidates are Weber State and Holy Cross.

Head basketball coach Jack Leaman seemed quite enthused over the switch to the new Hudson League. At yesterday's Varsity M Club luncheon he commented, "Being a part of the new Hudson River League is the best possible thing that could happen to Redman basketball. It'll be great to play against some good stiff competion for a change."

Football coach Dick MacPherson was also happy to be in the new league. "Playing in the Hudson River League will give us a better shot at recruiting athletes from the Hudson River Valley which is one of the hotbeds of high school football."

Mono Men Victorious

By SLEEPY SAM
Community Chest Correspondent

VENTNOR PLACE——Capturing the national championship for the first time in UMass history, the three man Monopoly squad of Jake "Jailbird" Jacobee, Fred "Free Parking" Flanigan, and Paul "Park Place" Palinski defeated the University of Kansas in the longest championship to date.

The 127 hour finale, which broke the long standing record of 126 hours, 59 minutes and 47.654 seconds, was preceded by the Eastern finals which paired the University of Florida, the defending champs against the UMass mono men. Florida is renowned for great monopoly teams due to their constant practice sessions in and out of classes. But long hours of practice in the basement of Goodell library paid off handsomely for the Redmen.

After wiping out Florida's funds in a mere 47 hours and 10 minutes, Jake, Fred and Paul flew to Hawaii for the finals. Kansas had a star of their own in Roger "Railroad" Reynolds and it was Reynolds that nearly defeated UMass singlehandedly.

It was in the 4th hour when Kansas' number one man rolled three consecutive tens and picked up the three remaining railroads to give Kansas the first monopoly of the game.

Things looked dimmer for UMass as 'Jailbird' Jacobee got locked in jail, and Kansas picked up their second monopoly. It was the 69th hour which spelled trouble for the Eastern representatives as "Railroad" Reynolds did another of his famous three puffs on the hand and three shakes before his roll. He let them go and as the first one turned up reading six, everyone held their breath. The crowd quieted to an erry silence and as the second die spun to a two the UMass fans screamed bloody murder. But the second die was halfways on the board and half off. The mono men from UMass protested vigorously but to no avail. Kansas had monopoly number two.

Railroad Reynolds had apparently been shaken from the judges warnings earlier, that he was rolling the dice illegally. But he still came through in the clutch as UMass desparately tried to stay in the game.

Suddenly Jailbird Jacobee got the break of his career, and as he emerged from jail with a double four, he proceeded to roll a one and a three. He had landed on chance and as he sceptically lifted the card he leaped in ecstasy. He had been instructed to "Go to Boardwalk" since Park Place Palonski had already picked up his speciality UMass had its first monopoly.

UMass started to move. Three times Kansas landed on Boardwalk and minutes after Fred landed on Free Parking UMass moved into the lead.

The 97th hour rolled around and as Jailbird swooped into Pennsylvania avenue, UMass had its second monopoly. Mortgaging at every opportunity Kansas couldn't cope with the pressure.

Twenty-six hours later the Redmen fans rejoiced as "Park Place" Polonski held the famous shoe overhead, the token that had brought them the national championship. After five long days of rolling and building and selling and bargaining UMass took the crown back to Amherst.

Nixon Orders Calley Released From Jail

NIXON STEPS IN-President Nixon yesterday asked that Lt. William Calley be allowed to stay out of the stockade pending a possible review and appeal of his case. Calley was sentenced to life imprisonment for murder at My Lai.

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (AP)– President Nixon ordered Lt. William L. Calley Jr. to be released from imprisonment Thursday pending review of his conviction of murder at My Lai.

Acting in the wake of a White House announcement that it was getting thousands of letters and wires running 100-1 for clemency, the President personally telephoned the chief of staff to free Calley from the stockade at Ft. Benning, Ga.

Presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon acted as President rather than as commander-in-chief, and "This is not a legal step, it was taken at the President's discretion."

Ziegler said the chief executive felt personally that Calley should not continue in the stockade, or go to the military prison at Leavenworth, Kan., until reviews and possible appeals of his conviction have been completed.

Calley had been kept at the stockade under heavy guard since his conviction by a six-man military jury Monday of the premeditated murder of at least 22 unarmed Vietnamese men, women and children at My Lai, March 16, 1968.

The 27-year-old Calley, blinking in the glare of television lights, left the stockade at 7:55 p.m. EST, a little more than 24 hours after he was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Calley had led a relatively free pattern of life since being indicted for murder Sept. 5, 1969, on the eve of his scheduled release from service. During the 18 intervening months, Calley was assigned administrative duties at this home of the U.S. infantry with his living quarters across the street from his job in a one-room bachelor's apartment. The chief restriction imposed on him was that he could not leave Ft. Benning without permission.

Calley, under Nixon's action, was to resume life in his quarters at Ft. Benning where he lived during the long court-martial.

The same jury that convicted him of murder sentenced him Wednesday to life imprisonment at hard labor. The action touched off a nationwide groundswell of opposition, in the form of offers of money, demonstrations and letters of protest.

The presidential action also forestalled any plan to transfer Calley to the Army disciplinary barracks at Ft. Leavenworth, Kan., a move that had been considered possible.

Appeals from the life sentence imposed by the trial jury Wednesday afternoon are automatic in the initial stage of the military court process.

Later they may be continued in the higher reaches of the military and federal court systems. If Calley's case went the entire appeal route, it could take years.

The Marines Invade The SU Lobby

THE MARINES LAND-The U.S. Marines spent part of the week gracing the SU Lobby. They were not well received by certain factions of the student body as they were harassed constantly. This marks the second time this semester the Marines have set up their recruiting booths and found themselves trying to justify and explain U.S. involvement in Indo-China. Among those groups who turned out to welcome the Marines was Vets for Peace. (MDC photos by Gib Fullerton)

Senate Studying Concert Committee

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

The Student Senate is now studying a bill which would create a permanent structure for a Concert Commission to replace the Interim Planning Committee established with the abolition of class government. A public hearing is being held this evening at which anyone interested in the legislation can express opinions or concerns.

The permanent Concert Commission which the bill would establish is an Ad Hoc Committee of the Senate, of the following composition: 4 members to be selected by the Southwest Assembly; 3 members to be selected by the Central Area Council; 1 member each selected by the Area Governments of Orchard Hill, Sylvan, the Greeks, and Northeast. 1 member selected from the UMass Black Community to be chosen by Afro-Am; and 11 members to be selected from applications submitted from the student body at large, to be appointed by the President of the Student Senate.

The act also calls for a Chairman to head the group who will be selected from among its membership by the Senate President. If enacted, the act will go into effect on May 10, 1971.

The bill has been committed to the Student Government Affairs Committee for study and recommendation. The Committee can recommend to the Senate to pass it in its original version, amend it, or propose a new plan for running concerts, according to SGA chairman Larry Ladd.

Senator Ladd feels that "It is important that the Senate not decide this act in isolation. It is a question which the whole University Community should join in deciding." For this reason, he has urged everyone interested in the future of major concerts on this campus to attend the SGA hearing tonight at 7:30 in Room 804 of the Campus Center.

Stoneham Disputes Existence Of Expert

Joel Stoneham, Director of Food Services, in a statement to the Collegian disputed the existence of an efficiency expert as referred to in a letter to the editor in Monday's Collegian.

This letter, written by two students at UMass., read in part, "Over the past few weeks the new management, under the guidance of the newly hired 'efficiency expert', has instituted many improvements in the efficiency of operation." The letter went on to state, "It is most interesting to note that the 'efficiency expert' has hardly ever been seen at the Franklin Dining Common. Two supervisors, whose work shift span the entire workday of the commons, have seen this man only once."

When asked to comment on the existence of the "efficiency expert", Stoneham stated that "no such person exists, unless they consider me to be an efficiency expert".

Stoneham considered the fact that these students had applied for and been refused jobs at Franklin Dining Common, a possible reason for their statements. The policy in hiring student help at the dining commons is first-residents on campus who possess meal tickets, then non-meal tickets holders on campus, and finally off-campus students.

Stoneham stated that the two writers of the letter do not own meal tickets, and their response was perhaps triggered by their anger at not receiving jobs.

Military Changed; Morale Low-Miles

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

The military today has changed greatly, morale is at it's lowest level. These were a few of the opening remarks of Joe Miles of the GI Civil Liberties Defense Committee to a group of fourty people who attended last evening's meeting of the Youth Socialist Alliance's Militant Forum.

Miles, founding member of GI's United Against The War at both Fort Jackson, South Carolina and Fort Braggs, North Carolina, addressed the group with a talk entitled "Are Soldiers Citizens?"

In the early part of his talk he spoke of how popular the GI antiwar movement is today and how popular it was when he was a private in the army for 23 months without a promotion. "The John Wayne type of Army" he said, "is today impossible to find." The GI of today is a thinking man resisting what the army is trying to put over on him said the former member of SNCC. He said that the soldiers fighting in Viet Nam are opposed to the war when they see what it has done to the people and the country of Viet Nam. Soldiers fighting in Viet Nam, he stated, avoid contact with the enemy as much as possible. He added that the most popular phrase among GIs is "You owe it to your body to stay alive." Concerning the conviction of William Calley he said that GI's will probably demand that they be able to consult lawyers before going into battle.

Speaking about the Black Movement in the Army he said that the Blacks are being taken off the streets in a country where they lacked freedom and are made to go 5,000 miles to fight for freedom which they never knew.

The former GI also stated that theirs is a great amount fo

The former GI also stated that there is a great amount of Racism in the Army. Blacks receive less promotions, and get longer time in the brig for infraction of the rules than do white GIs. Continuing he told about Klu Klux Klan groups which sprang up to try to suppress gatherings of Third World groups.

Miles then spoke of the Founding of GI's United at Fort Jackson. Applying Malcolm X's teachings to the war Opposition, he started to get together a strong brotherhood of GI's together in opposition against the war. By breaking down discipline which the army tried to instill in them they overcame the Army's attempts to make them feel inferior. They then conducted a totally legal struggle to oppose the war by circulating petitions and holding open meetings at Fort Jackson. The Military trying to suppress their freedoms guaranteed by the constitution brought 8 of the group to trial in a trial which became popular as the trial of the Fort Jackson 8. After getting much support from the media and groups the eight were released from the charges. Miles added that the Army is afraid of publicity and try to shun it as much as possible.

In closing, he said that civilians can do a lot to aid GI's in their struggle against the war. He told the group that by building the antiwar movement at home, they will encourage the GI opposition to the war. Miles also urged active participation at the Spring rallys to be held in opposition to the war.

Shoes Come Off In Campus Center

By DAN KAMAL
MDC Staff

One of the major criticisms of the new Campus Center is that it does not offer enough to the students for whom it was supposedly built.

Well, that criticism will now and forever be classified as unwarranted in view of yesterday's artistic "sit-in."

It all started when a student in Larry Wilcox's art class, which is concentration on "momentary art" or the act of doing something spontaneously, decided to have a shoeless, sit-down bash as her project.

These projects are supposed to create situations conductive to impulsive, momentary expressions. So the class was arranged in two lines of barefoot students whose apparent impulsive expressions were to implore passerbys attempting to wade through the field of ingrown toenails to join the group.

After a short wait during which the art class received many incredulous stares but no participants, they were finally joined by a venturesome business-like gent.

As usual, after waiting for someone else to make a crucial move before acting themselves, some UMass students slowly started filtering into the group. Soon the area in front of the bookstore was inhabited by a truly beautiful conglomeration of warm, sincere people who by taking off its shoes had in fact joyously discarded the albatross of inhibition.

Then in an action symbolic of its new found freedom of expression, the group began to send its shoes on round-trips up and down the escalator. Talk about momentary expression!

However, in an unfortunate ending to this momentous event in human experience, the few dozen beautiful people stood up and reluctantly put on their shoes. Then they stopped talking to each other.

For a while the shoes came off and everybody was talking, then the concrete stepped in. (MDC Photo by Dave Bernstein)

All Students To Pay Equalized S.U. Fee

By ANN GURNETT
MDC Staff

Graduate and undergraduate students will be paying an equalized Student Union-Campus Center building fee from now on, in accordance with a decision made at the SUG Board's meeting last night.

Previously, graduates paid less than undergrads because it was felt they did not have as much use for the building as did undergrads.

According to Bob Nims, chairman of SUG Board, the move was made for many reasons.

"We no longer feel that graduates have less use for the building than other students. As a result, we're trying to initiate new programs that would be of more interest to graduate students than some we're operating now-for instance," he continued, "I don't think too many grad students are attracted to the bands Program Council has in the Hatch, where they might be intrigued by an Art Program where they could present their work."

Nims also gave examples of activities which had proved attractive to both levels of students. These included the Coffee House held every Wednesday night in the CC and the now-defunct Noodle, a vegetarian restaurant which was operated by a grad student but expired because of red tape.

Nims added that next year's fee has not been decided as yet. He said that the cost would most likely rise, following a schedule which was established last year. The schedule provided for an escalation of costs extending over a time period of three years.

He went on to say that the equalization of fees was mainly an economy measure, taken in an attempt to pay for the building and the bonding.

"I want to emphasize," said Nims, "that grads can use RSO areas as much as undergrads can. I feel this point has been neglected in the past."

"Now that the building is gaining in popularity," he continued, "the SUG Board is working to streamline its policies and programs. We also hope to ratify a new constitution soon which would help us define our role in terms of the CC and Whitmore-we're going to try to make SUG Board and its dealings more of a campus issue."

"Fees will be considered within the next three weeks," Nims said. "There will probably be a hike. Maybe that will arouse campus-wide discussion, which would help us in our jobs immensely. With comment from the students," he added, "both graduate and undergraduate, we'll be able to use our money much more effectively. We're challenging the students to get out and work for what they want-they'll be the primary benefactors."

Bromery Gets Power Of Approval On Dorms

By ANNE STADNICKI
MDC Staff

The importance of student participation in forming dorm governance policies was stressed by Dr. Randolph W. Bromery, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs in an MDC interview yesterday.

The Board of Trustees voted to allow the Administration all authority in making decisions on living arrangements at its meeting last month. Bromery has essentially been vested with the power of approval in this area.

Bromery commented also on the residence hall life styles to be offered at the University, the Student Affairs Task Force, the proposed University Senate, Work Week results and his tour through several University dormitories Wednesday.

A diversity of life styles must be offered by the University to allow for different student needs and desires, Bromery said. Single sex, co-ed and "quiet" dorms will be planned and allowed for, he added.

No matter what the life style of the dorm, the proposals must be well thought out, Bromery explained. He said that this pertains to not only residence halls which plan to go co-ed, but also to dorms which would like to institute minor changes.

The Vice Chancellor said that hopefully a system of re-evaluations on perhaps a yearly basis could result from this policy of approval. First students in the dorm must approve the proposals, then in the living area and finally the Chancellor's office grants final approval, he said. He emphasized that he must have advanced notice of proposed changes once they are passed by a dormitory because the Board of Trustees has asked to be kept informed of current developments.

"The major role of the Student Affairs Department is to be the facilitator of the students," Bromery said. "I encourage students to talk to Student Affairs people and make their feelings known."

He said that he hoped to spread authority out to the lower levels of the Student Affairs Department in the various areas in order to gain closer contact with the students. It is essential that students work in concert with Student Affairs staff, he said several times.

Bromery explained that in his opinion the University does a good job of training people for their professions, but "we do not develop active participating citizens". He said participation in forming the dorm policies generates responsibility in a student and responsibility conversely demands participation.

"It is unfortunate that such a small percentage of students actually vote on policy decisions within the dorm, such as whether to go co-ed, allow parietals and so forth," Bromery said.

Concerning the current reform of the Student Affairs Department Bromery said that the Task Force is trying to talk to as many students and others in the various levels of Student Affairs.

The Task Force asks for testimony on (1) major gripes, (2) what areas they would like to see more responsive and (3) specific ways the department should be reformed. After a proposal has been drawn up it will again be brought before the public for comment, Bromery said.

"As far as I know this has never been done here or at any college in Student Affairs," Bromery claimed. He said that the research component that the Task Force hearings incorporate look at the population and try to deal with it or look ahead.

"We're going to stop being behind," he declared.

Bromery said of the proposed University Senate: "co-operation and co-ordination with all parts of the University is necessary. If all the energy groups expended antagonizing each other were spent working together, the result would be tremendous."

Work Week, performed in Central Area over vacation, was termed a success by the Vice Chancellor. He said to measure what was accomplished as opposed to the cost. Another consideration Bromery said was important was that Work Week was a great opportunity for student participation.

"We must balance the tangible and intangible," Bromery said. He encouraged more such projects.

Touring Coolidge, Baker, Butterfield and Cashin dormitories Thursday with President Wood, Bromery said that he noticed it is always the wrong things that are pointed out in the residence halls.

"The only way to build is to work on what is right," Bromery said. He pointed out that there are even good parts about living in the towers but no one wants to admit it. He said a tower is an ideal place to build a community in, a sense of comradeship can be developed.

Bromery also explained that the older dorms should be refurbished on a tinied schedule.

In a dorm such as Cashin, the Vice Chancellor said students would just have to try on the new life style offered and move out if they didn't like it. He would like to see different dorms develop different life styles so as to offer a variety of alternatives to students, he said.

Students may not find what they are looking for in Cashin because it seems to offer smaller, closer group-type relations, Bromery suggested.

When asked about another rent hike this year, Bromery said he expects one, but he said "everybody will see the whole financial picture." The student and administrators on the committee will open up the workings to the campus, he said.

Bromery accounted for the probable rent hike by pointing out that students demand more services and get them.

"What cannot be stressed enough is that students make themselves heard on this and any policy," Bromery said. "Student Affairs can work only with student participation."

Fac-Sen Approves New Grading System

The Faculty Senate, in a meeting last night, voted it's approval of a new eight-point grading system, and an increase both in the number of core requirement and general courses a student may take passfail.

Professor Plumstead, Chairman of the Academic Matters Committee, in a report to the Senate proposed that the official grading system of the university consist of grades of A, AB, B, BC, C, CD, D, and F.

In this plan, the grades of W (Withdrawal), Incomplete, and WP (Withdraw Passing) would be retained.

The committee was formed due to different grading systems proposed by the Faculty Senate and the Student Senate in 1969. The present proposal is the same passed by the Faculty Senate in 1969.

The Senate also voted in favor of another proposal by the committee to allow each School, College, or Division of the University to formulate and enforce the number of pass/fail courses each student may take.

In this new system, a student would be allowed to take up to 15 courses pass/fail while an undergraduate, and up to 5 University core courses pass-fail.

Among the objections brought up to the new grading system were confusion it might cause among colleges students might transfer to. It was also suggested that different pass-fail requirements would make it hard for students to transfer in schools within the University.

Professor reports to Faculty Senate on new grading system and pass-fail options.

20 Year Old Not Yet "Emancipated"

BOSTON (AP) - The town of Brookline said a 20 year old Boston University sophmore was "not emancipated" from her parents and so could not vote in upcoming elections but a federal judge ruled Monday that she could with a provision.

U.S. District Court Charles E. Wyzanski ruled that Patricia A. Garrett a resident of Brookline whole attending Boston University could register and vote but he said her ballot would have to be impounded pending a decision on her eligibility.

Persons 18 years and up can vote in Massachusetts and the State Attorney General currently is preparing guidelines on their eligibilty.

Brookline's elections are March 30.

Brookline Voter Registrars said Miss Garrett did not maintain a legal home in Brookline and should register either in her mother's home, the Charlestown section of Boston, or in her father's home, Gary, Indiana.

The Registrar said Miss Garrett a Boston University sophmore was "not emancipated" from her parents and therefore could not register and vote.

* * * * *

Student Senate Counsel Richard M. Howland, commenting on the implications of the ruling said:

"If the court rules in favor of Garrant, the policy employed in Amherst would not be lawful. Obviously the issue is in considerable doubt, indicating the problems that a town such as Amherst faces."

Howland stressed that there has been no decision. He said that it has been postponed until the Attorney General comments.

If Garrant wins her case, students will be able to register to vote in Amherst, Howland stated.

Monday night at 8:30 when he appears before the town select men, Howland will suggest guidlines to be recommended to the Attorney General.

House Cheers Calley Release

President Nixon's order for the immediate release of Lt. William L. Calley Jr. pending review of his conviction for murder at My Lai was applauded Thursday in the House of Representatives, reflecting the opposition to the verdict that had swelled across the country.

News of the President's action, announced at the Western White House in San Clemente, Calif., drew applause and cheers from House members who were in the middle of a debate on extension of the draft.

The same reaction occurred elsewhere.

John Roemer, executive director of the Maryland American Civil Liberties Union, said, "Our organization is generally in favor of keeping defendants free until some final judicial decision is made. Calley is no exception; I see no reason why he shouldn't be released pending a review."

Calley, 27, was convicted Monday by a six-man military jury at Ft. Benning, Ga. of the premeditated murder of at least 22 Vietnamese old men, women and children at My Lai on March 16, 1968. He was sentenced Wednesday by the same jury to life imprisonment at hard labor. Appeals are automatic.

Before Nixon's action was announced, Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., suggested the President appoint a panel of "distinguished citizens" to review Calley's case and to provide a "speedy review and a thoughtful review that would have some credibility."

Reaction across the country had been running strongly against the verdict. There were telegrams of support, offers of money, plans for demonstrations.

More than 1,200 telegrams were delivered Thursday morning to the courthouse at Ft. Benning and thousands of letters were delivered to Calley's apartment. Most were believed to support the soldier.

Presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Wednesday the White House already had received 5,000 telegrams and there was a backlog of 20,000 waiting to be transmitted. He said they were running 100-1 in support of Calley.

Gov. Edgar D. Whitcomb of Indiana, a decorated World War II veteran, ordered all state flags flown at half-staff to protest the conviction and sentencing.

Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia proclaimed April 5 "American Fighting Men's Day" in the state and urged residents to display the flag and drive with headlights on. He said he took the action because Calley's conviction and sentence have lowered the morale of U.S. soldiers in Vietnam.

FORT BENNING, GA.-Lt. William Calley, Jr., and his attorneys dig through the pile of telegrams they received this morning. The response was highly unfavorable to the verdict handed down by the six-man military jury Tuesday. From left are Richard Kay, Calley, Capt. Brooks Doyle, Maj. Kenneth Doyle and seated at table, George Latimer.

ARUN Troops Recapture Border Artillery Post

SAIGON (AP)—South Vietnamese troops were reported Friday to have recaptured an artillery post near the Laos border after two days of furious fighting.

A Saigon military spokesman said South Vietnamese forces took back the base late Thursday from the regiment of North Vietnamese regulars which had driven them out the day before.

The spokesman said bodies of more than 200 North Vietnamese were counted around the base, in South Vietnam's mountainous central highlands six miles east of the Laos frontier.

The South Vietnamese were aided by heavy American air support including fresh raids by B52 bombers against North Vietnamese positions.

In Saigon, the U.S. Command reported 58 Americans killed in combat last week, the highest death toll in a month, and 342 Americans wounded, the highest in six months. Figures for the previous week were 54 killed and 335 wounded.

The stepup in enemy action came as a South Vietnamese attack force returned from a one-day raid on an enemy base on the Ho Chi Minh trail six miles inside Laos.

Latest reports from the central highlands indicated that fighting was still going on for control of one of the outposts, Fire Base No. 6, located six miles east of the Laotian border and eight miles southwest of the town of Dak To.

The South Vietnamese also reported an increase in casualties last week, with 756 killed in action and 1,726 wounded. Figures for the week before were 630 killed and 1,760 wounded.

The figures covered the seven-day period ending at midnight last Saturday and did not include the 33 American troopers killed and 76 wounded in the sapper attack last Sunday against Fire Base Mary Ann.

The U.S. command also reported 22 Americans deaths last week from nonhostile causes such as accidents and illness, seven fewer than the previous week.

The allied commands reported 3,574 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong were killed last week, compared to 5,819 the previous week.

Since Jan. 1, 1961, 44,788 Americans have been killed in combat in Vietnam and 296,911 have been wounded.

House Extends Draft

WASHINGTON (AP)—Turning aside all efforts to cut off draftees for the Indochina war, the House approved a two-year draft extension Thursday, clearing the way for President Nixon's "zero draft" volunteer army.

The bill, which also grants the President's requested authority to abolish student draft deferments as of last April 23, was sent to the Senate where its fate is uncertain.

Two days of efforts by Indochina war critics, first to abolish the draft and, that failing, to cut off draftees for the war, were overwhelmingly defeated one by one.

The measure passed 293-99. The bill's nearly tripling of President Nixon's pay boost incentives to attract enough volunteers to end the draft by June 30, 1973 - to $2.7 billion starting next July 1 from Nixon's $987 million request - drew not a single challenge.

The House approved a third year of civilian service for conscientious objectors with a provision to put them in uniform if they do not perform the civilian jobs satisfactorily.

Senate Approves Public Service Jobs

WASHINGTON (AP)-Overriding Nixon administration opposition, the Senate passed Thursday a $1.75-billion bill designed to put 150,000 unemployed into public service jobs this year.

Democrats, with help from some industrial state Republicans, turned back efforts to water down the measure or shut it back to the Labor Committee.

The 62-10 Senate vote sent the bill to the House where Democratic leaders have promised to push it, perhaps bringing it to the floor later this month.

Sponsors said they hope it can be on President Nixon's desk early in May.

But Republicans freely predicted in the Senate debate that Nixon would veto it as he did a similar bill in December 1970.

Democratic managers of the bill said it not only would provide jobs at a time of high unemployment but also help states and cities meet pressing manpower needs for many government services.

Republicans answered that it would make only a small dent in the jobless total. They said that the Senate should pass instead Nixon's special revenue-sharing manpower proposal.

The jobs could be in such areas as education, health, recreation, conservation, law enforcement, fire protection, and transportation.

The federal government would pay 90 per cent of the cost of the program, the local government sponsor the other 10 per cent.

Senate Republicans Launch Offensive

WASHINGTON (AP)—Senate Republicans launched a spring offensive Thursday against Democratic critics of President Nixon's Indochina policies.

In a series of Senate speeches, seven Republicans led by Sen. Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, the minority leader, assailed targets ranging from presidential hopeful Sen. Edmund S. Muskie to news accounts of South Vietnamese troops retreating hostility from Laos.

Sen. J. W. Fulbright, the Arkansas Democrat who is chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, countered by praising news coverage of the war and the Laotian campaign. He called on the administration to acknowledge the U.S. supported operation had been a failure.

Scott said that from now on his assistants will patrol the Senate floor so Democratic criticism of the President's policies does not go unchallenged. He said he also plans to revive the GOP "Truth Squad," used during political campaigns to answer opposition attacks.

The GOP speakers included four freshman senators, Robert Taft Jr. of Ohio, Lowell P. Weicker Jr. of Connecticut, William E. Brock of Tennessee and J. Glenn Beall Jr. of Maryland, as well as Sen. Clifford P. Hansen of Wyoming and Sen. William B. Saxbe of Ohio.

Saxbe, a longtime critic of the war and U.S. involvement, said he is even more "sick and tired" of "those who continually play politics with this unfortunate war."

Scott and Taft directed particular fire at Muskie, who said in a television interview earlier this week he regrets that he did not publicly oppose U.S. involvement in Vietnam six years ago.

Brezhnev Doctrine Censured At Red Confab.

MOSCOW (AP)-Two foreign Communist leaders challenged the Brezhnev doctrine Thursday in the presence of its author, calling for independence and sovereignty for all Communist parties.

Enrico Berlinguer, No. 2 man of the Italian party-the largest in the West-insisted on "full independence for every party and every country."

Nicolae Ceausescu, first secretary of the Romanian Communist party, called for a "new type of relations" among Socialist countries based on "independence and national sovereignty, equal rights, and noninterference in internal affairs."

Belinguer and Ceausescu took the speaker's rostrum in the afternoon at the Soviet Communist party's 24th congress.

They followed Czechoslovak party leader Gustav Husak, who thanked the Soviet Union for invading his country in 1968.

While Husak supported the doctrine of limited sovereignty for Communist countries-attributed to Soviet party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev-Berlinguer staked out an independent line for Italy's party.

Husak was cheered by the more than 5,000 Soviet delegates and foreign guests in the Kremlin Palace of Congresses. Berlinguer'e address was received with scattered applause and a cool gaze from Brezhnev.

Taking up Brezhnev's line that the occupation of Czechoslovakia was the "rendering of international assistance," Husak declared: "This international help saved our country from civil war, counter-revolution and helped preserve the gains of socialism."

Husak expressed the "sincere gratitude to the Communist party of the Soviet Union, the Soviet government and the Soviet people for having responded with understanding to the concern of Czechoslovak Communists for the fate of socialism and for having responded to their appeal for help."

The official thesis is that Czechoslovak government and party leaders who to the outside world appeared to be giving their backing to Dubcek's reforms-invited the Soviet tanks in.

A few minues later, foreign delegates reported, Berlinguer stepped to the podium.

He justified his party's bid for a role in the government and rejected attacks on the Italian Communists' support of pluralism, which one senior Soviet party official attacked obliquely at Wednesday's session. By pluralism, the Italians mean there should be no central authority for the Communist movement.

Pyotr Masherov, an alternate member of the ruling Politburo, had criticized the "pretentions of those who want to create new models of socialism by imposing pluralism."

Berlinguer replied by saying Italy's "Communist party has one million members and nine million votes and has something to say about the country's situation. The Communists are therefore seeking a role in the goverment, along with the Christian Democrats and Socialists."

At another point in his speech, Berlinguer stressed the right of his party's independence.

"The Italian party wants to express its solidarity with the Soviet Communist party and with all the Socialist countries," he said.

"But that does not mean that we identify ourselves with each and every choice that other socialist countries and, generally speaking every Communist party has made and may make within the limits of its own responsibility.

The Italian party was one of the most critical of the Soviet invasion and to some extent it has never accepted it.

A special program to bring disadvantaged Spanish-speaking students to the University has been initiated this semester by a graduate student in the School of Business Administration. Eliot "Don" Atencio, originator of the program, has arranged to enroll five young people from the Puerto Rican community in Holyoke in the University who could not meet standard admission requirements.

The five students, all in their twenties, have a sincere desire to get college educations, but until this time they had no idea that they could do it, according to Atencio. Professor Eugenio Galban, Chairman of the Mount Holyoke Spanish Department, knew of their desire and also of Atencio's wish to do something to help the Spanish-speaking minority in this region. They decided that a University education could do the most good for the young people.

Through the cooperation of Dean Lawrence Johnson of SBA, Dean of Admissions William Tunis, and people in the Registrar's and Financial Aid Offices, the five Puerto Ricans entered the University this semester in spite of academic deficiencies and financial difficulties.

For their first semester, the five carry a reduced academic load of three courses and are specially tutored. Two are enrolled in the School of Education, two in the College of Arts and Sciences, and one in the School of Business. All expect to carry full course loads after this semester and to earn full degrees. None is at this time in academic trouble.

The students have received limited financial aid from the University. Also, the Student Senate Wednesday evening appropriated up to $3600 to pay for the tuition, fees, room, board, and books of the five for this semester.

Atencio says there are plans to incorporate the program into CCEBS after this semester. This is contingent, however, upon the size of next year's CCEBS budget, which has not yet been determined. Atencio hopes that CCEBS will have adequate funds to include the five present Puerto Rican students and ten others from the Spanish-speaking community next year.

This semester "is like a dream come true" for the five special students, according to Atencio. He explained that for Puerto Rican youngsters, a college education is virtually unheard of. Most are deficient in English and very few even make it through high school, dropping out to help their families financially. At present, there are almost no regularly enrolled students at the University from the Spanish-speaking community.

Medicare May Get A Price Tag

WASHINGTON (AP)-Provisions to charge both aged and low-income persons part of the cost of health services they now receive free have been tentatively written into a new welfare bill, it was learned Thursday.

Programs affected are medicare, the Social Security-linked program for those 65 and older, and medicaid, the state-federal program for those at the poverty level or close to it.

The House Ways and Means Committee, putting together a complex welfare bill, wrote in cost-sharing provisions at the recommendation of President Nixon's administration, sources said.

However, the legislature draft is to be restudied by the committee after it is completed, probably late this month, and a strong move to reconsider and knock out the charges was predicted.

Under present medicare provisions, patients pay the first day's hospitalization cost, estimated at $60, then incur no more expense unless they remain in the hospital more than 60 days. The proposed new language would require the patient to pay one-eighth of the cost beginning with the 15th day.

The committee also reportedly agreed to include in its draft a provision that reasonable charges, taking into account ability to pay, may be made for medicaid services.

FBI Probes Peace Group

WASHINGTON (AP)—The FBI confirmed Thursday it has questioned relatives of prisoners of war about the peace group which relays mail to and from POWs in North Vietnam.

FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover said the Committee of Liaison with Families of Servicemen Detained in North Vietnam was investigated to see if it were in violation of the Foreign Agents Registration Act.

At the same time, another FBI spokesman said the probe "was terminated in December of 1970 without any prosecutions."

FBI scrutiny of the liaison committee came to light Tuesday when the mother of a missing American serviceman said an FBI agent had warned her to have nothing to do with the group.

Numerous other POW families then reported similar interviews with the FBI but said they were not warned against contact with the pacifist group.

The FBI investigation was requested in a letter dated Nov. 25, 1970, from Rep. Richard H. Ichord, D—Mo., chairman of the House Internal Security Committee, to Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell.

The letter was sent at the urging of Rep. William Scherle, R- Iowa, a committee member, who has been active on the prisoner of war issue and had complained earlier of the liaison committee's role.

The Internal Security Committee also has investigated the entire peace movement, including members of the liaison committee, and held hearings on the subject last year.

Hoover confirmed the FBI probe in a letter to Rep. Jonathan Bingham, D—N.Y., who had asked for an explanation after a POW mother testified before a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee.

Far East Junkets Popular In House

WASHINGTON (AP)-House committees spent more than half a million dollars last year probing around the four corners of the world.

The money spent by 20 traveling groups included appropriated dollars and foreign currencies owned by the United States and normally used for U.S. expenses in foreign nations.

Hong Kong and other Far Eastern spots attracted many of the touring legislators and the staff members who accompanied them.

But few of the non-Communist nations of the world were overlooked by the 15 standing committees and five special groups that found business abroad requiring their inspection or attendance.

The expenditures ranged from $91,700 by the Foreign Affairs Committee to $285 by the Committee on House Administration.

Travelers carrying the credentials of the Foreign Affairs group turned up in more than 30 nations on every continent except Australia. Their travels started in January and continued into December.

A lone traveler sponsored by the House Administration Committee was Rep. Lucien N. Nedzi, D-Mich., who spend $285 on a two-day trip to Sweden and The Netherlands.

U.S. Cars Riding On Overloaded Tires

WASHINGTON (AP)-Figures from auto makers show that 50 models of domestic and imported cars ride on tires which provide an overloading safety margin of less than 1 percent of the loaded vehicle's weight.

Makers of the cars with the slim tire reserve load margins call the reserves adequate, although tire experts rate overloading and its near-equivalent, under-inflation, as major causes of tire failure.

Running a tire with more load than it is designed to bear is unsafe, says a government report. "It shortens the life of a tire and may lead to sudden failure." That means a blowout.

But a driver virtually needs a scale in his driveway to tell if his tires can carry the load he's putting in his car.

Beginning with the 1970 models, auto manufacturers have submitted to the Department of Transportation figures showing the tire reserve load, or the amount of weight a tire could support beyond the manufacturer's recommended maximum load.

This year's reports, besides showing the 50 models of domestic and imported cars with a tire reserve load of less than 1 per cent of the loaded car's weight, also disclose that some models of Renault, Toyota, Ford, Plymouth and Dodge have a reserve of 10 pounds or less.

However, the size of tire reserve load is complicated by the inexact measurement of trunk capacity in cars, the necessity with some cars of changing air pressures to accomodate different loads and the effect of extra weight like trailers, luggage racks and even mud or snow, which can add 100 pounds to a car's weight. The government requires only that a car's tires shall not be overloaded at the manufacturer's recommended load.

Auto engineers said all car parts have a built-in safety margin. Spokesman for the Tire Industry Safety Council said any safety margin would be difficult to compute, although they estimated tires are 10 per cent stronger than they are rated.

The load-carrying capacity of tires depends on tire size and air pressure. The larger the tire-regardless of construction or material-the more weight it can support. Increasing the air pressure also increases load-carrying ability.

The Tire Industry Safety Council has estimated that 6 per cent of the passenger vehicles on the road have overloaded tires.

Sen. Aiken Proposes Single Term Office

WASHINGTON (AP)—Sen. George D. Aiken, R—Vt., saying he wants to free a president "from the millstone of partisan politics," proposed Thursday a constitutional amendment limiting a president and vice president to a single six-year term.

"It is an indisputable fact," Aiken told the Senate in joining Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana in backing the amendment proposal, "that no president can give his best to the nation or maintain our prestige in the world as long as he is constantly being fired upon by those whose principal purpose is to keep him from being re-elected."

Aiken, the dean of Senate Republicans, who has served since 1941, said that "with the possible exception of President Eisenhower, each president I have served under-two Republicans and four Democrats-was assailed and harassed not only by members of the opposite party but also by dissatisfied members of his own party."

"At times, I have felt the opposition was warranted and contributed to the welfare of all the people," he added, but "in other instances, harassment and embarrassment of the president was purely politically motivated and proved costly to the American people."

"No president can expect to have a successful foreign policy if he does not have bipartisan support on the home front," he said.

"No American president can boldly propose far-reaching domestic changes if he is constantly looking back over his shoulder at the opposition, expecting an attack from the rear."

Cashin Residents Sound-Off Wood-Bromery Receptive

By DOUG DEARBORN
MDC Staff

The residents of Cashin House, the new suite-style dorm beyond Orchard Hill, met yesterday with Pres. Wood and Vice Chancellor Bromery. Gathering informally, the residents discussed needs and aired grievances.

One common complaint has been suite shuffling. Students have been moved from rooms they were assigned to other suites on account of obscure and shifting coed living policies.

Lack of lounge and recreation space irritates the residents. They said there are no floor lounges in the 8-story building, with just one small and inadequate lounge on the entrance level.

The dearth of communal space, coupled with the fragmenting and polarizing effect of suite living, has fostered a sense of isolation among Cashin dwellers, according to Mrs. Rugg, head of residence. Each suite becomes a social focus and discourages wider contact with other floor neighbors, she said. This is particularly true for people who are not gregarious or active extroverts, she added.

Mrs. Rugg explained that the physical structure is socially divisive. One result has been general apathy toward University affairs, she said. Other factors contribute the disinterest in Cashin matters. The dormitory admitted residents on Jan. 25 for the first time; a rather short time to foster cohesion and concern. Thirdly, many denizens of the house are temporary sojourners. When Thatcher House is renovated they will return to their true abode.

Other complaints included lack of wardrobes, and a woefully small kitchenette to service the whole building.

Parking space is nearly absent at Cashin House. Residents must park behind WOPE or along Eastman Lane, they said.

The hall is also endowed with a perverse alarm system, according to residents who are often aroused with no just cause.

Cashin House is at 95% occupancy, with 412 residents at present. When Brown and McNamara residence halls open this September, the Northeast Complex will house 1400 students.

NYC FD Seeks Men

NEW YORK (AP)—"Soul brother, become a fireman. New York City needs your black experience," reads a purple and black poster distributed by the Vulcan Society, an organization of black firemen.

The campaign by Vulcan and the city's fire department to improve the meager representation of minorities of the 14,000 man force appeals in the language and to the life-style of ghetto youths.

On the poster is a sketch of a young man with an Afro hairdo.

But David Floyd, president of Vulcan, warns potential recruits not to grow their Afros too long because "hair burns easily."

"They say the Fire Department is part of the establishment," Floyd said Monday. "But I tell them they can wear dashikis on their days off. Then I tell them the starting salary and they begin to get interested."

"With $9,400 a year the starting salary," Floyd says in speaking appearances at high schools or at classes conducted by the Vulcan Society at its Brooklyn headquarters to prepare recruits for the Sept. 18 Civil Service exam, "you can buy a lot of Black Power-and if you want, all the beads, earrings and dashikis you'll ever need."

Explosion Hits LA City Hall

LOS ANGELES (AP)—An exploding bomb ripped through a public restroom at Los Angeles City Hall Thursday, hurling glass into a hallway which would have been crowded minutes later with employes leaving for the day.

There were no injuries in the 4:55 p.m. blast, which demolished the second-floor men's restroom. The room is about 100 feet from six city councilmen's offices. The offices were not damaged.

Police said the smell of gunpowder permeated the restroom area when they arrived but added that they were without clues to the exact nature of the explosive device used.

It was the third restroom bombing at a Los Angeles public building in eight months. One of the previous blasts killed a man.

All the damage of Thursday's blast was confined to the restroom.

A telephone operator two floors above the explosion in the 27-story City Hall described it as a "tremendous blast that lasted maybe five, six, eight seconds."

Al Bocanegra, a 20-year-old messenger-clerk for the Recreation and Parks Department, said he left the restroom only minutes before the explosion.

He said he saw no one in the facility and saw no packages inside.

The explosion occurred one floor below Mayor Sam Yorty's office and the City Council chambers. Yorty and most of the council members had left the building shortly before the blast.

Many of the building's 3,000 employes were evacuated and the building was sealed off as FBI and police investigators picked through the rubble for clues.

Man's Best Friend Victim Of Leash Law

By LINDA A. BALICKI
MDC Staff

It has long been said that dogs are man's best friend but a look or walk around campus will quickly give evidence that canines as well as felines and other animals abound as evidence of the attempt by UMies to make their campus residences and lives a little more homey.

They are in all sizes, shapes and breeds from mongrels to pedigrees mutts to pure breds, Collies, St. Bernards, German Shepards Dachunds, Chihuahuas, Doberman Pinchers..in all colors and shapes. Tom cats, Siamese, Persian, calicos and midnight blacks...all seeking a home and a master or mistress to provide comfort to.

They are to be found everywhere....in classes, outside classes, in hallways and residence hall corridors and lounges ... any where their masters paths may lead them and if they are masterless, wherever there are people who may be kind enough to give them a loving tap, play fetch with them or be willing to take them home.

Their search and wanderings takes them all over campus where they run free in such places as dining commons (when they sneak in and evade ticket takers and other personnel) to lovingly and pleadingly beg for any small tidbit which might be given them. Other places to be invaded have been an occasional academic building, the library and on rare occasions even Whitmore.

The most common place to see them up until the last week or so that is has been the Campus Center-Student Union complex. There they seemed to run free and supreme through lounges lobbies, stairwells and hallways and inevitably the places where they find the greatest companionship and hopefully love and attention - the Hatch, Coffee Shop Cafeteria...and even, once, the Top of the Campus.

Some of their Campus Center wanderings have been appreciated and even delighted upon by passers-by as they provide laughter and a cause for a smile with their antics. The sight of a master or mistress lovingly caring for or talking to his pet or gently coaxing them in a stubborn moment has also been a source of delight, laughter enjoyment or for those who are dog or pet owners or lovers at heart an occasional sympathetic tear.

Their free wandering days are over however at least for those without a master and a leash for the Campus Center in cooperation with Health services has been fit to restrict the presence of dogs or pets in the building to those who are on leashes. Notification of the establishment of the leash law came in the form of the third in a succession of signs announcing "NO Pets" or No Pets Allowed" which have dotted Campus Center walls and bulletin boards all semester. The leash law was established to eliminate the hazards of packs of dogs roaming at will in the complex causing disturbances as well as to comply with common health measures which are found in most public restaurants and buildings.

In residence halls however they have become a fixture as they settle into cozy corners or roam into and out of any door which seems friendly and inviting. They are enjoyed for the most part by most residents around and indeed help to change the often cold and dreary atmosphere of the residence hall corridor into a true home like atmosphere as they capture the hearts of friends around them.

State School Head Resigns

BOSTON (AP)—The superintendent of Belchertown State School, which was criticized by a recent legislative report, has submitted his resignation, the Department of Mental Health announced Thursday.

Dr. Lawrence P. Bowser in a letter to Mental Health Commissioner Milton Greenblatt left the effective date of his resignation up to the department.

In a letter, Bowser said, "When I accepted the appointment in 1960 I did so with the intention that after 10 years... I would retire."

Earlier Thursday, the department reported Roland A. Nagle had been named administrator for mental retardation in Region 1 which includes Belchertown.

The former administrator, Dr. M. Philip Wakstein, was fired recently in a controversy over conditions at the school.

Wakstein first brought conditions at the institution to public attention when he took a newspaper reporter and photographer to the school.

A subsequent newspaper series on the institution sparked a legislative investigation. In a report last week the legislative committee described the facility as "a total failure."

He Just Tries To Make People Happy

HUMBOLDT, Kan. (AP)—The sign on the door reads: "The office of Lee H. Murren Retired. No business. No prospects."

Murren, 70, spends his time giving away small gifts marked "Have a Happy Day."

He rented the office so he could keep out from underfoot at home.

Murren retired in 1964 as chief clerk of the Sinclair Oil Co.'s Carrollton, Mo., office and he and his wife moved to Humboldt.

Too many people, says Murren, "retire, go home and sit down and want the wife to prepare three meals a day and they generally get under the feet of their helpmate.

"So I made up my mind Mrs. Murren could retire with me. By having the office, I go to 'work' every day as usual and she has been able to continue with her usual activities."

"Work" for Murren consists of giving away presents to friends, acquaintances and strangers.

The gifts are small items-pens, coin purses, key chains, carving knives and toys.

"It's just my way of trying to make other people a little happy," he explained. "I can afford to do it on a small scale. The money that I spend on this is money we would spend on children if we had any."

Murren estimated he gives away several hundred dollars worth of "Happy Day" presents each year.

"Everyone enjoys getting a gift," he said. "You'd be surprised at the people who have plenty of wealth themselves who are genuinely happy to receive a small, spontaneous gift with a happy thought. It's just my way of "The Lord has been good to me," said Murren.

College Without Walls Plans Announced

BOSTON (AP)—Gov. Francis W. Sargent announced plans Thursday to establish a "college without walls" in Massachusetts.

The governor, speaking at a news conference with Chancellor Edward C. Moore of the Board of Higher Education, said such a school "could cost as little as 10 per cent of the expense of a conventional university."

Moore explained the proposed school as one which would operate through television and correspondence. Students who successfully complete the program would be eligible for degrees of bachelor of arts or associate in arts, he said.

Sargent said, he hopes the program will be designed within the next year and will provide an education "for those with parttime as well as fulltime jobs, or for those unsuited to the formal structure of a college or university with its rigid requirements."

The concept, Moore said, was first developed in Great Britain. He said the state of New York is working on development of a similar program.

On a recent report by a special legislative committee which termed Belchertown State School "a total failure", Sargent said "the report is not being swept under the rug by the administration. He said his administration will "do everything we can" to improve conditions at the facility.

Profound Changes In Education-Burn

Higher education has undergone profound changes almost everywhere in the world in recent years, Dr. Barbara Burn of the University of Massachusetts reports in a new book prepared for the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education.

Dr. Burn, director of international programs at UMass Amherst, is the principal author of the book, "Higher Education in Nine Countries," published by McGraw-Hill. She reports on the colleges and universities of France, Great Britain, Canada, Australia, West German, Japan, Sweden and Russia, and visited all these countries but the last.

A chapter on the ninth country--India--is contributed by Philip G. Altbach, associate professor of educational policies and studies at the University of Wisconsin. Clark Kerr, chairman of the Carnegie Commission, and James A. Perkins, chairman of the board of the International Council for Educational Development, also contribute chapters to the book.

Japan, France, and Germany, where student violence drew attention to the stark inadequacies of the traditional university, have moved toward fundamental reform. Britain, Canada and Australia have strengthened their non-university institutions of higher learning, taking enrollment pressure off the universities but also threatening their traditional role, the volume reports.

Even in Russia there is pressure for change, according to the book. Dr. Burn reports a trend toward broadening the highly specialized higher education that has been customary in the U.S.S.R. This, she suggests, "could rock the political foundations of the Soviet society by producing graduates more prone to question it."

In all of the industrial nations described, the numbers of young people seeking higher education have greatly increased. All but the French have resorted to admission quotas or other means of restricting enrollment. In Japan and the Soviet Union, admission pressures have been particularly severe because universal secondary school attendance has been achieved rapidly.

A solution in most of the industrial nations has been to create or expand new kinds of educational institutions. The new schools try to provide opportunity for higher learning to students qualified for but unable to gain admission to a university. They also seek to offer more specialized or technically-oriented training than do the universities, and to provide higher education at a relatively lower cost.

Student disorders, including often violent clashes between town and town, also have been common in the industrial nations. Even the campuses of developing India--which ranks third after the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. in total university enrollments--have been torn by bitter political factionalism. Almost everywhere but in Japan, where disturbances have been severe, students are acquiring new power in institutional government.

Texas Praises Albert DeSalvo

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP)—The Texas House fell for an April Fool joke Thursday and approved a resolution commending the alleged Boston strangler.

After word got around what they had done, the sponsor, Rep. Tom Moore of Waco withdrew his measure.

Moore's resolution praised Albert DeSalvo and said he had been "officially recognized by the state of Massachusetts for his noted activities and unconventional techniques involving population control and applied psychology."

It also said that "this compassionate gentleman's dedication and devotion to his work has enabled the weak and lonely, throughout the nation, to achieve and maintain a new degree of concern for their future."

Moore didn't mention in explaining the resolution that DeSalvo, 39, was described in psychiatric testimony in a Massachusetts court four years ago as the self-proclaimed Boston strangler who killed 13 women.

Congradulatory resolutions pass the House in large numbers with the barest of explanations.

You Need A Service Contract

WASHINGTON—In the world of planned obsolescence, the service contract plays a most vital role. There is hardly anything you can buy now that doesn't have a service contract to go with it.

The other day I went into my favorite department store to purchase a paper cup dispenser. It cost $1.50.

As the man was writing up the sales slip he said, "Would you like to have a service contract with this?"

"What for?" I asked.

"Well, it could break down and you would have to call someone to fix it. If you take out a service contract, which will only cost you $40 for the year, we would send someone to your house free of charge."

"But why would you sell a paper cup dispenser that would break down in less than a year?"

"Please don't get me wrong. I'm not saying that this paper cup dispenser will break down. We've sold several of them that need no servicing at all. But our experience has been that the majority of the dispensers do cause trouble after frequent usage. Where did you intend to use this paper cup dispenser?"

"In the children's bathroom. They don't seem to ever rinse their glasses after they brush their teeth."

"Then you'll certainly need a service contract. These paper cup dispensers were not built to stand the punishment of children using them every day."

"But there is a guarantee with the paper cup dispenser."

"That's only if it's used by a senior citizen three times a week. Of course, you don't have to take the service contract--it's strictly optional.

"But we know a dentist who installed one of our paper cup dispensers in his office and it broke down. It kept dispensing three paper cups at one time. He didn't have a service contract, so it took three months before we could get to him. By the time our man repaired the dispenser, the dentist had used $645 worth of paper cups, not to mention the $25 we had to charge him for the house call."

"But," I said naively, "it seems so unfair to sell someone a new product and then inform him it's liable to break down."

"On the contrary. We would be dishonest if we sold you the product and didn't inform you it would break down. These service contracts are for the protection of the customer. Two weeks ago a lady bought one of these paper cup dispensers and after two days, it wouldn't dispense any paper cups at all. She had to keep leaning over and trying to drink directly from the faucet. Fortunately, she had a service contract with us and we sent over a man right away. It turned out a sprocket spring behind the reject lever had slipped out of the three-way hook. He replaced it in an hour and all the lady had to pay for was the new parts."

"Except for a bad back she developed trying to lean over the faucet, it only cost her $12."

"I still don't understand why a reliable store like this would carry a paper cup dispenser that won't hold up."

"Well, frankly sir, we're not too fond of these paper cup dispensers ourselves. We don't even make any money on them".

"Then why do you sell them?" I asked angrily.

"Because," he said primly, "we make all our profit on the service contract, stupid."

A View From The Top

The following article by Pres. Robert Wood appeared in yesterday's Boston Globe.

I appreciated the Globe's thoughtful appraisal of the growth of the University of Massachusetts in its March 30th editorial, and the careful assembly of facts and opinions that it involved.

I am only sorry that the evaluation concluded by advocating a general tuition increase, apparently without considering the effects on State and Community Colleges, as well as the University.

Let me state again the logic that I believe leads to the opposite conclusion--that is, keeping resident tuitions for all public institutions at present levels.

The figures I used, and which the Globe editorial quoted accurately (namely, 39% of the UMass-Amherst students' parents planned to go into debt to finance their education; 35% of the mothers were going to work for the first time; 21% of the fathers hoped to get a second job to pay the costs), make plain two facts.

——The majority of University of Massachusetts students come from hard-working families in moderate circumstances. (60% of last year's graduating class at UMass-Amherst came from families with combined parental income of less than $10,000.)

——The student body also includes a large proportion from poor families. (Almost 72% of the UMass undergraduates applied for scholarships last year, and only 9% were able to get aid.)

If a substantial tuition raise occurs the character of the student body will change drastically. Any tuition increase that would yield significant revenue can only discourage students from poor families from attending the University. It can only increase the proportion from well-to-do families. This shift from poor to rich would be even greater in state and community colleges. In addition to tuition, there are the required fees which have increased more than 85% in the last 10 years. At the UMass-Amherst campus, total costs to students have increased 127% from the Fall of 1958 to 1970. So the squeeze is already on.

The only way to offset these effects of higher tuition and fees would be to increase scholarships. Here two other facts are clear.

——In states where tuition in public institutions has been raised, as in Michigan, the promised scholarship relief has not been kept.

——If indeed commensurate scholarship aid were provided, revenue relief would be substantially decreased.

This is why I advocated getting the scholarship funds first - and then considering legislation concerning tuition.

The fundamental fact about financing higher education, public and private, is that cost levels for quality education exceed the ability of the majority of students and their families to pay. Therefore providing quality education requires major subsidies in the form of scholarships, direct government grants, and generous tax benefits for charitable contributions. Later on these subsidies are returned by the additional taxes the student pays from his higher earnings in his later career.

Without first enacting scholarship programs or imaginative work study proposals such as Speaker Bartley has recommended, a tuition increase for public education will only close the door to many talented youngsters. It will not benefit in any significant way either taxpayers or private education. It will deprive the Commonwealth of the full contribution that talented youngsters can make, given an education at the highest level of their ability.

It is so often
I find myself hanging no clinging to a leaf
with my tiny hands and the wind blows
the frailty of my body

and there is no stillness no death of course to find yourself you must be alone but each time I peer to the ground
it is farther away

Widening The Gap

Well spring is finally in the air, along with the sounds of Jesus Christ Superstar floating out of T-6, mellow smoke rising from the pond, and talk of another strike on May 5. The way I see it, Christ is pretty harmless and I guess a lot of people dig grass these days, but I just can't help cringing when the Mobe, (that wonderful group that brought you thousands of dollars worth of damage here last spring) decides that we need to strike once again.

It is senseless to argue the importance of the main cause they support, i.e., our immediate withdrawal from Southeast Asia. They are right. But I can't help but to question the tactics that the Mobe advocates to try and achieve this end.

A strike, and the other activities that surround it, will prove nothing except to widen the credibility gap that now exists between students and the 'outside world'. You've got to remember that a strike is interpreted much differently by outsiders than it is by students and the participants.

At planning meetings there is always an abundance of logic, rhetoric and good intentions. Something seems to happen though when the cause is taken to the street. Eloquent four syllable words somehow get changed into inflammatory four letter words. Relative order turns to anarchy, rock throwing, spray paint, and unfortunately a lot of misunderstanding. President Nixon, school administrators, the legislature and parents rarely get to see what goes on behind the scenes. What they do see is a small group of insurgents who make themselves out to be representatives of a large student population, turn a system that they painful put together over a long period of time into chaos.

But more important than what people think when a strike takes place and gets out of hand, are the individual privileges that it denies. No, it's not really too much to ask of a student to give up a couple of classes that he might have cut anyway. It's only one little freedom, and we've got lots of them to spare, right? But when freedom is denied in the very name of freedom, it becomes just a bit hypocritical, and further, unjust.

To sit back idly and permit a small group to use the university as a setting for their own brand of justice would show clearly who really is the silent majority.

We all look forward to the day when there will be peace in Vietnam, and indeed the whole world. But to have this at the expense of our own internal tranquility is to me a very dubious goal.

Letters To The Editor

Not So Crazy About Dave

It is indeed unfortunate yet interesting that the readers of this campus newspaper have to be subject to an editorial such as Wednesday's "Just Wild About Harry" article, written by David Williams.

It is unfortunate yet interesting that the readers were never even afforded an opportunity to read the article which he criticizes, for the release was never printed even in edited form.

It is unfortunate yet interesting that Mr. Williams writes about ASA meetings and misquotes statements made at those meetings when he has never even attended an ASA meeting.

Regarding Mr. Williams statement that the concert committees work "is necessarily being done in secret," there are some people on campus (some of whom were at the Wednesday nite ASA meeting) who object to the fact that the fate of their own money is being decided upon in secret. But Mr. Williams' wasn't at that meeting.

And regarding Mr. Williams' statement that I want "to bring in groups under contract to Columbia Records ... because he's campus rep for Columbia," I clearly explained at a meeting before spring vacation that my job as a representative on campus is to assist the concert committees in getting groups up here that might otherwise be more difficult to book -- and that I receive no added privileges or renumeration should my assistance be used. But Mr. Williams wasn't at that meeting.

Despite apologies and statements from some on the Collegian staff that ASA's notice of Wednesday's meeting was probably misplaced, that an ASA news story done some time ago was never printed because of space limitations, that a news story for this past Wednesday's meeting would not appear because only a little over 20 people attended, and that the policy of the Collegian is not to serve as a "bulletin board" for meetings, the paper of the following day carried a 3-column 54-line article about Wednesday nite's Mobe meeting (which, according to a Mobe member, 30-31 persons attended), and a 3-column 67-line announcement of a meeting involving the Tiao-Yu-Tai issue appeared in the same paper.

May I sincerely advise those on the Collegian staff to advise Mr. Williams -- since he may not listen to the advice of me, ASA, or any of the other individuals and groups he has immaturely attacked -- of the legal consequences involved in using misquotations, slander, and open, vague threats (such as "he's going to come to grief") in his writings.

And finally, if we are the generation that has pledged to clean up the mess in the world before it cleans us up, let's get together and try to at least practice those ideals here on our own campus before we leave it. We don't have much time, you know.

Peace,
HAROLD KOLTIN

You Are Guilty

To the Editor:

Why go to Washington on April 24th? Because you are guilty. Because you share in the deaths of Vietnam.

For every petition you didn't sign - someone died. For every meeting you didn't attend - someone died. For the strike you didn't support - someone died. For the demonstration you didn't take part in - someone died.

What good does it do to work for peace? Ask the soldiers who are now home.

What harm is there in not getting involved? Ask my niece. You see, I have a picture of one of those someones. It shows him with my niece on his knee. He has a red suit on with a pillow stuffed in his stomach and a big white beard. It was Christmas - his last Christmas - this someone died. He was sent home from Vietnam in a plastic bag for a closed casket funeral. His death is one of too many for too long.

Your participation in Washington on April 24th will shorten and help end this war and it will save someone's life. If you are not in Washington, someone else will die. Weigh your reason for not going against this human life. You will have to live with your conclusion.

A Veteran For Peace

So It Goes

To the Editor:

Below is a quote that I extracted from the New York Times Magazine section a few weeks ago. I originally extracted this quote from Vonnegut because what it had to say appealed to me in general. But, in light of the recent decision on the Calley Court Martial, I thought I might send it on to you. In my opinion it seems more applicable than every.

The flaw in the Christ stories, said the visitor from outer space, was that Christ, who didn't look like much, was actually the Son of the Most Powerful Being in the Universe. Readers understood that, so, when they came to the crucifixion, they naturally thought, and Rosewater read out loud again:

Oh boy--they sure picked the wrong guy to lynch that time!

And that thought had a brother: "There are right people to lynch." Who? Poeple not well connected. So it goes.

Why The Redmen?

To the Editor:

Here at UMass, we like to think of ourselves as one of those great islands of open-mindedness with beautiful people of peace and love abounding. We say that we find the exploitation of people immoral and repulsive. If this is so, why must we only help to further ingrain the image of the American Indian as one of savagery and brutality by calling ourselves, the REDMEN?

Vicious Journalism

To the Editor:

David Williams' editorial on Harold Koltin was an example of poor and outright vicious journalism. Before Mr. Williams decides to attack anyone, I suggest that he know the facts.

Mr. Williams attacks Harold for not properly following "the ethics normally employed in the newspaper business." If Mr. Williams ever checked out the facts, he would have discovered that one of his own staff colleagues, Bob Nesti, at an ASA meeting, told Harold to write his own article since he was becoming a "burden" on the Collegian. If Mr. Nesti was misinterpreted, it is not Harold's fault. Either Mr. Nesti, as a representative of the Collegian, should learn to express himself more clearly or stop babbling.

Mr. Williams also attacks Harold for his desire to inform the students on this campus about "certain" concerts which are in the planning stages. It seems to me, that if Mr. Williams and only a "select" few students have some privileged information about concerts on this campus which is denied to the rest of us, regardless of reason, then Mr. Williams and those "select" few are, indeed, an elitist group. Kapish, Mr. Williams?

Mr. Williams closes his attack on Harold by saying: If he doesn't quit bitching "he's going to come to grief." When Harold later questioned Mr. Williams as to what this nebulous statement actually meant, Mr. Williams rejoined: If you don't shut up "you're going to get stepped on." Does Mr. Williams, with the aid of the Collegian, now take it upon himself to repress, by force, anyone who complains about things on this campus?

Mr. Williams seems to be unprofessional and detrimental to the Collegian. If the Collegian is to remain a "a free and responsible press" either editorial writers such as Mr. Williams should be removed from the staff, or subject to the same editing policy which everyone else faces.

Yellow journalism was instrumental in starting a war between the U.S. and Spain in 1898 - Something we should not be proud of (sound familiar?). I see no place for this type of journalism in 1971, especially on the UMass campus.

Lawrence Tannenbaum

Ed Note: - Mr. Williams is subject to the same editing policy as everyone else.)

Guiding Light

To the "Editor":

As the guiding light of Yahoo I would like to object to the April Fools publication. 1) I see no reason why the Collegian should want to join in the struggle between the Student Senate Executives, Chancellor Tippo and Yahoo for the distinction of having the poorest taste in campus humor. The Collegian should be satisfied with just having poor taste. 2) I further object to the use of my name with anything that resembles humor. I am considering the initiation of legal action, but am willing to settle out of court if you will renounce your capitalistic ways and stop slanting your news to the middle-of-the-road.

Sickle Cell Anemia

Anemia is a deficiency of hemoglobin, the red coloring matter which is contained in the red blood cells. Hemoglobin is essential in supplying oxygen to all the tissues of the body.

Sickle cell anemia is a condition which the red blood cells are abnormal in shape and contain an abnormal type of hemoglobin. Most of the affected persons are blacks but some are whites of Mediterranean origin. Sickling of the blood has also been reported in American Indians, and in the inhabitants of South India, Middle East and Caribbean countries. Normal red blood cells are disk shape (i.e. biconcave). In sickle cell anemia, the red blood cells assume a crescent or sickle shape, when their supply of oxygen is low. The sickle shape is due to the presence of an abnormal hemoglobin "sickle hemoglobin" which drystallize under conditions of low oxygen tension and distorts the shape of the cell. Sickle cell anemia is so called, as you can see, because the cells assume a crescent or sickle shape.

The life span of normal red blood cells is about 120 days. Worn-out cells are constantly being destroyed and new ones produced. The red cells of the sickle cell anemia patient are readily destroyed and new ones produced. Their life span is often less than 60 days. The person with sicle cell anemia can produce new cells, often at a rapid rate, but he becomes anemic because production can not keep pace with rapid destruction. Sickle cell anemia is an inherited defect of the red blood cells.

This is a dreaded disease which needs to be eradicated and the only way to achieve this is through funds for extensive research. Since we are fortunate enough not to have been born with this disease, please give what you can for the sake of humanity. Once again funds may be sent to Dr. Bromery's office at 375 Whitmore Administration Building, Amherst, Mass. 01002. We would appreciate your support.

Music

By BOB NESTI and
PAT SUPRENAUT
MDC Staff

BOSTON BALLET This acclaimed group returns to Smith this Saturday at 2:30 and 8:30 and Sunday at 2:30 and 8:30, and Wednesday at 4 and 8:30. The series will feature such artists as Edward Villella, Edra Toth, Peter Martins, and Violette Verdy. ($)

DAVID BAR—ILLAN The dynamic Israeli pianist will give two recitals this Tuesday and Wednesday at 8:30 in Bowker. Works of Beethoven, Schubert, and Liszt will be performed. ($)

Theater

Some members of the company rehearse a scene from THE THREE PENNY OPERA, the UMass Music Theatre presentation to be performed through this Sunday in Bowker Auditorium. A review called the production a "devastating satire" in a production that's "well worth seeing". Tickets are on sale at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, Herter Hall and at Bowker an hour before each performance ($)

Films

A FISTFUL OF DOLLARS (Sunday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:30) Clint Eastwood is the Man with No Name is this western, another of Sergio Leone's films that is long on atmosphere and violence.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN FILMS (Saturday, SU Ballroom, 8 and 10) Seven films of the great silent film comic including THE GOLD RUSH, the full length silent film made in 1925 that is considered by many one of Chaplin's finest films.

THE COMMITTEE (Friday, Thompson 104, 7 and 9) A filmed performance of the popular West Coast satire group. Their irreverant humor hits nearly all aspects of American life, from drugs to patriotism, and, although for the most part it's funny, some of it seems dated now.

DRACULA HAS RISEN FROM THE GRAVE (Tuesday, Thompson 104, 6:30 and 11:30) A British-made horror film featuring veteran Dracula character-actor Christopher Lee. Hammer Films Inc. have been making horror movies like this since the mid-Fifties and, despite being a bit heavy-handed, it's great fun.

FUTZ (Friday, Campus Cinema, II) A film version of Rochelle Owen's play about a man who marries a pig, a real pig, and the reaction of the townfolk to his act of beasteality. A production which was derived from off-off Broadway's Cafe LaMama, the often kinky and outrageous group under the direction of Tom O'Horgan, and is hardly for the LOVE STORY crowd.

GEORGY GIRL (Friday and Sunday, Hampden Commons, #5, 7:15 and 9:30) Lynne Redgrave achieved stardom because of her critically-acclaimed portrayal of an ugly duckling in swinging London of a few years back. Alan Bates and James Mason are featured in this film about a young girl's unconventional way to find happiness.

HUSBANDS, (Campus Cinemas) Ben Gazzara, Peter Falk, and John Cassavettes are three men on a binge in this somewhat long and interesting study of middleage. Cassavettes directed some of the finest performances of the year and continues his searing attack on upper-middle class American life.

JENNY (Thursday, SU, 7 and 9:30) A surprisingly-engaging film. Marlo Thomas and Alan Alda are a young couple living together in New York. Some finely-wrought performances and funny situations make it most enjoyable.

LITTLE BIG MAN (Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Showcase Cinemas, W. Springfield) The most critically--acclaimed film of the year. Dustin Hoffman plays the only survivor of Custer's Last Stand and recounts its story. Arthur Penn loosely directed this funny, long, ballad-like, film. Hoffman is very good, but Chief Dan George runs away with the acting honors.

THE LONE RANGER and THE LONE RANGER AND THE LOST CITY OF GOLD (Friday, Thompson 104) The old television hero and his sidekick and their adventures.

LOVE STORY (Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Showcase Cinemas, W. Springfield; Calvin Theatre, Northampton) As someone is Rolling Stone Magazine pointed out, it's really not even worth discussing.

THE POPPY IS ALSO A FLOWER (Friday, Mahar, 6:15 and 9:15) An expensive made-for-television film featuring an all star cast trying to stop a dope shipment. Good public relations for all involved.

THE QUEEN Friday, 11, Campus Cinemas, Hadley) A most-interesting documentary about a beauty pageant held for transvestites.

THERE'S A GIRL IN MY SOUP (Academy of Music, Northampton) A Broadway comedy of some seasons back about a lecher and his attempts to seduce a lovely young lady was made into a fairly amusing comedy thanks to performances of Goldie Hawn and Peter Sellers.

THE SAVAGE EYE and STUDENT FILMS (Sunday, Thompson 104, 7 and 9) A 1959 semi-documentary about a young divorcee living in Los Angeles trying to cope with the anxieties and pressures of American life. It was controversial then for its attention to the more grosteque and repellent aspects of contemporary American life.

Also on the program are some student films from the First New England Student Film Festival. A full program will take place on Wednesday at 6:30 and 8:30 in Thompson 102.

WATERLOO (Showcase Cinemas, W Springfield) A gigantic historical spectacular featuring Rod Steiger as Napoleon, Christopher Plummer, and Orson Welles.

Lectures

The Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial Lecture Series will present a festival of the arts on April 5th through the 9th.

A demonstration and lecture by Harry Hall on "Pottery as a Way of Life" will begin the series on Monday along with a reading and commentary by Mark Van Doren on his own poetry and an exhibit and discussion by Paul Szep, editorial cartoonist of the Boston Globe.

Tuesday will begin with a lecture by Leo Marx on revolutionary pastoralism and a lecture from David Silver, host of "What's happening Mr. Silver" on "How long ago was 1984?"

Effects of psychedelic expreience in art and music will be the topic of Stanley Krippner's lecture on Wednesday. Also underground film maker, Stanley Van Der Beck, will have a media rap-around highlighted by films.

Ed Pincus will lecture Thursday on film production along with a showing of "One Step Away", "Panola", and "Portrait of a McCarthy Supporter".

The series will terminate on Friday with a performance-recitation of "The Ecologues of Virgil" by David Slavitt (Henry Sutton) and Liam Miller lecturing on the 20th Century Irish theater.

All coffee hours will begin immediately after lectures. Lectures will be available to visit interested classes during the day. For further information see the Collegian or call 545-2351.

Albums: short takes

Woodstock Returns

WOODSTOCK TWO. Joan Baez; Butterfield Blues Band; Canned Heat; Crosby, Stills, Nash, and Young; Jimi Hendrix; Jefferson Airplane; Melanie; Mountain; (Cotillion Records)

This is the kind of album that when you first see it, you cringe. That's not because it's a bad album, it's not. Rather, the depressing thought occurs that it will probably follow the fate of its predecessor and be the most frequently played album this Spring. Fifty dollar stereos blasting Alvin Lee and Santana have led me to never want to hear either of them again, and if I hear some liberated beerie or freak play Country Joe's "fish cheer" out a tower window, I swear I'll chuck a rock at it.

For what it's worth, though, this double album does contain some excellent material of groups mildly ignored or disappointing on the earlier set. The side of Hendrix complements and completes what came before. It's true Hendrix was a visual phenomenon, he still was one of the finest guitarists of the late Sixties, and his fifteen minute set here is incredible.

The Airplane are one of the best live bands about, and do their usual fine professional job on two cuts from studio albums, "Saturday Afternoon" from BAXTERS and "Eskimo Blue Day" from VOLUNTEERS. The most exciting cut in this et is the Butterfield Blues Band's "Everything's Gonna Be Alright". Perhaps this underrated and underplayed group will begin to receive the attention flashy groups like Grand Funk sadly seem to merit.

The third side brings on the welcome change of acoustical guitar as Joan Baez does her own "Sweet Sir Galahad". This sound continues as Crosby, Stills, Nash, and Young capture the softness and subtlety, so rare in a live performance and missing from the earlier set, which made their first CS, CY album such a joy. "Guinevere" here is even better.

Melanie was hissed last summer at Harvard Stadium and it's pretty easy to see why. She screeches her hopelessly banal lyrics while playing roughly three chords on her guitar. I think I've heard croaking frogs with a better range. Also the sound quality is pretty poor with Melanie sounding distant and flat, but then again, that may be her style.

Despite the collective talents of Felix Pappalardi and Leslie West, I find Mountain one of the most boring groups about. They play good and their vocals are reasonable, still there doesn't seem much substance beyond echoes of the Cream and the cuts reflect it.

Canned Heat ends the album musically with a very good twelve minute Woodstock Boogie. Side four finally ends with the crowd singing the anthem of our generation "Let the Sunshine In" and it is appropriately short, flat, and hollow.

WOODSTOCK TWO isn't bad at all, but there's probably no point to buying it; just walk through your dorm on a Friday afternoon this Spring and you'll have your fill

Hard and Heavy. Sam Samudio, (Atlantic)

Sam Samudio (remember the Pharaohs?) is making yet another comeback, this time as a blues singer. It's too bad he's beginning to take himself seriously; at least before he was entertaining, now he's a bit ridiculous. Take the front cover, Sam is sitting on a rather--B bikie film. The music is shekly done, yet empty and straining. On the back cover Sam thanks all those, including all his dogs, prostitutes he has known, children and finally God. I think he needs all the help he can get.

Gimme Shelter. Merry Clayton (Ode 70)

Merry Clayton became known because of her work with the Stones on LET IT BLEED. In this excellent album she comes into her own. There's a hard, funky feeling to her voice that gives new feelings to such songs as "Country Road" and "Bridge Over Troubled Waters". She at her best, though, with her material and the title song. The arrangements are all finely done, with the noticeable touch of Billy Preston, the excellent back-up man on the Lennon album.

B.N.

Moonset--Joe Bauer (Warner Bros.--Raccoon)

Joe Bauer, with some of his friends from the Youngbloods and elsewhere, has produced a jam-session record of uneven quality. While at least one of the tracks, "Penguins", is beautiful, most of the record is a very lackadaisical recording in a blues-jazz mix. It's certainly nice, and easy going to a fault.

Earth, Wind, and Fire (Warner Brothers)

At their best, this ten-member band is at least as tight as Chicago, who they kind of resemble but with less emphasis on the brass. They aren't always at their best, though, and this one is further weakened by a lot of rather dumb studio talk, which is even more noticeable because the sides are very short (Side Two is only about 12 minutes long). When they're good, though, they're really good. So are a lot of groups.

Doug Kershaw (Warner Brothers)

Do you like Doug Kershaw? If you do, you'll like the new set, though there's more of a rock influence than I remember from his earlier albums. The standout for me was the pure-Cajun "Son of a Louisiana Man."

Things We Like--Jack Bruce (Atco)

Bruce has emerged as the most inventive of the ex-Creams. "Things we Like" is pure jazz; Bruce plays with John McLaughlin, Dick Heckstall-Smith, and Jon Hiseman. The most exciting match in the record is that between Bruce and Heckstall-Smith on clarinet, expecially on "Ballad for Arthur", and the record as a whole is a fine representation of four true talents.

E.J.

COMPANY. Original Cast Album, (Columbia).

COMPANY is the most acclaimed musical of last season, recently adding the Tony Award to its many honors and this album is ample justification. Stephen Sondheim a most exciting score; his sardonic lyrics cleverly rip apart marriage and city life and his music captures the cold, metallic quality of the city.

The "company" of performers are excellent. Stand-outs are Pamela Myers and Elaine Strich who stunningly-performed two bitter attacks on New York Life.

The orchestrations and record quality are excellent as is everything in this most brilliant musical-comedy.

It's extremely difficult to pick the best numbers, there is something extremely striking about a melody or a lyric (or both) in nearly all of them. There is a very clever parody of the Andrew Sisters entitled "You Can Drive A Person Crazy", a very-splashy, vaudville-style production number called "Side by Side by Side", and a most dramatic finale in "Being Alive".

Often musical-comedy is frowned upon by some for being, at best, shallow, it takes a score like Sondheim's COMPANY to convince them otherwise.

An Expression of Black Spirit

TAKE TWO

Notes From Yale: 1996

By Nathaniel Hayden

I live in Crestdale, a moderate size suburban middle and upper middle class black community located seven miles from Rosemont in central New York. To make a long story short, I'll put in an article that I saw while looking through some of the microfilm copies of the Albany Daily News:

Wednesday, June 9, 1982 A huge area of land located approximately forty miles southwest of Albany has been designated as the site of a satellite city, the construction of which will be subsidized by the federal government. It is hoped that the city, which will be called Rosemont, will provide close to a quarter of a million jobs.

A large group of middle and upper-middle income blacks in New York and Boston got together and decided to buy some of the land around Rosemont to build black towns. These communities are known as Crestdale and New Nairobi. Most of the dwellings are co-operative apartments and single family homes. I think the main purpose for the creation of these communities was to be in the position to say to whites, "See, we can do it too." They are very much like the Jewish ghettoes on Long Island or outside of Boston. The only major difference I can see is that instead of going to the Catskills during the summer, our parents go to several resorts which have sprung up recently near the Adirondacks.

"The pressure created by the intense competition is phenomenally destructive."

The intense competition in both towns is pathetic. In my high school each year, elite scholars are chosen from the top 1% of each class, scholars top 2-5%, honor students from the top 6-10% and the avant-garde from the top 11-20%. Whenever a student graduates in one of these categories, his parents usually have a huge party for him. I call these parties the BPO's, which means the Big Pay Off's. The pressures are unbelieveable. I'll mention them anyway. Each year, our principal went to a public meeting with principals of all high schools in the Metropolitan Rosemont area, to compare the percentages of kids from each of their schools who would be attending the "good or best" colleges and universities the following term.

During the junior year in high school, students who would represent Crestdale High on the student quiz show on television called "It's All Academic" were selected from the top fifth of the class. My God, I think the way in which kids fought over the opportunity to appear on the show exemplifies the Rat Race perfectly. Several months before a panel of four is supposed to appear on the show, each school has preliminary screening. They line up about ten prospective panelists in the dining hall. They are barraged with questions for about twenty minutes. The two or three who get the highest number of points are told to prepare for another barrage the following day. The one who answers the highest number of questions correctly becomes the one who will go on the panel of four who appear on the show. The same procedure is followed for the other thirty or so kids being considered. The method fluctuates according to the number of kids who are interested. A large number of the students who are eligible try out each year. This is because if our panel wins the game, the students involved are given a full scholarship for their first year in college.

The pressure created by the intense competition is phenomenally destructive. If a student doesn't make it into one of the IVYES or one of their subsidiaries and instead goes to the state university, he often feels as if his life has ended. They actually think their lives depend on which college they attend. Another thing, if you say you want to be anything besides a doctor, lawyer, engineer or professor, you're considered a drawback. Recalling that fact immediately reminds me of all the times I trembled when I got less than a 90 or A on an exam. I knew that my parents would take some kind of sanctions (such as depriving me of my paltry allowance for a couple of weeks) and my teacher would strongly urge me to cut down on my extracurricular activities (like eating, sleeping, etc.).

I would say that the pressure waned slightly after we took our SAT's and Achievement Tests. Then it was simple, we would either live "the good life" or be damned to a fate worse than death depending on the results. My results, 770 verbal, 690 math and achievement tests marks in the low 700's and mid-600's, were in the words of my father, "barely acceptable". about earlier. The most successful students are the ones who completely accept the pressures. Thus, it was their idea to create "The Nobility."

I'm sitting here wondering, "What the hell are our parents going to gain by continuing the pressure? What more do they want? I'm going to list some of the statistics that Crestdale High School recently issued:

The college acceptances and rejections are all in. Of the students who will definitely graduate, 87% will enter four year colleges, 8% will enter junior colleges, and only 5% will not continue their education. Here is a list of the number accepted by a few of the top colleges and the average board scores of the entering students compared to the average board scores of the freshmen classes at the prospective schools:

"Racism is rampant in Crestdale and New Nairobi. There isn't a white family in either community."

The impact of this chauvinism on my fellow black college students is worth noting at this point. What do we do when we are freed from the system for long lengths of time? Here at Yale, and at most of the Ivy League schools for that matter, the black students come predominantly from the following communities:

1) Crestdale 2) New Rochelle 3) New Nairobi Bethesda-Chevy Chase 5) Shaker Heights

Any black student who isn't from one of the "Big Five" is ignored. He or she is automatically excluded from the big events that take place amongst black students. Due to this, a large number transfer to the University of Michigan and other state universities where students from the "Big Five" do not constitute a majority. Since there are large numbers of blacks now applying to colleges, admissions officers choose blacks from the same communities which produced the highest number of students who stayed until graduation, i.e. the "Big Five". This of course has caused the majority of black students from the Big Five to grow larger in numbers. Black students who are not from one of the Big Five are often ostracized because they are not members of "The Nobility". "The Nobility" was created seven years ago by students from New Nairobi at Harvard. Membership in "The Nobility" is bestowed only on black students from the Big Five who are in the top half of their college class. I was thrown out once because a couple of terms ago, my ranking dropped down to the 47th percentile! The organization is a direct result of the continual pressures that I spoke

"I'm sitting here wondering, What the hell are our parents going to gain by continuing the pressure?"

Since there will be approximately 1250 graduates, 13 students will be elite scholars. This year they are:

"He went to Hampshire College, which at that time was considered a very experimental college."

One of my friends who is a student at Cornell told me that until recently every application from either Crestdale, Northeast (Crestdale), New Nairobi Central, or New Nairobi South H.S.'s was immediately stamped ACCEPTED. Of course there is a degree of hyperbole in that statement, but the percentage of students from these schools in the population of the elite colleges is phenomenally high. The situation has become so bad (or good, depending on your opinion about Crestdale and New Nairobi) that each year thousands of parents, white and black, beg to be allowed to move into one of the communities, or at least be able to pay to have their children sent to one of them. The most frightening thing about all of this is that fact that after graduation from college and graduate school, members of "the Nobility" usually return to the towns of their youth. These two processes, the ever-growing number of applications for residency by newcomers and the return of "the Nobility" will increase the "Big Five" to enormous proportions. Therefore these pressure compounds grow bigger and bigger, another and another every year.

These towns have been lauded by many whites as "Symbols of the Emergence of The New Black Man". Many others want to stop it because it is a grave threat to the status quo. What can I say, however? The System has taught me how to compete successfully with the ever increasing demands society is making in order to move up the socioeconomic ladder. The System has given me a great deal of confidence. The thing I don't like about it is that everything is rigidly, precisely defined. When every point in your life is clearly mapped out before you, the only thing you can do is follow it. You don't dare go to the right or to the left because there is an ever present feeling that if you do, you will be plunged into an abyss from which there is no escape.

My father is quite different from me. He always liked to have things clearly delineated. It's weird. He went to Hampshire College, which at that time was considered a very experimental college. It's hard to imagine him, MY FATHER, in an experimental college. He tells me that even then he knew that he wanted to become a lawyer. When I asked why he went there he told me, "I knew that if I had enough self-discipline to study hard and graduate from a school such as Hampshire, I would have little difficulty adjusting to law school. I once read that the more experimental the college one attended, the better one does in a traditional graduate school." I have often argued with him because he had practically prepared a blueprint for life at the age of seventeen. It always ended with him asking the question, "Would it have been better if I had been a dilettante, not knowing in which direction I was heading?" To this question I have no reply, and it forces me to ask myself what I would have done

Senate Investigates 'War Research'

WASHINGTON (WCNS)—The explosive issue of "war research," which attracted so much attention on the campuses a year ago, resurfaced here last week with the start of new Senate hearings on the Defense Department's (DOD) $7.88 billion request for "research and development."

This figure includes $205 million for the academic establishment. But the significant fact in this request, according to Dr. Carl M. York of the White House's Office of Science and Technology, is that the Administration is quietly shifting its priorities for funding basic research.

In an interview on the state of "war research" after last Spring's demonstrations brought the issue to national attention, York noted that the DOD share of academic research not only has decreased from the level of the last year of the Johnson administration ($252.8 million), but also has been surpassed for the second year by the share allotted to the National Science Foundation (NSF) ($387 million in 1972 vs. $212.6 million in 1969).

Countering protestors' arguments that DOD money has no place in a university campus, York said that the academic community has a very necessary role to play in DOD.

"Our underlying assumption is that DOD should not be banned from the academic community," he began.

First off, "ROTC must be maintained in order to insure that a volunteer army's officer corps not include boot-camp-types without a leavening idea in their heads."

Second, DOD needs the new ideas generated by basic research grants on university campuses.

Sen. Mike Mansfield (D—Mont.) accepted this assumption last year, too. York suggested, when he succeeded in amending the DOD appropriation bill to restrict research grants to "strictly defense-related projects."

"I think Sen. Mansfield's intent," York said, "was to warn the research establishment to carry out a careful scrutiny of all projects. His amendment had its desired effect, to make other departments as well as Defense sharpen up their procedures and shape up their programs."

Although the amendment no longer applies in the new budget, York said, the Administration is not seeking to increase DOD funds on campus.

"The presence of DOD money on campus," York emphasized, "is completely unrelated to the Vietnam War. The academic community's message on this subject comes through loud and clear: 'Get Out Of Vietnam Now.' The President is answering that consistently with 'We're Trying.'"

"Once that issue is clear in everyone's mind," he added, "then you can say with safety that every thinking member of the university community recognizes that ours is not utopia; that we must be prepared to defend the US, even in peacetime. Therefore, one must conclude that the interaction between campus and Defense must continue."

DOD, he continued, "depends on basic research for new technology. If you accept the fact that the country must be defended, this assumption is given. This $205 million level—which we plan to keep constant—is the government's way of insuring some degree of interaction exists between the defense and academic establishments. Universities will thus act as critics of DOD research projects and sounding boards for future ideas."

"This money," he added, "is provided not for the welfare of university professors and graduate students—as some kind of subsidy—but for the good of the Defense Department."

Rebel Forces Capture Key East Pakistan City

NEW DELHI (AP)—Rebel forces in East Pakistan captured Thursday the key city of Jessore 80 miles southwest of Dacca, the provincial capital, newsmen returning from the scene reported.

The Pakistan government charged it has reports of armed Indians infiltrating border areas of East Pakistan to join the secessionist forces. An Indian Foreign Office spokesman in New Delhi denied the charge.

"We went all over the town freely," said a Swedish reporter who returned to India after visiting Jessore with several other correspondents. "There wasn't a Punjabi soldier in sight. It is liberated, or whatever you call it."

Reporters said they saw East Pakistan civilians cut down at least 12 West Pakistan businessmen with spears and knives on the streets of Jessore.

They said all businesses were closed and no women or children were in sight.

Bus loads of Bengalis from rural areas were coming into the city to join the fight against the Pakistan army, witnesses said.

The reports said forces loyal to breakaway leader Sheik Mujibur Rahman battled for three hours with Pakistan soldiers occupying strategic points in the city of about 300,000.

West Pakistani units, the report said, retreated to a camp about a mile from town where they began shelling suspected concentrations of resistance fighters. Witnesses said civilian had already been evacuated and the artillery did little damage.

However, the official Radio Pakistan continued to maintain President Agha Monhammed Yahya Kahn's government had crushed the rebellion.

"All major towns, including Dacca and Chittagong, and the entire countryside in East Pakistan, continue to be calm today and there is no report of any incident," the radio announcement said.

Other reports from along India's 1,349-mile border with East Pakistan, however, indicated Mujib's forces still control vast regions of the province's rural areas.

CC Print shop Offers Services

The Campus Center Printing Shop offers a wide range of services to the University community. Their Xerox 7000 is capable of reducing copy size, thus frequently reducing cost. They have mimeograph and spirit duplicating facilities.

The sign-making machinery includes both linoscribe and embosograf equipment. For a Specialized touch an artist is available for design.

They have professional typesetting equipment which produces camera-ready copy suitable for offset printing.

The Printing Shop also handles the advertising inside the campus shuttle buses.

House Dems. See Wage Hike

WASHINGTON (AP)—House Democrats, saying the war on poverty is being lost, opened a drive Thursday for a two-step increase in the minimum wage from $1.60 an hour to $2.

Speaker Carl Albert promised speedy action on the legislation, which also would extend federal minimum wage protection to an estimated seven million state and local employees.

Although Congress last raised the minimum wage in 1966, when it was $1.25, the final step to $1.60 went into effect just eight weeks ago in some industries.

Albert said the increase in consumer prices since 1966 has outstripped the pay raise, leaving workers at the minimum level worse off than they were five years ago.

The push for a minimum wage increase marks another attempt by congressional Democrats to take the offensive against the administration in trying to prop up the economy. Bills to provide public service jobs for the unemployed and to speed up public works construction in areas of high unemployment also are being rushed through Congress under Democratic colors.

The administration declined an invitation to testify on a minimum wage increase last year. But at a news conference in January, Labor Secretary Jame S D. Hodgson said the effect of the last increase on unemployment figures should be studied before a new boost is provided.

Albert, who appeared at a news conference with Rep. John H. Dent, D—Pa., chief sponsor of the new legislation, said a family of four is better off on welfare now than it would be if forced to exist on the $1.60 an hour wage.

The combination of rising unemployment and inflation, Albert said, added more than one million people to the poverty ranks last year after the number had dropped sharply during the previous decade.

Communique Revolt Ends In One Day

QUITO, Ecuador (AP)—A disgruntled general's one-day revolt against the regime of President Jose Maria Velasco Ibarra ended Thursday the way it began-with a communique. Not a shot was fired in the interim.

Gen. Francisco Guzman, undersecretary of defense announced in a communique that the rebel leader, Gen. Luis Jacome Chavez, had surrendered to the army commander in chief, Gen. Julio Sacoto Montero.

Communique Issued

One day earlier, Jacome Chavez and his fellow rebels had issued a communique announcing their revolt against Velasco Ibarra, elected president of Ecuador five times and ousted three times.

The rebels threw in the sponge a few hours after they had claimed mounting support for their cause. Jacome Chavez had claimed backing of the army's airborne battalion and "military units throughout the country."

The announcement of the coup's demise said Jacome Chavez had assumed full responsibility for the uprising but 50 officers from Ecuador's War Academy were reported under barracks detention.

General Retired

Jacome Chavez had headed the War Academy, but was ousted Tuesday. He was also ordered retired from the army.

The short-lived coup was not aimed at 78-year-old Velasco Ibarra himself, but at his nephew, Jorge Acosta Velasco, who as defense minister is considered by many the strong man of the regime.

The rebels demanded the ouster of Acosta Velasco from control of the Defense Ministry and the replacement of Sacoto Montero as army chief.

Threaten Force

The insurgents had threatened to take forceful measures unless their demands were met. They accused Acosta Velasco of destroying morale in the armed forces with dictatorial methods.

Acosta Velasco rejected the rebels' demands and announced that "any attitude contrary to orders will necessarily have to be punished."

With word that the coup had collapsed, Valasco Ibarra swung into action, rounding up his political opponents.

Concrete Pouring In Tower Library

The concrete of the Tower Library is being poured at the rate of half a floor about every two weeks. Each individual pour, accomplished in one day, uses twenty-three truckloads (230 cubic yards) of concrete. At press time, the second half of the floor numbered three more than the numbering indicates, since the entrance floor, main floor (one level down), and lower floor (below the main floor) are unnumbered. Work is also progressing on the south section of the lower and main floors, which will be topped by a ground-level terrace when complete. The building should be ready for occupancy during the fall of 1972 unless there are serious unscheduled delays.

The Physical Sciences Library should be completed structurally by early summer of 1971. However, the utilities are tied in with the Chemistry tower, completion of which is expected in the fall. An analysis is being made now to determine whether it will be practical to occupy the library before completion of the entire contract.

SORRY — WE GOOFED

THE SENIOR PHOTOGRAPHER WILL BE BACK NEXT WEEK FOR FINAL SITTINGS. MAKE APPOINTMENTS NOW IN THE INDEX OFFICE, S. U.

Student Teaching Program To Start

A Summer Program for student teaching will be starting in Greenfield, Mass.

The program will commence June 9, 1971, and end July 30, 1971, with practice teaching beginning July 28, and lasting five weeks until July 30.

The teaching day will begin at 7:45 a.m. and end at 3:00 p.m., Monday through Friday. The first 2-1/2 weeks of the program will consist of classroom observation in the Greenfield schools during their regular session (which ends June 25), supervisory seminars, and curriculum seminars. Methods will NOT be offered in this summer teaching program. All courses should be completed prior to this summer program.

Criteria for selection will give preference to seniors graduating in January 1972, and then to each class after the senior class. Masters candidates and other students.

Each student application will be reviewed by Jerry Freiberg and final acceptance will be given by the Greenfield School District.

The summer teaching program will demand a great deal from the student. He will be responsible for remedial and enrichment programs. A substantial reading list will be required prior to the first seminar, and the student will be teaching up to three 2-hour classes per day.

Ten credits will be given for the entire program at the regular summer school rates.

Applications are available in Room 100, School of Education and must be returned to that office no later than April 8. A maximum of 22 students will be accepted into the program.

Please contact Jerry Freiberg in Room 100 or call 545-1533 if there are any questions.

Turnball Speaker At Tech. Dinner

James R. Turnbull, executive vice president of the National Forest Products Association will be the principal speaker at the annual Wood Science and Technology Student-Industry Dinner Monday, April 5, at 7 p.m. in the UMass Campus Center.

Mr. Turnbull, member of the President's Export Expansion Council and the International Committee of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, and director of the Executive Committee of the American Forest Institute, will address the assemblage of over 100 students, key industry personnel and educators on the major problems relating to providing the nation with the fiber products needed to meet housing and other critical production demands.

He has been executive vice-president of the American Plywood Association, and has served as chief executive of Western Wood Products Association. WWPA, headquartered in Portland, Oregon, is the nation's largest lumber trade association.

During the early sixties, Turnbull served as an associate with DeBell & Richardson, Inc., of Hazardville, Conn., consultants and consulting engineers. He was also a personal consultant to Ethyl Corp., Mitsubishi Rayon Corp., Borg Warner Corp., Rexall Drug and Chemical Co., Mobil Chemicals, Amos-Thompson Corp., and American Viscose Corp., mainly on overseas joint ventures.

The wood science and technology and wood utilization programs at UMass which have been developed in the past 10 years, now have an enrollment of over 75 students and almost 200 alumni, many of whom are in key positions in the wood and service related industries throughout the United States.

The annual dinner brings the Industrial Advisory Council for the program, other key industry representatives, alumni and students together to give the students an opportunity to learn of the industry's concern for them and the opportunities available.

Room To Move

Drug Seminars Starting

A series of events will take place in the upcoming week which we wish to recommend to all who have interest in the influence of drugs on our culture. The first of these events will be the New England Crisis Center Conference to be held April 2-4 and sponsored by Clearinghouse. All people working at crisis centers and anyone who wishes to get involved are invited to attend. Further information is available at Clearinghouse, in the Student Union.

The second event in the series will be a presentation by the Room-to-Move staff entitled, The Psychedelic Experience: Self-Help Techniques for Working With Bad Trips. It will be offered at 8:00 on Monday, April 5, in Thompson 102.

The evening progam will begin with a lecture given by Room-to-Move staff member, Dan Brown. His evolving speciality is in counseling bad trips. He teaches a seminar in the psychology department, Psych 392, "A Critical Analysis of the Psychedelic Experience" and another seminar entitled "Altered States of Consciousness" which presents humanistic and existential approaches to the study of dreams, hypnagogic states, psychedelic drugs, hypnosis, trance, fantasy, and religious experience.

The lecture to be presented Monday night is a synthesis of some of the material evolving from these courses and from his work at Room-to-Move.

The first part of the lecture will provide information on drug availablity; drawing from the drug analization program at Room-to-Move, the lecture will attempt to dissolve the myths about what psychedelic drugs people think they take and what they actually take.

The second part of the lecture will attempt to provide clarity on the variety of experiences commonly called "bad trips", and to explain techniques that should be known to people who use psychedelic drugs in case they or their friends have a bad experience. Techniques to be covered will be non-verbal techniques, verbal and talk techniques, imagery techniques, hypnosis, and various types of folkmedicines.

The third part of the lecture will be to provide information on how to minimize the dangers for those who use psychedelic drugs regularly. After the lecture, there will be small group discussions led by members of the Room-to-Move staff.

The third event will be a number of presentations by Dr. Stanley Krippner, Director, Menninger Dream Clinic. Dr. Klippner is involved in active research in dreams, parapsychology, hypnosis, human potential, psychedelic drugs and is the author of over 100 articles in these areas. He is also advisor to LSD Rescue Squad of New York City and leading authority on crisis intervention with drugs.

As you may remember, Dr. Krippner spoke at the University last November on the topic of "Paranormal Experiences in Communes"--this was research done by visiting and living in various communes in the United States over the last three years. At that time, he also gave a training session on drug counseling with the Room-to-Move staff.

On Wednesday, April 7, Dr. Krippner will return to the University sponsored by the Martin Luther King Festival of Arts and the D.V.P. Program. He will offer another training session to Room-to-Move on non-verbal drug therapy on Wednesday morning. In the afternoon he will speak at the Surrealist Festival and at 6:30 Wednesday evening, in the Student Union Ballroom, he will give an open lecture entitled "The Effects of the Psychedelic Experience on Art and Music" which will be followed by an open coffee hour in the Dukes Room. At 9:30 he will present a paper entitled "Educational Strategies and Drug Abuse" to the area health and mental health services.

People who use drugs are particularly advised to take advantage of these programs; a practical wisdom is to be learned. These presentations might provide helpful suggestions on how to better take care of you and your friends if you have a bad experience and how to learn to use these drugs in the safest ways. All other people are encouraged to attend in order to learn general information, for we believe that there is no such thing as a "drug problem" or a "drug culture". Drug usage penetrates our entire technological society.

What we hope to provide is unbiased information which should be listened to by all people if they are to understand motivations and drug experiences in a rational way. These events are a rare opportunity for such education. We urge all to attend.

PUT IT ALL TOGETHER WITH S&H GREEN STAMP COLLEGIATE MARKETING PROGRAM

Nowadays it's difficult to get all the things you want . . . to satisfy all your needs. As a member of a college organization, you can use your group buying power to "put it all together" by collecting S&H Green Stamps. We call it Groupower.
We have helped campus groups like yours all over the country achieve their goals in this exciting, simple way. These include micro buses, house furnishings, appliances and Christmas toy donations for children to name just a few. And the goals can be group travel, scholarship funds, CARE packages, or anything your group needs.
If there is something your group wants, look up the S&H Campus Rep. He or she will visit your house or group and explain how easy it is when you let S&H help you "put it all together" with Groupower.

Physicists Meet On Environment

Physicists from the New England area will hold a two-day meeting at Amherst College April 2-3. A symposium on "Physics and the Environment" and a tutorial on "Nonlinear Optics" will be open to the public.

The symposium on "Physics and the Environment" will be held Friday, April 2 at 2:30 p.m. in Merrill Science Lecture 1. The public is invited to hear three distinguished scientists at this session. George Reynolds of Princeton University will discuss "One Physicist's Response to Air Pollution." David Inglis (Amherst '28) of the University of Massachusetts faculty will speak on "Nuclear Energy and the Malthusian Dilemma." Alan Haught (Amherst '58) of United Aircraft Research Laboratories will speak of "Prospects for Fusion Power."

The public is also invited to the tutorial on "Nonlinear Optics" Saturday, April 3 at 9 a.m. in Merrill Science Lecture 1. Scientists featured in the tutorial are P.L. Kelley of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology's Lincoln Laboratories, speaking on "Introduction to Nonlinear Optics;" George L. Lamb, Jr. of United Aircraft Research Laboratories ("Analytinal Descriptions of Ultrashort Optical Pulse Propagation"); and N. Bloembergen of Harvard University ("Conservation Laws in Nonlinear Optics").

Sessions are open to the public.

Nixon Fiscal Budget Notes Grad Research

WASHINGTON-President Nixon's fiscal budget for federal support of scientific research on the nation's campuses has two main emphases:

Support of research--particularly basic research--would increase, while programs to enlarge the capacity of universities to produce Ph.D.'s in science would decrease.

Research to help solve social problems, such as environmental pollution, crime, health, and transportation, would get increased federal support.

These trends were most apparent in the budget of the National Science Foundation, which would be $622-million, a $116-million increase over the current year.

The largest increase in the NSF budget--$81.9-million--would be for support of research projects, bringing the total to $257.8-million. Most of this would go for basic research on the campuses, although the foundation also supports some research by industry and private research institutes.

The foundation estimated that it would be able to finance 5,300 research grants averaging $48,000 each for 7,700 scientists and 7,200 graduate students in 450 institutions. Last year NSF estimated that it supported 3,970 research projects.

"The budget this year is really concerned with keeping the young investigators alive," said William D. McElroy, director of NSF.

In contrast, funds for NSF programs of institutional support for science and science education would decrease under the Nixon budget.

Funds for NSF's science education program would drop from $100.6-million to $77.3-million under the Nixon budget. The most drastic reductions would be in direct student support, where most programs were being dropped or phased out.

Mr. McElroy said some of the students who lost fellowships and traineeships would be able to get support through research grants.

The cutbacks in student and institutional support reflected the federal government's concern over the growing surplus of Ph.D.'s in many scientific disciplines.

Edward E. David, Jr., President Nixon's science advisor, said one goal of federal science policy was to increase the number of doctorates in fields where there were shortages, while reducing the number of Ph.D.'s being produced in disciplines where there was a surplus.

Mr. McElroy said that NSF had no plans to directly affect the numbers of Ph.D.'s in various fields, but he indicated that it might do so indirectly through the kind of research it supported. For example, he said, the new emphasis on research projects aimed at helping solve social problems "will undoubtedly attract new people."

CUSHING, Okla., WAR CRIMINALS?--Cushing veterans Stanley Gertner, left, and Richard Whalen protested the court-martial conviction of Lt. William Calley Tuesday by asking police to jail them as "war criminals" for action they committed in World War II and Korea. They say if Calley is guilty, so are they. The lockup was just for pictures--police did not jail the men.

UMass Faculty Rounds-Up

Prof. Lillian R. Goodman, acting dean of the UMass School of Nursing, has participated in the Washington, D.C. gathering of the American Association of Deans of College and University Schools of Nursing.

In addition to speaking with deans from schools throughout the nation, Dean Goodman and others in the Massachusetts delegation met with Senator Edward M. Kennedy to discuss their vital concern for improving the delivery of health care.

Walter G. O'Donnell, professor of management in the School of Business Administration at UMass in Amherst, is in Washington, D.C., this week to present a paper at the 18th International Meeting of the Institute of Management Sciences.

Prof. O'Donnell's findings, titled "Toward Unifying the Management Sciences," took four years of intermittent research with support from a grant by the Research Council of UMass. He is presenting the findings to the College of Management Philosophy of the Institute, whose purpose it is "to identify, extend and unify scientific knowledge contributing to the understanding and practice of management."

Tennis Team Opens Today

By SAMUEL FIRENZO
MDC Staff

Tomorrow afternoon the UMass varsity tennis team will face Boston College in its season opener. The 1 p.m. match, to be held on the courts behind Goodell Library will pit UMass against a totally revamped B.C. team.

Captain Alan Goldberg will lead the team at first singles and fellow senior John Bloom will play second singles. Bloom has recently been hampered by a weak ankle and Coach Kosakowski might rest the senior depending on his pre-match status.

Three other singles positions are definite for tomorrow's match. Bob Webman and Mark Brass, both freshmen, will be playing in the number three and four spots respectively. In the number five slot is sophomore Steve Ferber, the top singles player from last year's freshmen squad.

The number six spot is still a question-mark, and Coach Kosakowski is deciding between juniors Chris Coffin and Jim Bonheim, and freshman Fred Braley.

In a way of doubles Coach Kosakowski is still working on combinations. Thus far Coffin and Bloom, and Brass and Bornheim look like sure-fire doubles teams against B.C. Goldberg will be paired with either Webman or Braley; again things are only tentative.

Coach Kosakowski commented, "If we don't win the B.C. match then we're in for a long season, but since they have a totally new ballclub, they'll hardly be pushovers."

Tigers Trip Sox, 13-12

LAKELAND, Fla. (AP)-Gene Lamont capped a 22-hit attack with a bases-loaded pinch single with two out in the ninth inning yesterday, lifting the Detroit Tigers to a wild 13-12 victory over the Boston Red Sox in a Florida exhibition windup.

RII

The Red Sox, who collected 20 hits, moved ahead 12-10 with three runs in the ninth, but southpaw reliever Sparky Lyle, the fourth Boston pitcher, was unable to check the Tigers in their half of the inning.

A single by Aurelio Rodriguez, an infield hit by Mickey Stanley and walk loaded the bases with two out. Ceasar Guttierez beat out an infield chopper for one run. Then Lamont lined a single to right center on Lyle's first pitch for the two deciding runs. It was Lamont's first hit this spring.

Rookie second baseman Doug Griffin and centerfielder Billy Conigliaro had four hits each and combined to spark Boston's ninth-inning rally which was wasted. George Scott had three singles and finished Florida training with 14 hits in his last 20 times at bat, raising his average to .453.

Carl Yastrzemski and Reggie Smith, tuning up for the American League opener in Boston Tuesday, each contributed two-run homers and drove across tallies with sacrifice flies.

The Tigers, bombed 17-1 by the Chicago White Sox Wednesday, unloaded as Boston's pitching collapsed entirely. Detroit collected at least two hits in every inning against Bill Lee, Bob Bolin, Cal Koonce and Lyle.

Rodriguez, Stanley, Jim Northrup and Jim Price led the Tigers' hit parade with three safeties each. Guttierez, who entered the game as a pinch runner in the sixth, had a pair of key singles.

Dean Chance, picked up from the New York Mets, made his first appearance on the mound for the Tigers. The veteran righthander, a former ace with the Minnesota Twins, was rocked for five runs in the first two innings.

Chance's successors also were hit hard by the Red Sox, but the Boston pitching was just as bad and the Tigers head from Florida with a 13-14 record. Detroit will play two games en route home.

The Red Sox, who will break camp Saturday morning and play weekend exhibition games in Birmingham, Ala. and New Orleans, finished Florida pre-season training with a 12-14 record.

Trevino Shares Lead; Player Well Back

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP)-Lee Trevino charged with a 67 and gained a share of the first-round lead Thursday in the $190,000 Greater Tournament while Gary Player's dreams of a third consecutive triumph took a severe jolt.

Player, the tough little South African who won the last two tour events and is defending champion here, struggled in with a four-over-par 75 and was far back in the field.

Trevino, one of the last to finish in the dusk, was tied at four-under-par with New Zealand left-hander Bob Charles, and veteran Miller Barber.

Five more were just one stroke off the pace at 68.

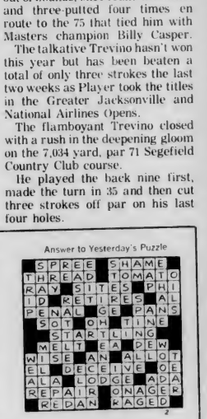
They are Australian Bruce Crampton, former Masters champ Art Wall, Pete Brown, Dave Eichelberger and tour sophomore Jack Lewis.

National Amateur champion Lanny Wadkins headed a big group at 69.

The discouraged Player hit one out of bounds, once found the water and three-putted four times en route to the 75 that tied him with Masters champion Billy Casper.

The talkative Trevino hasn't won this year but has been beaten a total of only three strokes the last two weeks as Player took the titles in the Greater Jacksonville and National Airlines Opens.

The flamboyant Trevino closed with a rush in the deepening gloom on the 7,034 yard, par 71 Segefield Country Club course.



He played the back nine first, made the turn in 35 and then cut three strokes off par on his last four holes.

Erving Rumored Signed By ABA

By PETER PASCARELLI
Special To The Collegian

UMass basketball star Julius Erving, said yesterday that he has been in contact with American Basketball Association teams, but would not comment about whether he has signed, has not signed, for how big an offer or with what team. He has been rumored to have signed a $500,000 pact with the Virginia Squires.

Erving, who is a junior, with one more year of college eligibility left, said a in a Boyden corridror in answer to questions about his rumored signing with the ABA, "I really can't say anything." When asked to comment on remarks he is reported by the Associated Press to have said concerning contract size, Erving said, "I have'nt said anything to anyone."

Erving, who seemed as friendly and personable as he ever he is, and who talked about everything else, would not make any other comment about the situation other than he has talked with ABA people. He made his comments after conferring with UMass coach Jack Leaman for almost an hour in Leaman's office.

Leaman, obviously, shaken and disappointed by the rumored signing, said, "I don't know anything more than anyone. I guess they have told him not to discuss at all.

"I'll say frankly, that I'm not very encouraged I've never dealt with people like this ABA though, that make everything a big secret. If what they do is right, why must it be a secret?"

The coach went on to say bitterly, "What really burns me up is that no one has called me, no one has contacted me. I don't hear a thing. I didn't hear anything until last week when I was in Houston for the NCAA titles. Then I heard Monday that he had talked to people and had gone to Philadelphia to confer. I felt then he was going to sign.

"It's just a political move," Leaman went on, "to bring about a merger between the two leagues."

The coach reiterated over and over again that he has no bitterness toward Julius personally.

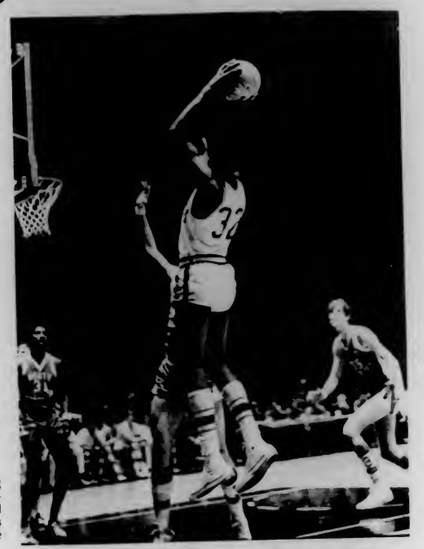
FRIDAY, APRIL 2, 1971

"This is his decision to make. Myself, and my assistant Ray Wilson (Erving's high school coach) have talked to him but what can you say in the face of the amounts of money they are throwing at him.

"He's a mature kid. And he will just have to sit down and figure out what's best for himself. If the reports about him signing for $500,000 or whatever are true, then that would make him comfortable for life. That's what a coach hopes for, I guess, to see his kids, become secure. If he's set for life than that's good for him.



It's just such a disappointing and disgusting thing to see pro people tempt a 20 year old kid like this."

UMass Director of Athletics, Warren P. McGuirk, said, "I'm of course terribly disappointed if this should happen. But we at the university should be thankful that Julius gave us such two wonderful years. An opportunity for security sometimes comes only once in life, and maybe this is his. It sickens me though to think of the implications things like this have for college athletics. Why we are threatened now with seeing outstanding freshman athletes never playing varsity ball."

A spokesman for the Virginia Squires, Publicity Director Andy Cox, said in Norfolk, sardonically, "Why I've never heard of him? What's his name? How good is he?" And a spokesman for ABA commissioner Jack Dolph said when asked to comment on Erving's report of ABA contact, "A lot of young men want to play pro ball. I don't have any knowledge of him at all. Is he a senior?"

Erving is reportedly being represented by Pro Sports Incorporated, a New York based firm that represents athlete's contracts. They were unavailable for contact.

If Erving does, or in fact already has, signed, he would be the fourth underclassman signed by the maverick ABA. Erving would join, Univ. of Detroit's Spencer Haywood, Michigan State's Ralph Simpson and Mississippi's Johnny Neumann. In addition the ABA may have signed this year players who have continued to play varsity ball after signing. The players that have signed as underclassmen, were said to be hardship cases. It is not known if Erving is being contracted under the same provision.

SIGNED OR NOT?-UMass basketball star Julius Erving is rumored to have signed a pro basketball contract with the American Basketball Association. Erving is mum on the story as is the ABA. (MDC photo by Gib Fullerton)

Tennis Team Boasts Depth And Quality

By SAMUEL FIRENZO
MDC Staff

About to embark on its 1971 season, the UMass varsity tennis team finds depth as its number one asset. As evidence of its great depth, Coach Stephen Kosakowski is contemplating using eight men during the course of one match, contrary to the traditional six.

In the halls of Boyden, and the confines of the Cage since the middle of February, the netmen have been working out. Due to lack of space the tennis team has been making use of any and all empty space around the campus. The squash courts served as an inadequate practice area for the team, as everyone waited for the snow to clear on the 12 courts behind Goodell Library.

Coach Kosakowski said "This year I think we have the largest number of good quality players that we've ever had. There are about 12 strong candidates in the running for positions, and still about others that haven't been tried.

Heading the list of the top 11 candidates is Captain Alan Goldberg, one of three returning lettermen. John Bloom will also be making a return appearance, as he and Goldberg are the only seniors on the squad.

In the way of juniors Jim Bornheim is the third man to have played on the 1970 tennis squad, Chris Coffin is the other half of the junior constituency and Coach Kosakowski is high on him.

Sophomores Steve Ferber and Dave Bellware are two more of the candidates. Both were members of last year's freshman squad, and both are hoping for spots on the varsity level.

Rounding out the line host of prospects are five freshmen. The 1971 season will mark the first year of freshman eligibility in tennis, and Fred Braley, Mark Brass, Lou Kessing, Mark Lundberg, and Bob Webman are five underclassmen looking to benefit by this rule.

Coach Kosakowski feels quite justified in starting any one of these freshmen. "Most of the newcomers have had enough tennis experience and tournament play to justify their making the team. Also most of them have had good high echool competition which should also help them in making the adjustment to college ball," said Kosakowski.

Kosakowski brings a 139-56 record over a 22 year span in to the 1971 season. He has had only one losing season among those 22 years, and he doesn't see his second one anywhere in sight.

In those 22 seasons only twice did a Redmen team finish lower than second in the Yankee Conference. With ten conference titles in that span, number 11 is in the making for this season.

"I think we've got a real good shot at the title this year. Rhode Island, which took it last season, and, UConn will be our toughest competition, but I definitely think we can take it."

Leaman Labels Season "Fantastic"

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

"Fantastic season" was the label head basketball coach Jack Leaman gave to his team's 23-4 performance yesterday in looking back over the past season.

"I don't think anybody thought we would be this good," the coach went on to say. "There were a lot of question marks for us before the season began. Kenny Mathias was coming off a bad season, Mike Pagliara was trying to fill in for Ray Ellerbrook, the fourth highest scorer in UMass history and Chris Coffin had to take the place of Jack Gallagher who was the most underrated player to come out of UMass.

All three did great jobs for me this season, I'm very happy with the performances of all. They played as well as they could with the 23-4 record."

Leaman called the Syracuse performance his teams "finest" of the year and the big win over Boston College his "favorite" win due to the rivalry between the athletic department of both schools.

It was after both games that the Redmen lost their playing edge and resulted in the loss to Springfield and the poor performances in the last four games including the NIT.

"I teared for a game like we played at Springfield all along," noted Leaman, "it came off a poor performance against UConn after the B.C. game. I just couldn't convince my boys that they had to work hard for Springfield."

As for the team's play after the Syracuse win Leaman said, "we were flat against George Washington at the Gardens and only a great performance by Julius Erving got us by. We struggled against New Hampshire and Maine and when we came up against North Carolina we just weren't ready to play. Too many people had bad performances."

He went on to add," it was unfortunate that we had to play the last 18 minutes of the North Carolina contest without John (Betancourt) and Julius, who were the backbone of our team this year."

As for next year, the strength of the team is hard to figure out right now in the wake of the rumored signing of Erving with the ABA.

With Erving no doubt the team will be of tournament calibre again, and without him Leaman still feels that he will have a good team with enough veterans and a good freshman group to work with.

"We've been down before and came back and no doubt we'll be able to come back again if Erving should not be with us."

This year is a big year for recruiting for the UMass basketball program as the players who have led the Redman rise to prominence like Erving, Betancourt and Pagliara will all be gone after next season.

So far there are two sure recruits coming in the fall. One is Tom Gillam, a 6-7 frontcourter from North Yarmouth Academy. A resident of New York City, where he was a highly sought after high school player, he's big and strong off the boards with a good scoring touch, having led his team this season to the runnerup spot in the New England Prep tourney.

The other player is Mike Panaggio of Deerfield Academy who was cited in a national basketball magazine as the most promising backcourt man in New England.

Leaman also said that he is pretty close to having a 6'10 center from New York City come to UMass. Right now the big guy is choosing between UMass and Georgia.

HOOP NOTES—Coach Leaman has been nominated for one of the five coaching berths at the Pan-American Trials Camp, June 8-26 at the Air Force Academy, Colorado Springs. The Olympic Basketball Committee will select the coaches in Dayton, Ohio tomorrow...In the final New England statistical ratings UMass led all teams for the second straight year.

A HOUSE SPEAKER DAVID BARTLEY,(right), talks with students during an informal coffee hour Friday afternoon. He predicted no tuition hike this year and spoke in favor of letting 18-year olds vote in all elections.

Bartley See No Tuition Hike This Year

By LINDA A. BALICKI
MDC Staff

"The legislature will not pass any bill this year to change or increase tuition. Such an increase may come within the next two to three years." Such was the comment of David Bartley, Speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives during a visit to the UMass campus Friday afternoon.

Bartley (D-Holyoke) served as a guest lecturer for Stanley Bach's Legislative Process course and later entertained questions from a group of about 20 at an informal coffee hour in the Colonial Lounge. He also commented on such other topics as abortion laws, student voter registration, the College Without Walls proposal and general welfare costs.

"The tuition raise was not intended to lower taxes," Bartley said. "There's no sense to placing an extra burden on those taxpayers who have children in college just to make extra money for the Common wealth.

He added that any increase should come from the Board of Trustees, but that efforts should also be made to establish funds for more scholarships.

"There would be some legitimacy to increased tuition if it were balanced off by more scholarships," he said.

Bartley also did not favor the proposal for establishment of tuition rates based on ability to pay. He said: "Such programs in other areas have proven to be un successful and more of a burden both in administrative organization and in financial support.

When queried as to recent statistics that Massachusetts ranked 49th in the nation in state aid to higher education, Bartley remarked that it was a "phoney statistic" and that, in fact, over the last two years Massachusetts had increased its aid to higher education 602 per cent-second only to New York State in that area.

He commented that "The emphasis in dollar amounts should be on the undergraduate level rather than on the graduate." It was his view that too much money was being spent on the graduate level while the Commonwealth's true commitment in the area of higher education to the undergraduate was being slighted.

"We are not living up to what should be our true commitment and responsibility," Bartley said.

He noted that contrary to public belief "abortion is legal in the state of Massachusetts now; any doctor can perform an abortion if he says it is essential to the health of the mother." He added that the bills currently before the legislature are designed to remove the puntive statures off the books.

"I do not believe, however that there will be any change this year - but it will eventually be changed," he said.

Concerning the 18 year old vote and students' attempts to register in towns where they attend school Bartley commented that "local voter registrars are wrong-the legislative intent was that you could vote wherever you said your domicile was. Students should have the right to claim their college location as their domicile."

He stated that the Massachusetts legislature "ought to continue efforts to amend the Massachusetts constitution to give the 18 year old vote in all elections." He also added, "The majority age should be brought down to 18 for all legal matters- not just voting."

Bartley also welcomed Governor Sargent's proposal for a College Without Walls by saying "It is atrocious that a facility such as this with a value of $3,000,000 should be closed for twelve hours every day. We should make attempts to provide opportunities for adults and others to gain an education."

Sargent's proposal would allow citizens of all ages to study towards a degree on a part-time basis. If approved, it may begin by the fall of 1972 and would eventually be expanded to 25,000 students across the state.

It was also Bartley's view that the CEEBS program should be expanded.

"There should be no special citizens, everyone should be given opportunities," he said.

Concerning the Student Senate's approval of $3600 for funds for ten Puerto Ricans from Holyoke, Bartley said "the State has not expanded its scholarship policies anywhere near the level it should be."

When questioned as to general assistance and welfare costs, Bartley noted that the greatest problem in this area lay in the Aid For Dependent Children program. He also noted that of all public assistance recipients most are white caucasians between the ages of 18-28. He said welfare costs are going up to the point where "it will no longer be a stigma to receive assistance." It was his hope that medicaid will be tightened this year.

It was Bartley's view that many of the Commonwealth's problems could be solved if the federal government were to take over the Public Assistance programs. "If they did so we would have $500,000,000 which could be spent in what should be our three major areas of concern: higher education, public health and public highways. Some from of President Nixon's revenue sharing bill would help."

Bartley also commented that of the proposed four cent increase in cigarette tax two cents should go for education and that he favors a sales tax on machinery, saying "industry should pay its share of the burden. The only industries that will be driven out by it will be those who are already on the way out because they cannot compete with Japanese products."

Concerning his plans for 1972 Bartley commented that he would run "for some elected office" but declined to specify which office, saying that it was his belief that one "should be interested enough to try to do the best job in the office he already has rather than merely viewing it as a step towards a higher office."

Senate Hears Budget Requests

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

The Student Senate held a special meeting last night to try to get through its first stage of budgeting students groups for next year. Action taken opened the way for the Budgets Committee to compile its final set of recommendations for the total Budget Act, so that the Senate can go through its first reading of the Act this Wednesday.

Senator Nick Apostolo makes a point during last night's Student Senate hearing on budget proposals. This is the first step towards drawing up a Budget Act, which can tin turn be acted on by the Senate. All but two organizations had their proposals read. (MDC photo by Al Jagoda)

The first stage of budgeting has been the hearing in the Senate of budgets as they were recommended by the Budgets Committee, after a hearing with each organization to be funded. The Budgets Committee would then hold a second hearing with each group to consider changes requested by individual Senators. After this second hearing, each budget is entered into the Budget Act.

After last night's meeting, the budgets of all but two organizations have now had their first reading in the Senate. These groups, Learning Resources Center and DRUM, will be included in the Budget Act with the figures recommended by the first hearing of the Budgets Committee, without the first Senate hearing.

When the total Budget Act is first read in the Senate this Wednesday, particular changes in any budget may be made by a vote of the Senate. The entire Budget must then be read again at the next Senate meeting, when more changes can be made.

Following this, the Student Activities Tax will be set for next year, determined by the sum of all the budgets. The Senate has been directed to present its tax request to the Administration by April 15.

Two budgets were considered at last night's meeting so that they would be ready for inclusion in the Budget Act Wednesday. The Senate heard a budget request from the 1972 Senior Committee for a Senior Tax of $5 per class member for next year, amounting to a total of $19,345.

Besides operating expenses, funds for three major activities are included in the Senior Committee budget: Class Gift, Senior Day, and Class Projects. Plans call for the Class Gift of $4000 to be a scholarship fund, the Senior Day to be a traditional "good time", and for the Class Projects to be an open account to be spent for whatever causes the class sees fit.

The budget of a proposed student information center was also given preliminary consideration by the Senate; it then voted not to fund the organization. Founders of the group, Rapline, were planning to use the $1647 they requested to start a service to give students a clearing house of information. This would have included a telephone service and a drop-in center.

The Senate voted to strike the budget in its entirety, basically because it duplicates Administration services already offered on campus.

Chief Justice of the General Court, Robert Rochford, appeared at the Senate meeting to subpoena the Senate to a hearing about the funding of the Student Mobilization Committee. The General Court has been petitioned by an undergraduate to consider the legality of the Senate's Budgeting of student tax money to Student Mobe.

The petitioner questions whether it is legal, according to the Student Government Association and federal constitutions, to use funds from a compulsory student tax to pay for an organization whose membership is allegedly restricted to one political position. The Court hearing is scheduled for Tuesday evening at 9 p.m.

In a subpoena delivered by Justice Jerome Moriarty, Senate Treasurer Richard Verrochi was called to appear at another General Court hearing, in his official capacity. The hearing scheduled for April 12 is to be concerned with the Senate Fiscal Act.

Listening to budgets can be a less than exciting job, as these senators sit through last night's special meeting. The budgets heard at the meeting will be incorporated into a Budgets act which will be read Wednesday to the Senate. (MDC photo by Al Jagoda)

N. Viets Battle For Fire Base

SAIGON (AP) — North Vietnamese troops, laying siege to a South Vietnamese artillery base perched on a mountain top, hurled new assaults yesterday but were repulsed, military sources reported.

They said 287 enemy soldiers were killed during a five-hour battle at Fire Base 6, in the central highlands close to the Laotian border, raising North Vietnamese losses in five days of bitter fighting to more than 1,800.

Most of the enemy soldiers were slain by warplanes and artillery that have laid a ring of fire around the tiny outpost that was overrun by the North Vietnamese on Wednesday but recaptured the next day.

The South Vietnamese military sources said two defenders were killed and 20 were wounded in the latest attacks. They gave the total number of casualties suffered by the South Vietnamese as far as 70 killed and 124 wounded.

Five Americans also have perished and one is missing in the battle for the base. Two others were wounded. Four of these killed and the one missing apparently were members of a U.S. advisory team with fewer than 10 men that was assigned to the outpost. The others were crewmen aboard two helicopters shot down.

The beleaguered tire base of the South Vietnamese 22nd Infantry Division is in the tri-border region where the frontiers of South Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia meet about 300 miles north of Saigon.

Lt Col Tran Van An, spokesman for the Saigon command, claimed the North Vietnamese 28th Regiment "may have suffered 60 to 70 per cent casualties" in the action and he said it has drawn on other units for replacements.

Some military observers question the casualty reports. South Vietnamese casualties were considered higher than stated.

Anti-War Vets Given Yale Chapel For Sanctuary

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP)—A group of antiwar veterans was granted yesterday the use of Yale University's Battell Chapel as a symbolic sanctuary for draft resisters and deserters.

Three veterans-dressed in their uniforms-from a group of about 100 members of the Vietnam Veterans Against the War stood up in the midst of the crowded Palm Sunday service to formally ask for the use of the chapel as a sanctuary for a week.

A former Marine Corps sergeant, Jack Smith of West Hartford, read their petition:

"We who have seen thousands of people mindlessly slaughtered in the name of their freedom, ask sanctuary for those who no longer will lend themselves to a conflict which perverts the principles of their beloved nation."

All members of the group, Smith said, have received honorable discharges. He added that their role during the week of sanctuary in the chapel is to provide a forum for the deserters and draft resisters.

A spokesman for the chapel council granted the request. The Rev. William Sloane Coffin Jr., the university chaplain, emphasized that the sanctuary would be symbolic because there would be no resistance if federal marshals entered the chapel to arrest any deserters or draft resisters.

"There can be no violence; the sanctuary is for the resisters or deserters to give voice to their conscience," Coffin said.

The veterans camped out Saturday night at the site of an historic sanctuary here as part of their campaign to have Congress convene public hearings on alleged war crimes in Southeast Asia.

"Lack Of Interest" Closes Hampden Rest.

By DEBBIE BERNSTEIN
MDC Staff

The hungry appetites of UMass students who stick around for the weekend can no longer be satisfied at the Hampden Restaurant. As of the weekend of March 13-14 the restaurant was closed due to what Mr. Richard Ellis, initiator and head of the restaurant cited as "a decline of student interest".

Situated in Hampden Dining Common, the restaurant was opened on January 30, to fulfill the need for such a weekend operation. Staffed by students themselves, the restaurant served lunch and dinner on both Saturday and Sunday. A normal restaurant menu was offered with prices ranging from $1.60 to $3.75 for a steak dinner.

Joanne Resteghini, a waitress at Hampden Restaurant, felt that the student attitude toward the food and service was very favorable, even though it was basically the same people who returned each weekend. This she felt was in part due to a lack of publicity.

Although the residents of Southwest were aware of the existence of the restaurant, interest was not wide-spread to other parts of the campus such as Orchard Hill, she said.

However, those who were served at the restaurant were quite "complementary." This Miss Resteghini attributes to the atmosphere of the restaurant. The tables in a section of the regular dining area were covered with table cloths and at night the tables were lit with candle light.

There was a self-service salad bar located in the restaurant, and big warm loaves of bread were served with each meal. These added touches, Miss Resteghini feels, made the Hampden Restaurant a nice place for guys to take their dates.

Ellis feels that even though student interest was at first good, the onset of warmer weather would cause the acceptance of the restaurant to decrease.

Is the end of Hampden Restaurant final? Are UMass students destined to live on a weekend diet of grinders and pizzas for the rest of their days at the University?

Ellis believes that there a possibility that the restaurant will re-open next year. However, he noted that reinstatement of Hampden Restaurant is totally dependent on the demands of the students.

Honors Program Held Saturday

BARBARA ANN CLEARY
MDC Staff

The first of two Honors Program conferences was held in the Campus Center Saturday. The second will be held next Saturday, April 10.

Invited to participate where various qualified students in their senior year of high school. Almost all of those who attended Saturday had deferred a decision on UMass pending decisions from other schools.

The incoming freshman, their parents, and various members of the faculty and of the Honors Program met for an informal coffee hour in the morning.

Throughout the day interviews were held and each candidate was interviewed informally by a team of one faculty member and one student from the Honors Program.

Guides were available for tours of the campus for parents and candidates.

Lunch was held at the Top of the Campus Restaurant for interviewers and candidates. Brian O'Connor, director of the Honors Program, introduced Dr. Everett Emerson. Dr. Emerson is former director and prime moving force of the Program. He addressed his remarks chiefly to the students. Emerson said that the chief goal of education is teaching the student to learn on his own, to be independant.

Although grades do have a limited function, he continued, the real goal is independence in learning, the ability and will to continue learning.

He cited the need to read beyond regular assignments. He encouraged the students to use the resources available for their own benefit, books, libraries, and especially professors.

In order to continue to grow beyond college, you must obtain a liberal education," Emerson continued. A liberal education is a sense of liberation and freeing from limitations, he said.

Emerson cited the opportunities available in the Honors Program for this liberation. The Program is very flexible and allows for individual independance, he said.

Independence is accomplished through a greater range of personal choice, according to Emerson. Each semester the student must take one small honors seminar, increasing opportunities for different types of learning, he said.

Advisors Robert Keefe and Dr. O'Connor, are available to each student. In addition, courses may be taken at other schools.

Questions about the Honors Program or admission may be answered at the Honors Program office, E-22, Machmer.

Population Placement Urged By Pres. Wood

Only a long-range policy of national population distribution and the formation of regional government bodies will solve the country's urban crisis, UMass President Robert C. Wood said Saturday.

"We now are belatedly facing up to the consequences of the freedom of migration, the random distribution of people over national space," said Wood, director of the Joint Center for Urban Studies at Harvard and MIT before becoming president of UMass last year.

Speaking to the annual shareholders meeting of the Federal Home Loan Bank of Boston, Wood outlined "three new directions" to help solve urban problems:

The development of a genuine national policy for the distribution of our urban people among cities and regions."

New forms and institutions in government below the national level."

"New policies and programs in the acquisition, use and taxation of urban land."

Wood said, "The heart of the proposals is for an areawide government for a relatively limited number of purposes--those that are decisive in affecting the quality of our general environment and the process of our overall metropolitan growth."

As part of the "national policy that directs the ebb and flow of population and its distribution across the continent," Wood suggested "a major effort to build new communities"; to subsidize industry in cities of moderate size "to escape the crushing public cost of traffic jams, crime, disorder in the high school and pollution," and to tighten regulations of suburban development.

"The federal government...has underwritten every dog, cat and canary of American community whenever that community possessed the literacy to write for a federal grant," said Wood. Secretary of Housing and Urban Development under President Johnson.

"Candor requires me to say that the attention, belief and committment of important segments of American industry and government to urban problems seem to have rapidly waned," he said.

Street Party Blocked By Police In Madison

MADISON, (WIS.) AP—Some 1,000 young people tried to hold an unauthorized street party in the heart of the city's student-hippie area yesterday, but no major incidents developed as riot-equipped police kept most of them on the sidewalks.

Police confirmed at least three arrests and said one officer was hospitalized after being struck with a rock.

The street party was timed for the end of a weekend convention of national leaders of the Youth International Party.

Three days of rioting broke out two years ago in the area, known as Miffland, when young people held a street party in defiance of police orders.

Yesterday about 1,000 persons congregated on the sidewalks of a block-long segment of Mifflin Street.

Yippie leaders had held a series of discussion meetings Saturday and decided to issue a call to Yippies nationally to go to Washington next month for a spring offensive against the Indochina war.

Nationwide demonstrations were urged in connection with the planned Washington activities.

Mass. Senate Dandidate Would Poll Voters On Bills

BOSTON (AP)—Charles C. McCarthy, 30, of Newton announced his candidacy for the U.S. Senate yesterday as an independent and said if elected, he would conduct a telephone straw vote by computer on all bills before he voted on them.

"People are fed up with the decisions and laws forced upon them," he told a news conference at a hotel. "These people feel that man should have a little more control over his destinies and laws."

He said: "I guarantee, as U.S. Senator from Massachusetts I will always vote in the Senate not according to my will but strictly according to the will of the majority of the electorate of this Commonwealth as expressed on each Senate bill that reaches the Senate floor."

He proposed a system in which registered voters would telephone a computer to cast their votes on pending Senate bills.

He said voters would be required to dial their voter registration number and Social Security number before voting in order to prevent fraud.

McCarthy, who said he has never held public office before, said he is an attorney and a special assistant to the president at Chamberlayne Junior College in Boston.

He said he opposes the Indo-China War and dedicated his campaign to Roger LaPorte, a pacifist who set himself on fire in 1965 before the United Nations building in New York.

McCarthy will run for the Senate in 1972 against incumbent Republican Edward W. Brooke.

Governor Bumper's Bumpers Bumped

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — "Well, you know how it is . . . It's just one of those things; you're out riding around and you run into the governor," said Charles Dewey, 27, of Jacksonville - only Dewey meant it literally.

Dewey and his family were on their way fishing yesterday when they accidentally delayed Gov. Dale Bumpers' golf game.

Bumpers and his party were in a car driven by a state trooper attempting to make a left hand turn on Arkansas 10 near Little Rock.

Eldon Rankin, 43, of Pine Bluff stopped behind the governor's car and Dewey rammed into Rankin, pushing his car into the governor's.

The only injury was to Mrs. Dewey, who was not hospitalized. State Police estimated the damage to all three cars at more than $3,000.

Unshaken, the governor continued on to play golf.

Calley In Interview: "Just As Wrong Going To Vietnam As To My Lai"

Lt William L. Calley, Jr. says that while awaiting trial he developed a fear of dying accidentally because the world would think he "copped out." Time magazine reported Sunday.

"Sometimes, like in airports, I can feel everybody staring at me," Calley was quoted as saying. "I have stages of feeling paranoid. The psychological testing showed I was paranoid, but hell, there are people trying to kill me."

Calley was interviewed by correspondent Peter Range. Time said, just before he was found guilty last Monday of murdering at least 22 civilians at My Lai. He was later sentenced to life imprisonment.

"If I got killed in my car on the way to Atlanta, everyone would think Calley copped out," the magazine quotes Calley as having said.

Calley, who is being kept under guard at his Ft. Benning, Ga., apartment while awaiting appeal, was quoted as saying he was "sorry anybody had to die" at My Lai, "sorry I ever had to kill a soldier in Vietnam."

"In My Lai, I made one of a thousand mistakes I made in Vietnam. I was just as wrong going to Vietnam as to My Lai.

"But I'll be very proud to have been in the U.S. Army and fought at My Lai if it shows the world just what war is."

The case has brought widespread public support for clemency for the 27-year-old lieutenant, and President Nixon announced Saturday he will review the case after military appeals are exhausted.

Retired Brig. Gen. Telford Taylor, who was one of the prosecutors at the Nuremberg war crimes trials after World War II, said the Calley verdict was too harsh although his acquittal would have been "a disaster."

"Did the jurors disbelieve or choose to disregard the voluminous testimony that Calley's platoon had been ordered or encouraged by what they had observed in Vietnam to behave as it did?" Taylor said in Late magazine.

"Or did they hold the lieutenant responsible for the sins and shortcomings of his superiors?" Taylor continued. "The first conclusion is unsupportable, the second ignominous, and the ambiguity is itself a grave defect in the judgment rendered.

"Inevitably, it will be said on all sides, if for various and contradictory reasons, that Calley has been made a scapegoat."

Calley leaves court after being sentenced.

New Amendement Askes For Withdrawal Date

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new Cooper-Church amendment will ask President Nixon to set a date for total withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Vietnam, its authors said Sunday.

Sens. John Sherman Cooper, R-Ky., and Frank Church, D-Idaho, authors of earlier amendments limiting U.S. involvement in Indochina, said the measure would give Nixon a negotiating tool to obtain release of American prisoners of war and "whatever else he could get."

Both senators were doubtful about the proposed McGovern-Hatfield amendment aimed at compulsorily ordered withdrawal of all troops by the end of the year. Cooper and Church appeared on the ABC television public affairs program, Issues and Answers.

Church said it would be impossible to get the Hatfield-McGovern amendment through both houses of Congress.

Cooper said the amendment proposed by Sens. George McGovern, D-S.D., and Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., neither solves the problem of U.S. POW's nor approaches the problem of ending all fighting in Vietnam.

By declaring the United States will withdraw all troops, Cooper said, their amendment would let Nixon give other countries the assurance they can assist in a "settlement" of the Indochina conflict.

One earlier Cooper-Church amendment prohibited the use of the U.S. ground combat troops and military advisers in Cambodia.

Egypt Offers New Peace Proposal

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, in his latest peace offer, said Egypt would accept a new cease-fire if Israeli troops withdrew from the occupied east bank of the canal and portions of the Sinai Peninsula. Egyptian troops would then occupy the vacated territory and the canal, blocked by scuttled ships in the 1967 war, would be reopened.

Sadat warned Saturday that Israel must make a positive response to his overture within 2 months.

The semi-official Cairo newspaper Al Ahram quoted him as saying April is the month which shall decide between a solution and war."

Mrs. Meir told the Labor party conference, "We should willingly see the canal open to shipping of all nations, including Israel, and the restoration of civilian life in the area," but she added:

"It is becoming interestingly clear that the Egyptians think we have to compensate them for reopening the canal, which they themselves closed."

Sources close to Israel's Cabinet say Jerusalem is likely to offer again the so-called Dayan plan for clearing the canal was partially settling the Middle East conflict.

The plan, drawn by Defense Minister Moshe Dayan, suggests a partial rollback of Egyptian and Israeli forces along the waterway to defuse the confrontation.

It was Mrs. Meir's first public statement on Sadat's proposal since he made it last week. Many cabinet ministers, both hawks and doves, have scotted at the proposal.

They say, however, there is no doubt Israel soon will have to submit its own ideas for opening the canal.

The 72-year-old premier rejected international guarantees in place of new and secure borders for Israel, expressing amazement at "those who think geography is nonsense."

But she said she regretted Israel "is having a serious argument with the United States" on the question of guarantees, which Washington says can safeguard Israel far better than new borders.

Israel "should not forget what the U.S. and President Nixon have done for Israel in recent years, especially in the field of arms supply," she said.

Future Dem. Leaders Issued Challenge

SPRINGFIELD, MASS. (AP)—The chairman of the Democratic party National Committee challenged the future leaders of the country, Sunday, to live within the system.

Lawrence F. O'Brien delivered the keynote address at the opening session of the 31st Model Congress at American International Congress after being awarded a doctor of humane letters degree.

The top administrative adviser to Presidents Kennedy and Johnson challenged 300 representatives from 47 high schools in New England, New York and New Jersey by asking three questions:

"Is the American democratic system itself worth preserving?"

"Are there basic changes in the American system that should be made."

"Are there better ways for man to govern himself."

A native of Springfield, the former postmaster general told an overflow crowd to remember that the American democratic system is "fundamentally a way, a method and a process for reaching decisions. With the exception of the essential guarantees found in the Bill of Rights, the United States Constitution says nothing about the end results of this process. Instead, the Constitution sets down the rules of the game, rules that have held up remarkably well over two centuries of extraordinary change and challenge.

These rules are based on the notion that human error inevitably must be part of government."

"To put it simply" he added, "no member of congress is willing to give in to a president just because the president thinks he's right. No president of the United States regardless of party or popularity has the power simply to command the obedience of Congress. This is a fact of American politics that most presidents find difficult to accept.

"This is true not because members of Congress are stubborn or are men of little vision but because the president in fact may be wrong. And because the founding fathers realized the president might be wrong, they gave members of Congress the power to say no and make it stick."

In one of his personal observations, O'Brien said: "The American democratic system is unique in its ability to change in response to changing needs and conditions of the American people."

He concluded his address with the prediction that "future generations will view the final third of the 20th Century as one of the most creative and exciting periods in the American democratic experience."

He then added that governmental leaders are anxiously awaiting the "ideas and energies you will soon bring to the political life of this nation."

Ripon Picks Hickel As Man Of Year

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)—Former Interior Secretary Walter J. Hickel was chosen Sunday by the Ripon Society as its Man of the Year.

The society, a liberal Republican opinion group, said the award was based on a poll taken of readers of its magazines, Forum, in which Hickel received the highest rating of any member of President Nixon's cabinet.

Hickel subsequently was fired by Nixon.

"The award is in part a recognition of the Nixon administration's achievement in the environmental field," said Ripon President Josiah L. Auspitz.

"In part it is also a tribute to Secretary Hickel's dedication to national reconciliation at a time when polarization was the prevailing wind."

In April, 1970, while he was still secretary, Hickel sent a letter to President Nixon suggesting that the administration was not demonstrating enough concern for the attitudes of young Americans and that Vice President Spiro T. Agnew should let up on his attacks on campus dissenters.

New Taiwan Envoy Assumes U.N. Post

WASHINGTON (AP)—The newly appointed foreign minister of Nationalist China said Sunday he will not reply solely on the United States in his effort to keep Taiwan's U.N. seat and its Security Council membership.

Chow Shu-Kai plans to leave at once for Formosa to shape his strategy for the struggle which may come to a head when the U.N. Assembly meets next fall.

"We gained our U.N. status as the result of World War II for which several million Chinese lives were sacrificed," he said in an interview.

The diplomat, 58, who has served six years as ambassador here, is aware that the United States is weighing a shift to a two-China policy that would not oppose the seating of Peking, provided Nationalist China retains its seat in the world organization.

"We would deplore that if it should materialize," Chow said. "Concessions by the outside world merely whet the appetite of Peking."

The Nationalist foreign minister said if Peking attains its objectives in the United Nations then it will seek to become the leader of a third bloc of nations opposed to both the United States and the Soviet Union.

Canine Copped

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP)—The National Guard put Nero, a German sheperd dog, in their armory to keep anyone from stealing assorted tanks, guns and ammunition.

Saturday night somebody stole Nero.

Police said Nero, a recently purchased rookie guard dog, apparently was lifted by a thief who dug a hole under a fence and then lilled in the hole after absconding with the pooch.

Ben Rollins, commander of the National Guard unit, refused to discuss the case until he had notified the FBI.

Elections In Chile Maintain New Gov.

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — The leftist coalition of Marxist President Salvador Allende received more than 51 per cent of the vote in early returns Sunday night from Chile's municipal elections.

With 190,000 votes counted out of an estimated three million cast, the Popular Unity coalition candidates, including Communists and Socialists, had 51.94 per cent. Candidates from the main opposition Christian Democratic and National parties had 39.41 per cent. Splinter parties received the rest.

The elections for city and town councilmen in 280 municipalities were the first opportunity for voters to pass judgment on Allende's five-month-old government.

The Popular Unity had sought to win 50 per cent of the total in voting for 1,653 council seats throughout the country.

Allende, first freely elected Marxist president in the Western Hemisphere, received 36.6 per cent of the vote in September's three-way presidential election.

Allende's left-wing supporters expressed hope of winning a firmer mandate in the municipal elections to move more quickly in "opening the doors to Socialism in Chile."

In Chile's three southernmost provinces, Adonis Sepulveda, a Socialist, held the lead in a special election to fill the senate seat left vacant when Allende became president.

Sepulveda had 9,841 votes to 4,936 votes for Andres Zaldivar, a Christian Democrat and treasury minister in the previous administration.

Tenn. Freeway Dedicated To King

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Memphis, where Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was killed April 4, 1968, dedicated a section of its freeway system to the slain civil rights leader Sunday to mark the third anniversary of his death.

King, when slain, was in Memphis to help back demands by 3,000 city sanitation workers, 98 per cent of them black, for union representation.

The sanitation workers paid tribute to King by marching from the Lorraine Motel, where King was standing at the time he was shot.

The City Council, after debating the matter each year since his death, approved naming the entire north-south freeway for King by an 8-6 vote last Tuesday.

The Rev. James Netters, black councilman who presided at the dedication, told the gathering that it was appropriate to name the highways section for King because King "traveled America's highways and byways to stamp out injustice and discrimination."

About 200 persons attended the dedication, a majority of them black.

The 12-mile north-south freeway, Interstate 255, goes through the heart of the city and bisects several black neighborhoods.

Gallop Poll Shows Nixon Leading For 72

PRINCETON, (N.J.)AP—The latest Gallup Poll statistics report that President Nixon holds a 43 to 39 per cent margin over Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D—Maine, the front runner for the 1972 Democratic party presidential nomination.

The survey, taken in mid-March, says the President not only has improved his standing over Muskie, but maintained his lead over Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D—Mass., and Hubert H. Humphrey, D—Minn., two other leading candidates for their party's nomination.

In mid-January, the Gallup Poll showed Nixon and Muskie virtually tied for voter preference while the President had a margin of 46 to 38 per cent over Kennedy and 46 to 36 per cent Humphrey.

The poll showed the President held a lead over the potential nominees despite his popularity drop below 50 per cent, the lowest since he took office. Compared to a year ago, the figures show all three Democrats have made gains.

In the South's 13-state region, the poll shows the President has a considerable lead over the three senators and a similarly wide margin over Alabama Gov. George Wallace, a possible third-party candidate. Nixon, Humphrey and Wallace divided the vote about equally in the 1968 presidential election.

Outside the South, the races are closer. The figures show Muskie trailing the President by only 1 per cent, 43 to 44.

Stark Reality

Those Americans responsible for policies which brought death to over 600,000 civilians through massive bombings and other coldly premeditated acts of combat perpetrated over the last decade by United States Armed Forces on duty in Southeast Asia should stand trial for their actions, which represent some of the most atrocious crimes in war since we, the United States Government, condemned and punished those men responsible for the deaths of millions of civilians in World War II.

The stark reality of statistics compiled by our own government shows the results of our government's policies in Southeast Asia: more bombing tonnage dropped in the countries in Southeast Asia than all of the combined tonnage released in Europe during WW II; the creation of a refugee population in Vietnam of close to one million civilians, (the result of our military actions which clearly violate the Geneva accords moving on civilian population); the destruction of food production capabilities (a violation of the Geneva guidelines); the bombing of hospitals (the enemy's, therefore justifiable?); and most shockingly, as mentioned before, the policies of massive and indiscriminate bombings by American Aircraft in Southeast Asia which have murdered untold numbers of "innocent civilians" and which continue daily to destroy the countryside and those who are only guilty of living there.

Spread over the past several years, these policies were made quite consciously, and carried out with deadly ferocity, by the leaders of the United States Government who have known fully the consequences of their policies.

Without arguing whether the United States involvement in Vietnam and environs is justifiable on any level of national or international politics, it is profoundly evident that the leaders of our government during this war have personally approved of actions and policies of the most horrifying nature imaginable; actions and policies which cannot be justified any more than the "murder" of "innocent civilians" by individual American Servicemen during our involvement in Southeast Asia.

Those Generals and Presidents who have created these policies must be held accountable. The scope and intent of these actions during the war

We are a nation where the individual's responsibility is held paramount. Having been sent into the Vietnam War, American soldiers have been ordered to perpetrate crimes of the least defensible nature. Those soldiers, like soldiers everywhere, are locked into the vice of military order. They were ordered to bomb and destroy by other men, who could have chosen not to perpetrate what must be called criminal acts against the people of Southeast Asia.

America must search through its numbed "body-count-enemy kill ratio-saturation bombing-defoliated" conscience and find the will to act as a nation dedicated to ideals we have mouthed in the past. The American people must be able to break through the myths of what their government has been doing, and those who have acted beyond the realm of justification must fact the responsibility of their actions.

There is no justice in war, and perhaps men will learn not to wage their wars, relying on codes of conduct to give the appearance of justice to their deeds. We must assume, though, that some actions of men are indeed a violation of whatever justice which could exist. We have to decide ultimately what kind of people we want to be.

Oink! Oink!

Pigs have always been one of my favorite animals. When I was a little kid a friend of mine had a couple of red pigs, big mean things, and a few other black and white porkers. We used to go down to watch his father slop them with the scraps from the high school cafeteria where he worked. It was fun to watch. The pigs would come grunting and snuffling around the trough and begin to eat and eat. Once I got brave and smacked one of them on his big floppy ear and watched him squeal and run around his little pen. He must have weighed about 400 pounds.

I saw some pigs the last time I was home. Only now they have a $250,000 pen on the main street and drive around in four blue and white cars. My town has about 13,000 people. It seems like you can't step out of the house without seeing one of our "men in blue."

Now before all the straight-lacers who read this get apoplexy, let me explain. I have nothing against police. I think they serve a necessary function. But that doesn't include beating, harassing and bothering people. I generally reject Freudian psychology as one man's attempt to palm off onto everyone else his own hang-ups, but when I read about pigs I believe what Freud said about guns being big penises. Just once I'd like to home and talk to someone I know who got stopped for something who DIDN'T get harassed. Just once I'd like to read about a demonstration where pigs DIDN'T put tape over their badge numbers all the better to beat you with.

Am I asking too much? Little kids are taught out of their fourth-grade health books to respect police. You remember that deal- we had to draw maps of the town and show where the fire station was and where the police station was and tell what to do in case we saw an accident or something. Well, I never really did swallow that line. Everything that pigs have done around me has more or less convinced me that something's wrong with that system. I'll admit I've gotten my share of breaks from the police, and then some. They've been good to me at times. But at other times they were just plain pricks. I don't begrudge them their moments of anger when a drunk teen-ager runs into a station wagon full of people. But if they've put themselves into the kind of position they're in, where they can take that anger out on somebody innocent, they ought to think twice before they act.

No-Fault Whiplash

WASHINGTON — One of the things we're going to be hearing more about as time goes on is "no-fault insurance." Everyone has his own idea of what no-fault automobile insurance should be, but basically it boils down to the idea that when someone has an accident, his own insurance company would settle the claim instead of seeking damages from the other party or his insurance company.

The advantages of no-fault automobile insurance are that you would eliminate a lot of phony claims from people who say they had suffered grievous injury. Litigants would have to wait years to be paid off for an accident, the nation's courts would be free to deal with other matters of much higher priority, and, hopefully, automobile insurance premiums could be reduced.

The disadvantage is that no-fault insurance could put a lot of lawyers out of work.

It therefore comes as no surprise that the trial lawyers are cranking up a fierce lobbying campaign to prevent no-fault insurance from becoming the law of the land.

My friend Briefless, who deals in nothing but automobile accident cases, becomes very emotional when you mention no-fault insurance to him.

"They're trying to take the bread out of our mouths," he said tearfully. "If we can't sue, we'll die."

"Oh, come now, Briefless," I said. "It can't be that serious."

"You can say that. But do you know suing insurance companies is the second largest industry in the United States? If they institute no-fault insurance, you'll have breadlines from Baltimore to San Diego. I'm not just talking about lawyers. I'm talking about all the other people it will affect -private investigators, legal secretaries and paid witnesses, not to mention the yellow legal pad paper companies. There is more at stake here than two cars getting into a lousy accident."

"But Briefless, surely there is other law work that you can find?" I said.

"Nothing that pays as well. Sometimes, if it's a difficult case, we get 50% of the settlement. The very least we'll get is a third. If we lose we get nothing. But it's the only thing we know how to do. You can't say to a man who has been trained in 'whiplash' and 'pain and suffering suits' to go out and learn a new trade. Do you know what has made America the great country it is today?"

"I'm not sure," I admitted.

"The right of one person to sue another person for an automobile crash."

"No kidding?"

"And also the right to select counsel to sue the other person, plus the right of the other party to select counsel to defend the suit. If you take these rights away from Americans, what have they left?"

"No-fault automobile insurance?"

"Exactly. The American dream in this country is to be hit by a cola truck or a Greyhound bus that was in the wrong."

"I never thought of it that way."

"Are you going to take this American dream away from the people? What fun is it to have your own insurance company settle with you when in your heart of hearts you know that with a sympathetic jury you'll get $100,000 from the other guy's insurance company?"

"You make a strong case against no-fault insurance," I told Briefless.

"The legislators think no-fault insurance is a great idea," he said, slamming a law book on his desk. "But when they find 2 million lawyers collecting unemployment insurance, they're going to be sorry they didn't leave automobile insurance alone."

This Time May Never Come

By YOUNG JA CHON

Two and a half years in a foreign country isn't as short a time as someone may think. It is long enough to get shocked by, immunized against, and even associated with the entire culture that we stay in. For example, the long hair doesn't surprise me anymore as it first did. For the first few months, my letters to my family and to my friends were full of descriptions of those people who made me think myself as a complete stranger to this country. "....Mother, this country has strange combinations of very high modern buildings with long-haired and hair-footed boys...."

Now I feel sad not to get shocked any more and accept everything as a matter-of-fact. Yet, the strange thing is, I don't feel I'm part of the society. I'm always a watcher -- not in a critical sense but in a sense of non-participator. Lots of posters on the street. What are they for? Maybe there is an election for senator or something. Oh well, not my business....It is sad when you can't feel a part of where you are: I even feel alienated from my own country, because I can't keep up with all the things happening there. This is one of my dilemmas: I'm beginning to lose my sense of belonging. People think that life would be a lot simpler if they just sat and did what they wanted to do regardless of what was going on outside of their own small world. Maybe this is true for the people who already gained their sense of belonging, but to me at least things seem very different. I always feel that there is something missing, and I feel like I'm floating on the ocean for a while.

Once I discussed this problem with one of my American friends, and she solaced me by saying that she also feels lost sometimes because everything changes so rapidly. Her advice was to try to feel a part of this country because I'm a part of it already. She was right. I'm part of this country already. I go to the supermarket, I use a car, my husband is studying in the university here, and I work in this university, too. How can I participate more than this? Yet how is it I just can't feel that I'm a part of it when I am a part of it?

People, maybe. I see lots of them, yet I recognize none of them. No feelings, no warmth. They pass by muttering meaningless "hi". One of those Chinese, they think. What difference does it make whether you came from China, Korea or Japan? Indifference.

I go to the vending machine. Click. The dime goes down, and the candy drops from the machine. No people to talk to. I pick up the prepackaged ready-marked vegetables, meats and fruits in the supermarket. No more or no less. No people to argue with. Just pay to the cashier as she pushes the buttons...How can I feel that I'm part of it when there is no feeling toward other people?

I read newspapers. Mr. Smith died yesterday of cancer. Mrs. Somebody gave birth to a girl, and Miss so and so announced her engagement to Mr. so and so. Who are they?

Perhaps two and a half years is too short a time to be part of this world. I think I should wait...for how long? Until the time comes...What can I do but wait, even though this time may never come.

Letters To The Editor

Disturbed Internal Tranquility

To the Editor:

From all appearances, the gap referred to in Jim Mitchell's column Friday is one between the facts and his interpretation of them. To begin with, the SMC on campus did not decide that we need a strike. The Collegian article printed on Wednesday clearly stated that the proposal for a one day strike on May 5th in memoriam of the killings at Kent and Jackson State came from the National SMC Steering Committee meeting earlier this month, and was just that: a proposal. The steering committee of UMass, SMC, merely called for a meeting of all concerned groups in the area to vote on whether to implement a strike. Read the Collegian, Mr. Mitchell.

Is the widening credibility gap between "students and the 'outside world'" responsible for the unprecedented extent of labor support for the April 24th National Antiwar Demonstration in Washington and San Francisco? (National UAW, among many others, is organizing rank and file to march under their own banner for immediate and total withdrawal).

The interpretation of any strike by "outsiders" is directly related to the organization and activities of the strikers. The UMass SMC steering committee apparently has more faith in the maturing and concern of UMass students as regards the tragic deaths of six students, than does Mr. Mitchell.

Mr. Mitchell's selective perception of rock throwers and spray painters as characterizing last May's strike epitomizes the very narrow mindedness he fears in others. The tremendous amount of hard work sustained by a considerably greater number of serious people throughout May seems to have escaped his notice. (These include the Leaflet Community on the Cambodia Invasion, and Education workshops on all aspects of the war. At the height of the strike, 53 workshops were held in one day and all were well attended.)

If the strike is voted upon favorably, we will ask more of the Five College area students than that they "give up a couple of classes that they might have cut anyway," as suggested by Mr. Mitchell. We hope to engage participants in more meaningful activities, such as organized informational workshops and memorial services.

"But when freedom is denied in the very name of freedom," Mr. Mitchell? The freedom of the students at Kent State, perhaps? At Jackson State? The freedom of the people of Southeast Asia?

"To sit back idly and permit a small group to use the University as a setting for their own brand of justice," Mr. Mitchell? To sit back idly while the U.S. Marine Corps recruits on this campus? To sit back idly while the U.S. government in the name of the American people, sends more than 3 million men, over a period of ten years, to impose its own brand of justice on the people of S.E. Asia.

Perhaps our internal tranquility needs to be disturbed in the light of the fact that a war which has resulted in the deaths of over a million men, women, and children even now rages on.

Stay Healthy

To the Editor:

In the MDC of April 1, a letter to the editor by Mr. Bob Callahan calls attention to the article, "You are What You Eat" by Gilbert Salk in the March 31 issue of the MDC. I would like to correct the correction of Mr. Callahan.

Mr. Callahan states the organic farming is economically unfeasable and that organic matter would not return enough minerals to the soils.

If organic fertilizing is economically unfeasable it is only because of the present economic structure which values a food item more for its cost than for its nutritional and healthful value. Organic farmers get more for their food which covers their extra effort to produce food safe to eat.

Organic matter returns more of the needed minerals to the soil than does chemical fertilizing. This has been proven in experiments at USDA experiment stations at Beltsville, Maryland and elsewhere. Chemical fertilizers supply N, P, and K which are basic plant nutrients. Organic fertilizers supply N, P, and K in addition to many other organic materials and minerals which are needed by the plant.

Sludge, leaves, garbage, paper and other organic wastes and things that the cities are up to their knees in and could be substituted for chemical fertilizers rather than polluting our land and water. Many communities have already begun this.

You failed to mention chemical insecticides and herbicides which are also used to produce the "quality and amount of food that we have today". Organic farmers have substitutes for these which work with nature rather than against it.

You should read some of the books suggested by Mr. Salk. We have many technological advances that there is no reason why we should should not stay healthy to enjoy them.

Be Enlightened

To the Editor:

Everyone who is here at the University is thinking of getting a job at some time in the future. How do you go about getting one? The Placement Office on campus is here for this express purpose-to help you find a job. What are its policies? How do they go about looking for positions for students? What can be done to get more jobs for more students?

If you don't have the answers to these questions and are interested in finding them, we need you. If you want to improve the placement policies of this university, to help yourself and your friends here, we want you to join the Placement Advisory Council that is now being formed in coordination with the Student Senate Services Committee. It will consist of about seven or eight students who will meet with the Placement administrators and discuss their policies. Qualification? Only the will to help, to improve, to be enlightened. If you qualify, please call Janet at 546-8307 or leave a note in Senator Pearlman's mail box in the Student Senate Office. Thank you.

Reserve A Room

To the Editor:

The March 29th issue of the Daily Collegian printed a letter from a resident of a coed dorm complaining that certain aspects of her dorm life had deteriorated presumedly because males were now part of the environment. We do not dispute her argument, not her right to air her complaints. We wish only to clarify two matters. First of all, the writer was speaking only of her particular dorm. Since she failed to mention what dorm she is a resident of, we feel it necessary to say that she does not live in Wheeler House. Secondly, we wish to point out that --for us, here -- coed living has been a positive experience, one which has enhanced our chances of obtaining an education here at the University -- an education in the broadest sense. Coed living here has not been without its problems to be sure, but there will always be some problems in new situations. These do not, however, detract from the fact that we feel that integration of the sexes has added a new and vital dimension to dorm living -- helping to make an unnatural living situation more liveable and humane. Normal day to day interaction is helping to create an atmosphere where men and women can at least begin to look at, reach out, and deal with each other as people. Those who lived in the dorm in the years preceding the current arrangement are willing to testify to its radical improvement.

Finally, we cannot possibly adequately outline in this letter what we mean by "a positive experience" in dorm living. But, since we are graduating about a third of the residents this June, we encourage you to come over to Wheeler -- look around, talk to the residents and get a feel for the place. Then -- if you're convinced -- reserve a room for next year.

Ringing Out

To the Editor:

With Passover - the ancient Jewish holiday that commemorates the deliverance of the Jewish people out of the bonds of Egyptian slavery into the land of Israel-beginning Friday April 9, it is instructive to view the resurgence of a modern Jewish national awakening that is now taking place in the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Jews are an oppressed people living in totalitarian bondage. The case of 33-year old Boris Kochubiyevsky from Kiev, in the Ukraine provides an example. Kochubiyevsky publicly supported Israel during the Six-Day War of June, 1967. In September 1968, he publicly asserted that Babi Yar-the ravine outside Kiev where the Nazis slaughtered scores of thousands of Jews in 1941-was a tragedy for the Jewish people. In November, 1968 he wrote a letter to the Soviet leadership, stating that it was impossible for him to live as a Jew in the USSR since there are no Jewish educational, cultural or communal institutions, and that he consequently wanted to emigrate to Israel. Kochubiyevsky was arrested one month later and subsequently was tried and sentenced to three years of forced labor in Siberia for "anti-Soviet slander." The Kochubiyevsky case is only one of many.

Those who believe that history repeats itself need look no further than the Soviet Union where today, as in Egypt five thousand years ago, freedom loving men and women are throwing off their schackles as the cry "Let my people go!" rings out again.

Editorial Points

In a poll released yesterday by the Boston Globe, it was discovered that 67% of the polling sample in Massachusetts disapproved of the court-martial of Lt. William L. Calley. Further, 48% felt that generals should be brought to trial and 76% thought that the life sentence given Calley was too harsh. President Nixon may not listen to people, but he sure does pay attention to those polls.

Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago claims that being mayor pays him only $34,000.92 a year. Daley made the statement in response to a charge made by Republican candidate Richard Friedman last January. It seems like that measly amount would hardly be enough to cover the property tax he must have to pay on Chicago.

Dr. Harry Breitman, a physician in Philadelphia became the first Pennsylvania doctor to be sentenced to jail for Medicare fraud. However, when 200 of his patients complained that he was the only doctor in the neighborhood who made house calls, the judge freed him on weekdays. In other words, people don't mind if they get cheated as long as they can have it done at home.

Participating Citizens

To the Editor:

I am writing to comment on the article in last Friday's MDC entitled "Bromery Gets Power of Approval On Dorms." While this is a step in the right direction, I feel that one more important step must be taken. Students must be included to a significant degree in all decision making bodies on this campus. Just moving the decision making power from the Board of Trustees to Whitmore means little to most students, but if students were allowed to make decisions by themselves for themselves, then perhaps the University will begin to "develop active participating citizens" among those of us who live here.

Two Unbelievable Years

To the Editor:

I am sorry to hear that Julius Erving may have signed with the A.B.A. because I will not be able to see him play next year. I realize that it is selfish of me to feel this way, but I know I am not alone. Julius singlehandedly brought UMass basketball to where it is today, and it will surely suffer by his leaving. I shall never forget his game against Syracuse, because it was his game, from the opening tip to the buzzer. I shall miss seeing him stuff it in warm ups, and watching him grab those now famous one handed rebounds. He was the greatest this school, and all of New England, has ever seen.

So I suggest that U Mass have a Julius Erving night the first home game next season. We should at least be given the chance to say good-bye before he is gone forever.

Until then, I am sure that I speak for all UMass fans who wish Julius Erving good luck in the pros. There is no doubt that he will be a superstar wherever he plays. We can all tune in the A.B.A. All-Star game next year and watch him play, or we can go to a New York Net games when he plays in New York. But it will just not be the same.

Thank you, Julius Erving, for two unbelievable years.

No Small Thing

To the Editor:

Tuesday's front page story in the Collegian, while pointing out interesting similarities between the trial of Lt. William Calley and the War Crimes Trial at Nuremburg, failed to cite one major difference -- one which (amidst all the justified dissatisfaction with the American "System") makes me conscious -- and thankful -- that I am here rather than in some of the other countries which are held up as "better" systems. I refer, of course, to the fact that this trial -- however limited in scope -- was conducted by our government, rather than, as in the Nuremburg case, imposed upon it. And that, I believe, is no small thing.

"And Besides, It Makes Us Look Like Damn Fools"

Dynamic Israeli pianist David Bar-Illan will give two concerts Tuesday and Wednesday evenings at 8 in Bowker Auditorium. Bar-Illan will perform works of Beethoven, Schubert, Paul Ben-Haim and others.

The Best, Bar-None

David Bar-Illan, the noted Israeli-born pianist will perform two recitals at the University of Massachusetts under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council. Mr. Bar-Illan replaces the indisposed Byron Janis for these final events of the 1970-71 Celebrity Series.

For his program on Tuesday evening, April 6th, Mr. Bar-Illan has programmed works by Padre Soler, Paul Ben-Haim, Schubert, Beethoven and Liszt. On Wednesday, April 7th, Mr. Bar-Illan will perform works by Rameau, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Chopin and Liszt. Both concerts are scheduled for Bowker Auditorium at 8:00 p.m.

Reserved tickets are available by contacting the University's Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, Telephone 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium Box office one hour prior to each concert.

David Bar-Illan has appeared as soloist with virtually every major orchestra in this country and abroad and is considering one of the most exciting keyboard artists before the public today.

Air Cleared About Alley

To the Editor:

In response to Robert J. Padgett's letter on this page March 19, 1971, I should like to explain a few matters pertaining to the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theatre's appearance at the University.

The flyers and posters which were distributed in connection with the Ailey visit were supplied by Columbia Artists Management, Inc., New York and were prepared, I am sure, under the watchful eye of Mr. Ailey personally. While the illustration on both pieces did illustrate black members of the Company, it is a well-known fact that Mr. Ailey has stressed the inter-racial quality of his Company since its founding in 1958. The illustration used is that of Mr. Ailey's most famous choreography, "Revelations" and the decision to photograph those members of his Company, I am sure, was solely in the hands of Mr. Ailey. I am sorry that Mr. Padgett felt that we advertised this engagement in a less than honest way as this, of course, was not our intention. We simply used the material which Mr. Ailey supplied to us and I feel that those attending the performance did not agree with Mr. Padgett's view that we misrepresented this Company. If Mr. Padgett has any argument, it should be directed to Mr. Ailey.

With reference to Mr. Padgett's criticism that this engagement conflicted with the Dick Gregory appearance in the Student Union Ballroom, I must say that I quite agree with him. As a matter of record, I have written the several people involved with scheduling at the University to see whether a central scheduling office could be established at the University which governed all areas of the campus. At present this is not being done and results in a great confusion and often a great waste of money. It seems to me that all prospective events should be cleared through a central scheduling office and evaluated in terms of need, preparation of project, and any possible conflict with other similar programs.

The Fine Arts Council, by its nature, must plan at least one year in advance and, therefore, the Schedule Office is aware of its program for the 1971/72 academic year at this moment. If things continue in the normal pattern, we will find many organizations presenting their events on exactly the same nights giving no regard to the plans for this program. This seems to have been the case with Dick Gregory's appearance as our contract covering the Alvin Ailey Company was dated April 22, 1970 and I presume that, if asked, D.V.P. could not produce a contract covering Mr. Gregory's engagement at that date.

I think such conflicts can be avoided if some consideration is exercised by all groups producing events on this campus. The conflict between the Ailey engagement and the Gregory engagement was particularly sad as it fragmented the audience wishing to attend both events. The Fine Arts Council stands ready and eager to cooperate in a central scheduling office on the campus and I hope that one will exist here before long so that such conflicts can be avoided in the future.

Sincerely,
Terry C. Schwarz

Poets, Potters, Prizewinners Highlight Festival of Arts

By PAT SUPRENANT
MDC Staff

The 1971 Martin Luther King, Jr. Memorial Lecture Series will open its festival of the arts on Monday with Harry Hall. Hall, a potter of the Oriental method, will lecture at 8:00 p.m. in SBA 120 on pottery as a way of life with his art as the center of his philosophies. Hall will also give a demonstration from 1:00 to 4:00 p.m. on the concourse level of the Campus Center.

Also sharing opening day honors will be Mark Van Doren. Van Doren, one of the best known American poets of the Twentieth Century and winner of the Pulitizer Prize for poetry in Thompson 104 at 8:00 p.m. A coffee hour with the distinguished professor from Columbia University will follow the lecture in the Colonial Lounge.

Paul Szep, editorial cartoonist for the Boston Globe, will also be here on Monday along with a display of his works. He will be on hand to talk to anyone interested at Memorial Hall from 2:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. and at 8:00 p.m. A coffee hour will follow.

One of Tuesday's speakers will be Leo Marx, professor of English at Amherst College and author Machine in the Garden, one of the most comprehensive studies of pastorialism in American literature. Discussion on the question of revolutionary pastorialism will be held at Herter 227 at 8:00 p.m.

David Silver, Artist-in-Residence at Brandeis University and creator-host of WGBH-TV's "What's Happening Mr. Silver?", will also appear on Tuesday at the Campus Center Auditorium at 8:00 p.m.

Wednesday's series of distinguished lecturers will begin with Dr. Stanley Krippner from the Maimonides Medical Center with the Dream Clinic to lecture on the effects of the psychedelic experience in art and music. He can be heard in the Campus Center Auditorium at 6:00 p.m.

Stan Van Der Beek will be the other guest lecturer on Wednesday. Van Der Beek, a leading underground filmmaker and professor at MIT, will have a media rap-around highlighted by films in the Campus Center Auditorium at 8:30 p.m.

Ed Pincus, well-known filmmaker and professor at MIT will give a discussion on the production of filmmaking along with the showing of "One Strip Away", "Panola", and "Portrait of a McCarthy Supporter" on Thursday in Thompson 104 at 8:00 p.m.

The lecture series will end on Friday with a performance-recitation of "The ecologues of Virgil" by David Slavitt (Henry Sutton) novelist, critic, and poet. He wrote The Voyeur, and The Exhibitionist. He can be found in the Campus Center Cafeteria at 8:00.

Liam Miller permanent residence of Dublin, Ireland will lecture on "20th Century Irish Literature" in Memorial Hall Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. on Friday.

All guests will be available during the day to visit with interested classes.

Placement Offers Help To Jobless Seniors

The Placement Office offers the following notes to students:

Seniors still looking for jobs should take note of the Management Intern examination to be given May 1, 1971. Applications are available in the Placement Office and are due on April 12. Those interested should take action now.

A degree from a four-year school is the only requirement, along with a special interest.

Careers in Business 71 contains information on applying for a business position, as well as on Business Action for Peace, an organization of concerned businessmen formed as a result of last year's strike.

Business Today, is a magazine written by students for students. This spring's issue includes an interview with Attorney General John Mitchell.

For people interested in the priesthood, a day of introduction will be held at St. John's Seminary in Brighton, April 22 and 23. Those who attend can get an idea of what theological school is like.

College Placement Annuals are now available in the Placement Office for those seniors registered.

It is the official occupational directory of the Regional Placement Association, providing information on the positions customarily offered to college graduates by principal employers.

Seniors can still register to have the Placement Office help them find a job.

Paris Program Meeting Scheduled

A meeting for all students interested in the Paris program will be held Wednesday April 7th at 7 PM in the third floor lounge in Herter Hall.

Professor Brian Thompson, next year's director of the program, will discuss and answer questions.

A total of thirty students from the Amherst and Boston campuses will be accepted in the program, to live with a family in Paris.

The students will take half of their courses at the Sorbonne and other French schools, and the other half with two UMass faculty members.

Non-majors may take part in the program. The only prerequisite suggested is a "decent knowledge of spoken French" according to Dr. Fredrick Busi, this year's director of the Paris program.

The Paris Program is co-ed.

Cost for the program is not more than the average school year at UMass here.

Dr. Busi encouraged students to apply. He said "you only risk gaining the benefit of travel experience."

Cornely Speaks At Smith Tom.

Dr. Paul B. Cornely, professor of preventive medicine and chairman of the department of community health practice at the Howard University college of medicine will speak tomorrow night at Smith College on "Population, Pollution, Poverty, and Politics in Public Health."

In the talk, which will be held at 8 p.m. in Wright Hall, Dr. Cornely will discuss the nature of the present health crises facing Americans, and the need for greater emphasis on education, housing, environment, and prevention to combat them.

A member of the President's Commission on Population Growth and the American Future, Dr. Cornely is chairman of the executive board of the American Public Health Association, of which he is immediate past president.

Born in the French West Indies in 1906, he received his bachelor of arts in 1928, his M.D. degree three years later, and his doctorate in public health in 1934, all from the University of Michigan. He joined the Howard University administration as director of the university health service in 1937.

In 1947 he became medical director of the Freedman's Hospital in Washington, D.C. He also filled a joint University-Hospital appointment as chief of the division of physical medicine and rehabilitation and served as director of the Howard center for youth and community tudies, and acting project director of the Comprehensive Neighborhood Health Center for the upper Cardoza area.

Sickle Cell Drive Started

There may be a student in your class with the severe chronic disease sickle cell anemia.

Such a person is often thin and small for his age. He experiences periods of physical discomfort due to this disease. This person may also have psychological problems arising from feeling of inferiority because of an inability to compete physically, progress because of frequent absence due to the disease's periods of activity, and parental overconcern and over protection.

There is no specific treatment for sickle cell anemia since little research has been done. Money is needed to fund such research. To help eliminate this disease, send contributions to Dr. Bromery's office, at 375 Whitmore Administration Building.

Inflation Subject Of Focus Tonigh

Tonight at 10 p.m. WMUA's "Focus" program will be concerned with the problems of the American consumer struggling to survive in a period of inflated economy.

Moderator Ken Mosakowski's special guest for tonight's live, call-in-type forum will be Miss Sharon King of the Consumer Protection Division of the office of the Massachusetts Attorney General.

Topics expected to be covered in tonight's discussion include false advertising, the "truth-in-packaging" law, the rise of food co-operatives, and the legal recourses available to consumers who feel they have been shortchanged or swindled.

Law Books Course Developed

The law staff of the School of Business Administration will offer a short course on legal materials and their use beginning on April 7 at the Goodell Library. The course will meet weekly in Wednesday evenings for four successive weeks.

While the course is intended primarily for reference librarians there will be some additional room available for those desiring a working knowledge of the law collection and its use.

Those interested should contact Mary Jo Lynch of the Library, 5-0467.

Greeks Raise Money For Dystrophy

A "Shamrocks for Dystrophy" Tag Day held on March 10th and 11th at the University of Massachusetts has resulted in a contribution of $2,039 to the Western Massachusetts Chapter of the Muscular Dystrophy Associations of America, Inc.

The event was sponsored by Sigma Phi Edsilon Fraternity with supporting help from three sororities, Sigma Kappa, Alpha Chi Omega and Kappa Alpha Theta.

Charles Robinson, Chairman of the drive, said "We wish to thank the students and faculty for their generosity and the three sororities who worked hard to make this Shamrock Tag Day an overwhelming success."

Muscular Dystrophy is a muscle-destroying disease which disables its victims, so weakening them that a common cold can kill. In addition to supporting research, the Western Massachusetts Chapter also maintains an extensive patient service program and sponsors a summer camp.

"Festival Of The Arts" Lectures Begin Today

This year's Martin Luther King Memorial Lecture series at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst will be "Festival of the Arts: New England," beginning today.

The 10 lectures and lecture-demonstrations will be given today through Friday, April 9, by poet Mark Van Doren, TV personality David Silver, cartoonist Paul Szep, authors Leo Marx and Henry Sutton, film-makers Stan Van DerBeek and Ed Pincus, dramatist Liam Miller, Dr. Stanley Krippner and potter Harry Holl.

All are open to the public without charge. Coffee hours will be held after the lectures and the visiting artists will be available to visit with interested classes. The Martin Luther King series pays tribute to Dr. King on the anniversary month of his death, and is sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program and the senior class.

Harry Holl is a potter of the oriental method who lives and works on Cape Cod. Mark Van Doren is a Pulitzer Prize winner and one of the best known poets of the 20th Century. Paul Szep is editorial cartoonist for the Boston Globe. Leo Marx is a professor of English at Amherst College and author of "The Machine in the Garden." David Silver is artist in residence at Brandeis University and host for the WGBH—TV show "What's Happening Mr. Silver?"

Dr. Stanley Krippner is at the Maimonides Medical Center and has worked with Room to Move, the UMass drug drop-in center. Stan Van Der Beek and Ed Pincus are film makers and faculty members at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Henry Sutton is the pen name of David Slavitt, novelist, critic and poet. Liam Miller is active in the Irish theatre.

A complete schedule for the series follows:

Monday, April 5--Harry Holl "Pottery and a Way of Life," Demonstration: Campus Center Concourse 1-4 p.m.; Lecture-SBA 120, 8 p.m. Mark Van Doren - Lecture-Thompson 104, 8 p.m. "Reading and Commentary of His Own Poetry" Coffee - Colonial Lounge, Student Union. Paul Szep - exhibit and discussion - Memorial Hall, 8 p.m., Coffee-Memorial Hall.

Tuesday, April 6 -- Leo Marx- "Revolutionary Pastoralism-a Literary Question?", Herter 227, 8 p.m.; Coffee - Memorial Hall Lounge. David Silver, Campus Center Auditorium - "How Long Ago Was 1984?". Coffee-Colonial Lounge.

Wednesday, April 7 -- Stanley Krippner - "Effects of Psychedelic Experience in Art and Music," Campus Center Auditorium, 6 p.m. Coffee - Dukes Room, Student Union. Stan Van Der Beek - "Media Rap-Around" Campus Center Auditorium, 8 p.m.; Coffee - 10th floor Campus Center.

Thursday, April 8 -- Ed Pincus on film production with a showing of "One Step Away," "Panola" and "Portrait of a McCarthy Supporter"-Thompson 104, 8 p.m. Coffee-Colonial Lounge, Student Union.

Friday, April 9 -- David Slavitt (Henry Sutton) "A Performance-Recitation of 'The Eclogues of Vergil'"-Campus Center Cafeteria - performance and coffee 8 p.m. Liam Miller - "20th Century Irish Theatre"-Memorial Hall Auditorium, 8 p.m. Coffee-Memorial Hall Auditorium.

Student Teaching Program Offered

A summer program for student teaching will start in Greenfield, Mass. on June 9th, and end July 30th, 1971. Practice teaching will begin July 28th and last five weeks until July 30th.

Criteria for selection will give preference to seniors graduating in January 1972 and then to each class after the senior class.

Methods will NOT be offered in this summer teaching program.

Applications are available in Room 100, School of Education, and must be returned to that office no later than April 8. A maximum of 22 students will be accepted into the program.

Interested students should contact Jerry Freiberg in Room 100 or call 545-1533 if there are any questions.

Correction

The Student Government Affairs Committee of the Student Senate will hold a public hearing on a permanent structure for a Concert Commission to replace the Interim Planning Committee. The hearing will be tonight at 7:30 in Room 804 of the Campus Center.

Mayday Movement Support Urged

For the first time in the history of the movement, national third world organizations are joining with the antiwar movement in conducting the spring offensive for peace and justice.

The National Welfare Rights Organization headed by Dr. George Wiley, and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference directed by Dr. Ralph Abernathy, are bringing their constituencies into this spring's activities.

April 1-4: TRIBUTE IN ACTION TO MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR.- Suport for SCLC-NWRO call for action on the theme: "Freedom from hunger, war and repression." Focus on SCLC—NWRO demonstration on Wall Street. Nationwide local activities such as: Hunger marches to dramatize hunger for jobs, housing and peace; Fasts; Teach-ins and other special programs in schools on April 2; Tax Protest and Resistance activities on a community level relating to reordering priorities; Rallies on April 3; Religious Tributes to Martin Luther King on Sunday April 4. People will be urged to live on Welfare food budget the week of March 28 to April 3. Local WRO'S will sponsor welfare dinners April 4. (Money collected from Hunger Marches, Fasts, and Rallies will be sent to National Welfare Right's Organization, 1419 H. St. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20005).

April 5-9 NEW YORK CITY. SCLC AND PEOPLE'S COALITION.

April 5-9 NEW YORK CITY. SCLC AND PEOPLE'S COALITION. Demonstrations, including militant non-violent civil disobedience at Wall Street to dramatize demands of America's poor.

Grad. Art Showings At Herter

The graduate art program at UMass will begin its master of fine arts thesis showings this week in the Herter Hall Art Gallery.

Masters candidates will exhibit paintings and printmakings during the month of April, in the gallery from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Exhibitors include John Jeffcott of Northampton, April 3 to 10; John Wallace of Euclid, Ohio, April 10-27; Henry Pelletier of Weston, April 17 to 24; and Elizabeth Strasser of Croton Hudson, New York, April 24 to May 1.

The public is invited without charge.

How do you rate as an independent thinker?

Answer Yes or No.

1. All your friends have decided to wear short shorts. You really don't like the look. Do you follow the gang?

Yes ☐ No ☐

2. You've just met a marvelous, interesting guy who's shorter than you. Would you be embarrassed to go out with him?

Yes ☐ No ☐

3. You've been invited to dinner again by a group of nice but uninteresting people. Do you feel obliged to accept?

Yes ☐ No ☐

4. All the charts say you're 10 pounds overweight. You feel fine and your clothes look well. Do you diet anyway?

Yes ☐ No ☐

5. You appreciate all kinds of music. Except opera. Do you think you should listen anyway because it's "the thing to do"?

Yes ☐ No ☐

If you've answered "No" to three or more questions, you really rate as an independent thinker. Another example of your independent thinking: You use Tampax tampons.

Why Tampax tampons? Because, when you compare them all, only Tampax tampons give you these advantages: Each Tampax tampon comes in a silken-smooth container-applicator. Both applicator and tampon can be flushed away. No unwieldy stick or plastic tube to dispose of.

Worn internally, Tampax tampons are completely comfortable. Can't chafe, cause odor or irritate like bulky pads. Tampax tampons. They make every day of the year Independence Day.

Right from the start . . .

TAMPAX® TAMPONS ARE MADE ONLY BY TAMPAX INCORPORATED, PALMER, MASS.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

A Virgo woman can rise to almost any occasion. She has a keen sense of timing, to say nothing of drama. Whatever the situation, the woman born under Virgo can handle it-it under pressure. Never underestimate the power of a woman-especially one born under Virgo. Some famous Virgo women include Greta Garbo, Sophia Loren and Lauren Bacall. . . .

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Impulsiveness now could be costly. Take time to survey situation. Leo individual is right in urging caution. Be independent, but avoid any trace of arrogance. Message will be increasingly clear.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Some obstacles actually can work to your advantage. Challenge now proves invigorating. Know this and don't shirk responsibility. Follow through on hunch. It could pay off-big.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Short journeys might better be temporarily delayed. Forces now are scattered. Element of confusion is present. Wait for additional information. Get puzzle pieces in place.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Some one who is envious could try to throw wet blanket over your plans. Key is to value your assets. Refuse to denigrate yourself. Build self-esteem. Welcome chance for love.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Lunar cycle is high, but old debt limits actions. Take it slow-and easy. Means don't be led entirely by impulse. Be ready for breakthrough. Affects standing, prestige and financial position.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Stick with what is familiar. Wandering too far from home base now would be a mistake. Know this and act accordingly. Leo individual aids cause. Many answers are temporarily behind the scenes.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Some funds may be restricted. You do best now through attitude of wait-and-see. Avoid jumping to conclusions. See clearly. Refuse to be deluded by empty promises. Strive for patience.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Some ideas need further development. Don't attempt to move too far, too fast. Conservative course now would be constructive. Relative may sing blues. Don't get involved.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may feel like you are walking on eggs. Delicate balance exists in special relationship, situation. You should finish present task. New start now would be premature.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Nothing to apt to occur halfway. Feelings, activities are intense. Take new road; leave past behind. Look to future. Original methods help enhance potential. Odds favor your success.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Carry on with essentials. Don't invent problems. Family member may be pessimistic, but it is your own faith that really matters. Accent on marriage, legal partnership. Go slow.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Stress ability to be flexible without being weak. Stand tall for principles, but also keep open mind. Neighbors, relatives look to you as example. Be fair in any appraisal. You will gain.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are completing an important cycle, to be climaxed successfully in August. Your greatest asset is pioneering spirit. Finances due for remarkable improvement, beginning in June. You have intellectual curiosity and gain is shown through written word.

Hoopsters Feted at Banquet

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

Amongst all the commotion of the past few days concerning the recent rumored signing of Julius Erving to a pro basketball contract by the Virginia Squires of the ABA, the UMass basketball fraternity got together Saturday night at North Dining Commons to pay tribute to this year's Redman hoop squad in a testimonial sponsored by the Court Club.

Erving who has been kept in close raps during the week was on hand with his attorney and the latest story has it that he will be in Virginia either today or tomorrow to make the final negotiations on his reported $500,000 pact with the Squires.

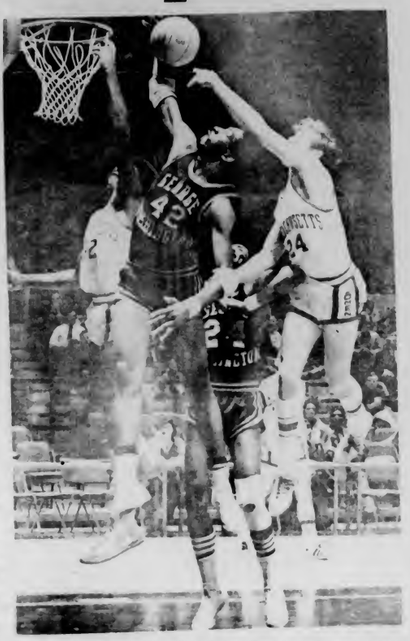
The Court Club, which planned and organized the banquet is a new organization on campus that came in to existance last fall with the purpose to lend financial and physical support to the UMass basketball program.

With the financial aspect seemingly a secondary quantity for this occasion, those present, including the families, friends and the media lent their overwhelming physical support in acknowledging the Redman achievements of this past campaign.

Jack Donahue head basketball at Holy Cross was the featured speaker and gave a rollesome rendition before settling down to the more serious matters of praising both the squad and their head coach for what he termed one of the few teams on the Crusader schedule that he truly respects.

He told the players to remember their parents, their friends and what they've learned at the university because if they lose their skills on the court these will be the only things to get them by in the future.

"I'm very proud of the players who perform for me and very jealous of the good teams and players and some of the greatest people, not just as athletes but as people that I've ever met right here in the UMass basketball program."



"I'm very fortunate also that I can call Jack Leaman a friend," Donahue said in completing his talk.

Award winners included John Betancourt, the Samuel B. Samuels award as the top foul shooter on the Redman squad; Chris Coffin, the George H. Richards award as the most improved player on the team and Erving, the George Burke award, symbolic of the most valuable player on the team.

Coaches Leaman, Peter Broaca, Ray Wilson and Mike Bernstein were given awards of appreciation by the team in a showing of the unity in the basketball program that has spearheaded the Redman successes of the past five years under the coaching staff of Leaman.

In closing the program Leaman had a few thoughts on the ABA. "When I wake up in the morning I hope it's just a nightmare. Some mornings I wake up and I hope it's all over. I have learned what has taken place in the past week for a while.

"The only good thing that I can say about the league is that they have good taste in dealing with a man like Julius Erving. If they keep talking to people like Julius then they can't help but get better," said Leaman who has been a bitter denouncer of the ABA's actions in signing underclassmen.

Netmen Beat BC

By SOL FEIGEDMAN
MDC staff

Doing away with the Boston college netmen in grand fashion, the UMass tennis team romped to an 8-1 victory yesterday afternoon. The Sunday afternoon contest saw UMass drop just two sets in nine matches in a display of total domination.

The season opener against BC had been scheduled for Saturday afternoon, but due to mis-scheduling the BC athletic department on the match had to be postponed for one day.

With sun shining and the wind gusting, Captain Alan Goldberg started it all off with a 6-1, 6-2 win. Next there was Jim Bornheim, a junior, who played what Coach Kosakowski called an "outstanding match" as he won at second singles 9-7 and 6-3.

John Bloom captured third singles with narry a problem winning 6-1, 6-0. Then in the fifth and sixth slots it was freshmen Mark Brass, and sophomore Steve Ferber winning easily, 6-3, 6-4 and 6-2 respectively.

After Bornheim had rapped up the match with the fifth Redmen victory, the doubles became mere formality.

Teaming with Goldberg at first doubles was Bob Webmen. They had little trouble in scoring a 6-1, 7-5 win. Then the seventh and eighth UMass players made their appearance in the persons of Chris Coffin and Fred Braley. Coffin and Bloom took second doubles in 6-3, 6-4 fashion, and Brass and Braley came from behind in the second set to close out the match with a 6-2, 7-5 victory.

"This is just about what I expected" commented Coach Kosakowski. He went on to say, "I thought we played well and we should be in good shape to face MIT on Wednesday."

In duplicating the 8-1 victory over BC of one year ago, UMass gave a good indication of its excellent depth. But as Captain Goldberg said, "I don't think that this match enables us to show our true colors." Perhaps not, but Wednesday will surely give the netmen that opportunity.

Bruins Win Finale, 7-2

BOSTON (AP) - Phil Esposito scored three times to break the once unheard of 75-goal barrier yesterday as the Boston Bruins concluded their record-shattering National Hockey League regular season with a 7-2 victory over the Montreal Canadiens.

Boston's Derek Sanderson scored two short-handed goals in the battle between the two teams who will meet here Wednesday night in the opener of their first round Stanley Cup playoff series.

Sanderson opened the scoring at 5:51 of the first period after Westfall intercepted a pass.

Yvan Cournoyer tied it with his 37th goal late in the session, but Esposito tipped in a Don Awrey slap shot midway in the middle period to break the deadlock and Westfall hiked the count to 3-1 a few minutes later.

Esposito connected on a power play at 15:06 to reach the 75 goal milestone, then completed his hat trick early in the finale.

Ex-UMass Stars Here May 1

Appearances of UMass pro stars and the debut of new Head Coach Dick MacPherson's 1971 Redman football team in an intrasquad game will highlightBernie Dallas Day, at Alumni Stadium, May 1.

The daylong schedule of events will be offered for a slight student admission fee of $1. The proceeds will go toward the creation of a Berne Dallas Memorial to be built on the mall to the university drive side of Alumni Stadium. In addition to the central monument, to Dallas, memorial will have space for the honoring of outstanding UMass students in all areas of student life.

UMass grads Greg Landry, Detroit Lion star quarterback and Milt Morin, Cleveland Brown tight end star, will lead the contigent of pro stars which will take part in a morning clinic and discussion period, for state high school coaches and players and the public. Also participating in the clinic, will be former Redmen Boston Patriot defensive tackle Ed Toner, and Green Bay Packer Phil Vandersea, plus Maine grad, star Denver Bronco linebacker John Huard, Boston Patriot assistant coach Sam Rutigliano, and recent UMass pro draftees, Bob Pena, Pierre Marchando, and Nick McGarry.

In the afternoon, the first MacPherson team will have an intrasquad game, as a climax to spring practice.

Dallas, a 1966 UMass grad, was killed in a tragic auto accident three years ago this month. A group of classmates and friends decided to honor him. Dallas, while a UMass undergrad, was class president four years, co-captain of the 1965 UMass football team, president of Kappa Sigma, a member of Adelphia and chosen for Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities.

Ticket information is available by contacting David Kelley in Boyden of James Allen in the Alumni Affairs office in Memorial Hall.

Hose Pound Yanks

NEW ORLEANS, LA. (AP) - The Boston Red Sox sent 10 men to the plate and scored seven runs in the seventh inning to romp to a 14-8 victory over the New Youk Yankees yesterday in the final pre-season exhibition game for both teams.

Duane Josephson, Don Pavletich and Joe Lahoud hit homers and John Kennedy a two-run tripple in the inning.

Ken Brett, who hurled the sixth and seventh innings and gave up no runs and two hits, was the winner. He relieved starter Gary Peters, who staggered through three run first and second innings as he gave up 10 hits and seven runs in his five-inning stint. Yankee starter Mel Stottlemyre and loser Gary Waslewski gave up seven runs each. Waslewski pitched only two innings, but was the victim of the big seventh.

Ken Tatum pitched the final two innings.

Roy White hit homers in the first and fourth innings for the Yankees.

Governance Commission Hearings

For A 'University As A Whole'

(Editor's Note: The following article is printed to enlighten students as to the position of the Student Senate on the issue of campus governance. This is done so in conjunction with the hearings being held today to learn student opinion of the proposed University Senate. The hearings are being held from 1 to 5 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge in the Student Union.)

A preliminary report of the Sub-Committee on campus Governance, from the Student Government Affairs Committee of the Student Senate released the following report intended for presentation to the open hearings of the Campus Governance Commission on April 6 and to the Student Senate for discussion at its meeting on April 7.

The recommendations and questions contained in this report represent the majority of the sub-committee. The following persons participated in the sub-committee meetings: Ross Benjamin, Bruce Berstein, John Hogan, Janet Pearlman, Mary Silveira, Rick Staples, with Larry Ladd acting as chairman.

"We endorse the concept of the University Senate as presented in the second interim report. In principle, it will create a sense of the University as a whole, rather than as a myraid collection of warring factions. Dialogue will replace negotiation. A sense of unity and shared values could grow from it. A University Senate would tend to divide more over issues and ideology than along artificial student/faculty/administration lines. Neither group or groups is a monolith.

"We do however have strong reservations that the legitimate concerns of students could be lost or diluted in the present proposal. Indeed, if the proposal serves in any way to muffle the voices of students on this campus, we would oppose it. The University Senate, if it is to be an improvement over our current system, must guarantee that each group has the power to influence those decisions that would affect it. It is on that basis that we submit our recommendations.

"Our major recommendations are:

(1) That the Senate be composed of 70 students (56 undergraduates and no fewer than 14 graduates), 70 faculty members, and 5 members of the professional staff.

(2) That the ratios on many of the Senate committees be adjusted to increase student representation.

(3) That there be a guarantee that at least one Senate officer be a student.

(4) That each conference have a suspensive veto over all Senate legislation.

(5) That each conference have the authority to take advisory votes.

This report will first discuss these recommendations, and then proceed to list our other recommendations as well as ask questions about areas that are unclear to us.

(1) That the Senate be composed to 70 students (56 undergrads and no fewer than 14 grads), 70 faculty members, and 5 members of the professional staff.

Students deserve at least an equal representation in the Senate. Decisions made by the Senate will affect students as much as faculty. The student body must not be relegated to the role of vocal minority, but must be recognized as an equal partner in the university enterprise.

(2) That the ratios in many Senate committees be adjusted to increase student representation.

On the following committees, students and faculty should have a ratio of 1-1, or realistically of at least 2 students to 3 faculty: Undergraduate Academic Matters Committee and its sub-committees on curriculum, academic regulations, calendar, admissions policy, and financial aid; Graduate Academic Matters Committee and its sub-committees on curriculum, admissions and academic regulations, and five-college cooperation; Board of Admissions and Records; and Financial Aid Council.

We have serious reservations about the lack of ratios for Standing Graduate Councils and that there is no guarantee of representation for foreign students on the Foreign Students Committee. We further recommend that the ratio on the Camputer Research Committee be 3-1-1.

(3) That there be a constitutional guarantee that at least one Senate officer be a student.

Because the faculty members have longer tenure in the Senate, could have greater skills in old-style politics, and could outnumber students, it is too possible that all of the elected Senate officers could be faculty members. This would not be consistent with the goals of the University Senate. Therefore we recommend that there be a constitutional provision that at least one officer must be a member of the undergraduate or graduate conference.

(4) That each conference have a suspensive veto over all Senate legislation.

There is a possibility that the Senate, on any issue, could decide a matter to the detriment of one of the constituencies. This provision would insure that a conference could at least ask the Senate to reconsider such an action.

(5) That each conference have the authority to take advisory votes.

It is imperative that no constituency be denied the opportunity to speak on any issue.

In addition to our major recommendations, we recommend that the following constitutional changes be made:

(a) That elections be held in the fall semester, at most 4 weeks after the first day of classes, assuming office one week after elections. This, among other things, will help to insure that a senator will be residing within his district at the beginning of the academic year. It will eliminate many problems of residence and classification. Further, we recommend that a senator who has moved into another district must be subject to a vote of confidence by his district to remain a senator from that district.

(b) That a Senate officer be removed by a two-thirds vote. A vote of 3/4ths is unreasonable on almost any question, but if a Senate officer has lost the confidence of 2/3rds of the Senate, we believe that he merits removal. Three-quarters unduly binds the Senate.

(c) That a constitutional guarantee require that all constituencies of the Fine Arts Council financially support the Council in equitable proportions. All constituencies should pay reasonable fine arts fees.

(d) That the provision requiring approval of constitutional amendments by referenda of each constituency be dropped. This is unnecessary and burdensome, if every amendment, no matter how petty, must be submitted in this fashion.

We wish also to submit the following questions for clarification:

(1) What is the definition of a "full-time student"?

(2) What are the duties of the Senate officers? The offices of president and executive vice president are particularly unclear.

When the final draft constitution is submitted by the Joint Commission on Campus Governance on April 15, the Student Government Affairs Committee will again study the document and submit its recommendations, for adoption or rejection, to the Senate and to the Student Government Association in referendum.

Political Cartoonist Szep Talks of Job and Things

By RENE COMPTOIS
MDC Staff

"I think ridicule is a far more effective device than going for the throat." So said Paul Michael Szep last night at a coffee hour at Memorial Hall.

Better known simply as "Szep" to his thousands of fans, the popular cartoonist has been creating controversial cartoons for the Boston Globe for four years.

Szep was born in Canada and still retains his citizenship there. "It helps me take an objective look at the situation," he said. He wanted to be a political cartoonist since he was 16, so he studied at the Art School of the University of Toronto.

"After graduating I had to take many jobs in the art field before the position at the Globe presented itself," he continued. "I was really lucky to get the job at the age of 24."

Each week Szep draws five cartoons for the Globe. It takes him eight hours to complete a cartoon from conception to final draft.

Said Szep: "You can placate the liberal all you want, but it's the silent majority and the conservative that I want to reach." He went on: "I receive hundreds of calls and letters a day, usually running 3 to 1 against which shows me that I am getting to the people I want to."

He also receives much political feedback from his cartoons.

"Volpe used to get quite bullshit, as have Governor Sargeant and many other local politians," he said. "District Attorney Edmond Denise even tried to sue me for liable and slander."

His favorite subjects are Melvin Laird and Richard Nixon, he said. He commented, "Laird has a certain shiftiness which makes him easily adaptable, and Richard Nixon has a built in sinisterism which makes him very easy to satarize.

When asked if he had ever had any aspiration for public office, the cartoonist quickly replied, "Are you kidding? Absolutely not!"

Senate Has Yet To Decide Final SATF For Next Year

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

The Student Senate has now arrived at a tentative figure of $41.50 for next year's Student Activity Tax, but this projection is still far from finalized. At least two more weeks of Senate consideration are necessary before the definite figure is reached. Student reaction will also be taken into consideration in that time.

The size of the tax is determined by the total amount of funds which the Senate votes to budget to student organizations for the coming year. The Senate is still considering its budget recommendations for the 25 organizations to be funded by the student tax. Its present recommendations call for a total of over $625,000 to be budgeted.

Each of the 25 budgets has been included in a Budget Act which the Senate must now read through completely twice before approving. During both of the readings scheduled for the next two Wednesday Senate meetings, changes can be made in any budget.

To make a change, a Senator reads his proposed amendment before the Senate, which must then agree by a majority vote to consider and debate the amendment. The change would then be incorporated into the Budget Act if approved by a majority vote. After the two complete readings, it takes a 2/3 vote of the Senate to approve the entire Budget Act.

At this time, it is not possible to tell what changes, if any, the Senate will make in the budgets. The total could go up or down or not change at all. According to Senator Kevin Kulakowski, chairman of the Senate Budgets Committee, the final total "depends on the reflection we get from the student body on how high or low it wants the tax to be. Students will have to convey their regard of the budget to their respective Senators and the Senate as a whole." To more completely inform people of the Budget Act, Kulakowski will discuss the Act on WMUA this evening from 8 to 8:30. Phone calls will probably be taken.

Once approved by the Senate, the Budget Act is reviewed by the Administration and trustees, who must approve the tax for it to be collected. If the Administration vetoes the Senate recommendations, Senators would have to go to the trustees to explain them in hearings. According to Kulakowski, the only grounds the Administration would have for a veto would be if the Senate requests a tax of over $40.

This year's Student Activity Tax was for $36.50. Among substantial changes in this year's budgets are the following: a substantial increase in Free University; essentially a doubling of Area Government; a 1/3 cut in INDEX. Three new organizations are budgeted: Black Mass Communications, Room to Move, and WROY. The budgets of Rapline and Precisionettes are struck.

Kulakowski is presently trying to make up a number of extra copies of the Budget Act, which will include category listings of each budget. He hopes to have them available for students in the RSO Office by Wednesday afternoon.

Senate Drawing Up Plans For Concert Committee

By TED HAYKAL
MDC Staff

The Student Senate proposed a formation of a voluntary committee consisting of three students to resolve the problem of selecting a concert committee for ensuing concerts, at a meeting last night.

The problem at hand involves the selection of new committee members and the acquiring of concert groups, according to Student Senate requests.

A proposal drawn up by Senator Bill Abbott to include 26 individuals on the committee was rejected by the Student Government Affairs Committee after discussion. This proposal for selecting new members would had had 15 individuals selected through area groups and 11 would have been appointed from applications and selected through the Senate committee.

The voluntary committee consists of Harold Koltin, Russ Vieira, and Henry Bouffard. They will be meeting Sunday night to form a new proposal to present to the Senate Committee about the formation of the new concert committee.

Silverman Threatens Senate

The Commuter Assembly voted last night to give the Student Senate $3300 for a day care center, scheduled to open next fall.

$2500 of the funds will pay for permanent equipment for the center, which is designed for three to five year old children of UMass students. The Assembly further voted to allocate $600 for two scholarships, and said that it would give the center an additional $200 in scholarship money if the University administration will match that amount.

In other action, the assembly voted to table a motion of censure against the Student Senate for what Assembly Chairman Mark Silverman called, "The Senate's reluctance to hold elections for the two commuter senator vacancies. We've given them a week to do something about this...then I'll be forced to act."

Senate President Glenn Elters responded by saying that he will look into the matter.

Poet Knocks War, Optimistic Anyway

By MIKE McWILLIAMS

Mark Van Doren, one of the most acclaimed poets of this century, conducted a reading and commentary of his own poetry last evening in Thompson Hall. The Pulitzer prize winning poet read a number of his poems and then commented on the thoughts and views expressed in them. After the reading, a coffee hour was held in which Van Doren discussed his views on a number of topics.

In the first half of his readings the poet concentrated on the more somber aspects of life today or what he expressed as "the terribleness of the world." In poems such as "Disaster" and "So Simple" Van Doren dealt with the various levels of misery in the world and noted that disaster is common to all life styles. "The modern city is a disaster" he further noted. In "I went among the Main Streets" he related a trip through a city slum and all the visual misery he noted there. Other topics of this type were found in poetry such as "In Evil Time" and "When The World Ends".

The last part of his readings related to what he considered the "good signs of the times". In "Born Equal" he noted that justice is being sought on universal terms and that respect can be found in many forms. "Perhaps" he stated "respect comes with keeping distance". Mr. Van Doren finished his program with a reading of one of his longer poems, "Undersong".

The coffee hour following the reading, found the poet discussing the numerous problems of the human condition. The topics ranged from involvement in Vietnam (which he feels could be terminated immediately if the Nixon administration was motivated thus) to the effects of common public education. Van Doren holds out hope for the world despite existing conditions because of what he feels to be a sense of optimism on a world scale. In the end he feels that the real human problems are beyond human solution and always will be but that significant trends in the direction of those solutions indicates some hope for our race.

'Free' H.S. Needs People

A group of UMass students who are organizing an alternative to high school needs people. They are looking for teachers in the areas of English, Art and Science/Mathematics who wish to work in a freely structured environment. Qualifications are not academic degrees but enthusiasm for subject matter and ability to get others involved.

Within the next two weeks funds for salaries will be solicited from the parents of high school students.

A meeting will be held tonight at 7:00 OM in the ninth floor lounge of the Campus Center. Interested people are urged to bring ideas about the purpose and goals of such an alternate school.

If unable to attend the meeting contact Bob Zelman at 253-5061 or at the Philosophy Department.

U.S. Troops Leaving Vietnam

SAIGON (AP)—The U.S. Command announced Monday another cutback in American military manpower in South Vietnam dropping the number to about 300,000, lowest since late summer 1966.

A further cutback is in prospect.

President Nixon is scheduled to announce Wednesday the next round of troop withdrawals. He has already indicated that he will maintain or speed the present rate of 12,500 men a month.

The U.S. Command in Saigon announced a reduction of 4,600 men that dropped the over-all troop strength to 301,900 as of last Thursday. Since then, continuing withdrawals have lowered the total to 300,000 or a little below.

The last time that milestone figure was reached was in late August of 1966 in the midst of the fast-paced buildup that hit its peak of 543,400 troops in April 1969.

The current sixth round of U.S. troop withdrawals comes to an end May 1. By that time, the American force here should be down to 284,000 men, and may be even fewer if the present rate is maintained.

Nixon's announcement Wednesday will cover the next phase after May 1, although he has not indicated the time period it will embrace.

His last such announcement on April 20, 1970, covered one year and he ordered a cutback of 150,000 men.

The U.S. Command announcement on the troop question came to the fore as the fighting died down in Indochina.

There was no word of any fresh fighting at Fire Base 6, a South Vietnamese artillery outpost in the region where borders of Laos, Cambodia and South Vietnam converge.

Heavy fighting has raged at the fire base, 300 miles north of Saigon, for five days and South Vietnamese defenders reported they repulsed another North Vietnamese attack Sunday.

The South Vietnamese command in Saigon claimed 1,817 North Vietnamese have been killed in the five days of combat and list their own losses as 71 killed and 132 wounded.

The Saigon command also reported a sharp engagement Sunday in eastern Cambodia three miles southwest of the town of Snuol. The command said South Vietnamese troops killed 50 enemy soldiers and took casualties of one killed and 25 wounded.

In Laos, the Laotian Defense Ministry said North Vietnamese troops are building up their strength by installing antiaircraft guns near the royal capital of Luang Prabang.

Pakistani Rebels Vow To Fight Until Victory

CHUADANGA, East Pakistan (AP)—Sheik Mujibur Rahman's independence forces held onto stretches of East Pakistan territory along the border with India Monday, vowing to fight until they defeat the Pakistan army.

The army of President Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan, trying to prevent this province of 75 million persons from seceding and becoming an independent nation, appeared to be in control of the major cities, including Dacca, the provincial capital.

But 11 days after the civil war broke out, numerous border towns such as Chuadanga remained in the hands of the followers of the sheik, leader of the Awami League, who is believed to be in a West Pakistani jail.

Reports received in this command post of the southwestern sector of the sheik's forces said the army was trying hard to regain control over the strategic district city of Jessore, 40 miles to the southeast.

Radio Pakistan continued to say that the army is in full control of the situation in East Pakistan "and is effectively dealing with the armed infiltrators and miscreants who are now isolated." The Indian government denied again it was permitting any infiltration from its borders. An official spokesman said in New Delhi that an order had been issued to border security forces not to permit any Indians to cross into East Pakistan.

In Chuadanga, 80 miles north of Calcutta, the local "liberation forces" were so confident of victory that they talked about letting West Pakistani soldiers surrender.

Maj. Mohammed Abu Osman, one of the two supreme commanders of East Pakistan's armed forces, proclaimed a policy of harassment and starvation against the West Pakistanis and declared: "If they surrender we will let them go. If not, we will butcher them all."

He claimed the southwest sector, comprising 25 million Bengalis in a half moon in a curve of the Ganges River, was totally liberated except for Khulna and the cantonment of Jessore.

In Agartala, India, a border town, the acting leader of Bangla Desh-the name given the rebellious province-told Associated Press correspondent Dennis Neeld his forces were trying to acquire arms from anyone who will sell them.

Mijanur Rahman, organizing secretary of the Awami League and the ranking East Pakistani leader still at liberty, said in an interview his representatives were negotiating in London for 100,000 rifles from any friendly country.

"We will buy arms from anyone who will sell them," he declared. "Buy them from Russia if they agree."

He demanded that the United States and other powers clamp an arms embargo on Khan's regime in West Pakistan "for the sake of humanity, justice and civilization."

Rahman vowed the secessionist forces of Bangla Desh would wage guerrilla war "until every Yahya Khan soldier has left our soil.

Democrats Ask Administration To Stay Aloof In Vietnam

WASHINGTON (AP)—Senate Democrats Monday called on the administration to stay out of this year's elections in South Vietnam and prove U.S. dedication to self-determination.

"We have preached self-determination at least since the time of Woodrow Wilson," said Majority Leader Mike Mansfield.

Introducing a resolution designed to guarantee U.S. neutrality, Sen. Adali E. Stevenson Ill., (D—Ill.) accused the administration of actively working for re-election of President Nguyen Van Thieu and Vice President Nguyen Cao Ky.

The two leaders are up for re-election in October following legislative elections in August.

Stevenson said the U.S. Information Agency in South Vietnam has been promoting the Thieu-Ky regime.

He also said U.S. Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker was quoted in the South Vietnamese press last fall as saying the United States supports re-election of Thieu and Ky.

Although Bunker later denied such a statement, Stevenson said the damage was done.

In a floor speech and at a news conference later, Stevenson accused the administration of seeking to continue the Vietnam conflict as "a proxy war among Asians."

Stevenson's resolution would establish a commission of five House members and five senators to oversee U.S. activities during the election campaign to assure a hands-off policy.

"The intent of this resolution is not to defeat Thieu and Ky, but to neutralize the political advantage which our military involvement affords them," Stevenson said.

Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott said Stevenson's resolution might do more harm than good.

He said it would be interpreted as a "covert move to undermine the present government or to maintain it."

In another resolution introduced Monday, Sen. Jack Miller, (R—Iowa) calls for complete withdrawal of all American forces from South Vietnam within 12 months following an exchange of POWs and an accounting for men missing in action.

U.S.-Red Trade Deal OK'd

WASHINGTON (AP)—Without a voice raised against it, the Senate approved Monday legislation designed to increase U.S. trade with Communist East Europe.

The key provision was included in a bill passed 66 to 1 which would expand the authority of the Export-Import Bank.

Under the section, American businessmen could seek the facilities of the bank to finance deals made with countries behind the Iron Curtain.

Industry Must Register Firearms With Government

WASHINGTON (AP)—A unanimous Supreme Court upheld today the 1968 law that requires manufacturers and importers of certain kinds of firearms to register with the federal government.

Speaking for the court, Justice William O. Douglas rejected the argument the registration is self-incriminating.

The ruling permits prosecution of two Californians on charges of possessing unregistered hand grenades.

Throughout his opinion, Douglas emphasized that the information obtained from registrants by the federal government is not turned over to the states for prosecuting violators of separate state laws.

This turnover of information had impelled the high court in 1968 to strike down an earlier federal law requiring firearms registration. The theory in that case was a registrant's protection against self-incrimination was breached when Washington gives the states material with which to prosecute him under state laws.

Congress wrote the new law following the court's decision. It requires registration of people who make or bring into the country shotguns and rifles with short barrels, automatic weapons, silencers, bombs, rockets and grenades.

In 1969, a Los Angeles grand jury indicted Shirley Jean Sutherland, of Beverly Hills, and Donald Freed of West Los Angeles. The government said they planned to give 10 hand grenades to the Black Panther party. Mrs. Sutherland, 35, is the daughter of T.C. Douglas, head of Canada's New Democratic party.

U.S. Dist. Judge Warren J. Ferguson dismissed the indictments with a ruling that the law is unconstitutional. The Supreme Court reversed him.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Some Basics On The Lottery

By GILBERT J. SALK
MDC Staff

Nobody, including the Selective Service system, seems to be very clear about the lottery system, but there are a few basic points to be made which will lead to at least an elementary understanding of what it's all about.

All males receive their lottery number during the calendar year in which they turn 19. In other words, if you were born in 1951, your lottery number was drawn in 1970; if you were born in 1952, you will get your lottery number in 1971, and so on. Everyone born before 1951 received their number in the drawing held in December 1969. The number you draw remains with you for the rest of your life, regardless of when you serve your eligibility year.

Currently, draft boards send out induction calls by a quota system, with a maximum limit placed on what lottery number can be included in the call. This may soon change to a system whereby a national call is issued according to lottery numbers. In other words, a call for a given month might draft everyone whose number is below 75, instead of the present method in which a board is instructed to call up to 25 men, provided they don't draft anybody with a number over 75. The difference is that the new system, if it is passed, will standardize the upper limit of the lottery number called.

The most difficult concept to understand is what constitutes one's eligibility year, and what happens afterwards.

Your eligibility year is the year in which you may be drafted. The earliest this can happen is the year you have your 20th birthday (the year after you receive your lottery number.) However, you must have either a 1—A, a 1—A—O, or a 1—O classification to be included in the eligibility pool.

If you have any deferments, you are not eligible to be drafted, and will not be included in the pool. However you need only to be eligible on Dec. 31 to be included in the eligibility pool for a given year. Regardless of your lottery number, if you do not have a deferment on Dec. 31 and you are 20 or more years old, you have served your eligibility year.

So what happens now? That depends on your lottery number. If your number was reached by your board and you did not have a deferment at the time which you later lost, you are in a special circumstance which I will attempt to explain below. If your number was not reached at all, you served your prime eligibility year and on January 1 will be put in the 2nd priority pool. The only way you can be drafted from this group is if everyone in the new prime group is drafted. In that case, the board would go back a year and pick up where they left off. (Thus, you become less and less eligible as each year after your prime year goes by.)

If you are deferred during the year you turn 20, your prime eligibility year will be the first year in which you lose your deferment. You will retain your original lottery number, however.

Now for the special case described above. Say for example that your lottery number is 100. You have a deferment until the middle of November, when you lose it. By this time, your board is calling people with numbers up to 225. Due to procedural regulations and red tape, as well as standard inefficiency, January 1 rolls around without your board issuing you an induction order. You are NOT home free. You are put into a special Extended Priority Group. You are more eligible to be drafted than people in the new prime eligibility pool. (This is true for at least the first quarter of the year. Whether you continue in the EPG beyond the first quarter depends on your involvement with appeals. See a draft counselor, and pray.)

If all this is confusing, you probably understand it. If you need advice about your standing on the lottery, and you're unable to fit your situation easily into one of the situations described above, see a competent draft counselor. Don't guess, and don't trust a draft board clerk or member to know any more than you do. It's your life baby. Protect it.

PEACE.

Room To Move Sponsors Film On Expanding Consciousness

Videographic, computer animated, multi-image, child animated, pixillated, electronically distorted. Confused? Don't be. On Thursday, April 8, 1971, Room to Move is sponsoring film showings entitled Cinemagic: The Expanded Cinema.

The showings will be held at 1:00 p.m. and 3:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom and at 7:30 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Among the films to be shown are many of the newest experiments in the expanded cinema, a movement of expanding consciousness in the cinema. Shorter films whose content and form are attempting to create and define a new visual vocabulary for man are the result of the experimentation.

To enable men the world round to communicate on a level where this new universal language will "facilitate global awareness and understanding of the world we inhabit" said a spokesman for Room to Move. Does a photograph of the earth taken from the moon illicit a response, even subconsciously, which is similar in man/woman all around Spaceship Earth? he asked.

The films to be shown include Circus by Jonas Mekas, Newsreel of Dreams by Stan Whitney, Plum Pudding made by children at the Yellow Ball Workshop, The Magic Machine, and many others.

There is no admission charge to see the films. But a small donation (25¢-50¢) would really be appreciated to help RTM defray the costs of film rental and publicity.

Celebrate Women's Lib April 17

April 17 is Women's Liberation Day.

Tonight, at 7:30 in the Women's Center (in the Free University opposite the Hatch) there will be a Women's Liberation meeting to discuss the New England Women's Coalition and April 17.

April 17 has been established as Women's Liberation Day by NEWCO, which is a coalition of some 25 women's groups like the Northshore Feminists; Massachusetts Organization for the Repeal of Abortion Laws (MORAL); Boston Women United; Boston Female Liberation; the Y.W.C.A. (Young Women Committed to Action); Radcliffe Women to United Mind and Body; Third World Women's Caucus; Gay Women's Liberation; several different collectives; and women's liberation groups from many different schools in New England: Boston University, Northeastern, Clark, UMass, etc.

Women's Liberation Day will be marked by women from all over New England meeting in Boston at 12:00 that Saturday afternoon women will meet at Copley Square and march to the Boston Common for a rally with speakers and entertainment. Different groups will set up various booths explaining different aspects of Women's Liberation.

As one feminist explained, "The day is called around the central demands of control over our lives and control over our bodies: free abortion on demand, free 24-hour community controlled child care centers; equal pay, equal work, and equal employment and education opportunity; and a repeal of all laws governing private sexual behavior."

Tonight's discussion will be on what exactly is the New England Women's Coalition especially who makes it up, and what, is our part in it. All women are invited to come to this meeting to discuss this question and more specifically, April 17 and the women's demonstration.

Full Night On WMUA

Tonight on WMUA there is a full night schedule of events. Beginning at 6:30 PM, Y.S.A., The Young Socialist Alliance presents the Militant Forum, a weekly collection of news and information. At 7:30 PM, a special commemorating the life of Martin Luther King, produced by Ken Mosakowski.

At 9:00 PM, Tuesday Evening Classics, a two hour program of Classical recordings presented by the WMUA Classics Dept. All these programs this evening on WMUA, 91.1 FM in Amherst.

Bid To Register 18-Yr.-Olds Should Win Strong Support

Secretary of State John F.X. Davoren's bid to register all 18 year old Bay Staters to enable them to vote in presidential and national elections is expected to win strong support when it comes up for public hearing next Wednesday, April 8, before the Committee on Elections.

Davoren has enlisted the backing of both the Massachusetts City Clerks Association and the Massachusetts Town Clerks Association for H. 5129 which would legally enable clerks and voting registrars to sign up 18 year olds and put them on separate lists. At age 19, their names would be moved to the regular voting lists.

Supported by Speaker David M. Bartley and Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, the measure will come before the committee on elections chaired in the Senate by Sen. Edward L. Burke of Framingham, and in the House by Rep. Allan McGuane of Greenfield.

"This petition has an emergency preamble which, on signing, would make it effective immediately," Secretary Davoren, chief election officer of the Commonwealth explained, "and I am hopeful that it will receive strong support from such groups as the League of Women Voters, the Youth Voter Participation Group, the Junior Chamber of Commerce and leaders of both major political parties."

Secretary Davoren has previously recorded himself in favor of the enactment of an amendment to the Federal Constitution to permit 18 year old men and women to vote in all elections. The amendment was ratified in both branches of the Massachusetts Legislature by an overwhelming margin.

Be There

In a little room off of the main lobby in the Student Union building, some of the most important discussions concerning the governance of this University will be held tomorrow afternoon. Although little has been mentioned about these talks, their outcome will have implications reaching all of us.

To be specific, open hearings will be held in the Colonial lounge from 1-5 p.m. tomorrow afternoon to discuss proposals for the University Senate. Since this body will one day be the lawmaking unit around here, it is imperative that those who are to be affected by this vast change have their say.

We have already taken our position on the chances of this body and have suggested some changes in the originals which we would like to see implemented. We, though, are not the only ones who have given thought to the proposal.

In a report issued on Friday, the Sub-Committee on Campus Governance of the Student Governance Affairs Committee of the Student Senate recommended some changes in the original concept of the University Senate. We would like to mention a few of these ideas and urge their acceptance.

The first, and most important, recommendation of this group was that the Senate "be composed of 70 students (56 undergraduates and no fewer than 14 graduates), 70 faculty members, and 5 members of the professional staff". This, we feel, is a more equitable arrangement than that originally offered. As the sub-committee stated it, "the student body must not be relegated to the role of vocal minority."

In the same vein, the sub-committee further proposes that the ratios of faculty to students be increased in the latter's favor on many of the Senate's committees. The report goes on to list the specific committees in question, all of which are concerned primarily with student affairs. Once again, the students must at least have equal voice in matters which directly relate to them.

A third proposal made by this sub-committee which we feel merits acceptance concerns the officials of the proposed Senate. It is suggested "that there be a constitutional guarantee that at least one Senate officer be a student." In a situation where everyone was on equal footing, this would seem like an unusually prohibitive measure. Yet such is not the case here. It must be remembered that students at the University for four years are competing with faculty members who will likely have longer tenure in this governing body. Though it may convincingly be argued that this increased University experience should be reflected in the make-up of the Senate, it does not mean, and can not mean, that this group have complete control. The students, even at the top level, must have a voice.

The sub-committee made a few other proposals but we think that these are the most important. They are, though, only a small portion of the things to be discussed at tomorrow's open hearings. If you are one of those people who is always complaining about the Student Senate and unresponsive student leaders, than you owe it to yourself and the University to be there tomorrow.

I Just Can't Cope

ALLSTON, Mass.-The curley-haired Irish priest, with the developing paunch of a 35 year old, offered the wine and the host to the bride and groom, then moved to the Best man, he drained the chalice of its sweet sherry. The Maid of Honor had to fake the wine and Mike, my best friend, was married.

I stood in the front pew of St. Anthony's Parish in this profoundly Irish Catholic neighborhood, watching Michael Lindsey and Patricia Farris joined in "holy matrimony...through the Church of Jesus Christ, our lord", in awe, that this canting ceremony would join them "in sickness..." etc. for all the days of their lives. Which is a long time, even for a guy who is legally old enough to drink.

Pat is as nice a girl as could ever go through a Catholic elementary school, into a Catholic secondary school, graduating to a Catholic nursing school. Then deciding to marry my best friend Mike, who turned "absurdist" a long time before a priest told him that he wouldn't be able to marry Pat without going through all the church's rigamarole. He did, and is now spending a week in Florida, with his wife who wanted, and probably needed, it. He will settle in Medford, attending night school at Boston State.

Marriage is a difficult event for me to contemplate, especially for Mike. I guess he did it because, he had decided that he was "in love with Pat enough to want to live with her for the rest of his life."

"She means everything to me," he said to me from the front seat of his VW, with his new wife beside him, driving along the Southeast expressway, after the wedding. Pat had the same confident look on her face, that was there walking down from the alter at St. Anthony's. She was ready for Mike and will like being married to him.

I just wish that there was something around that would tell you on some sort of objective scale, when the right time for marriage really is. Some people worry an awful lot about it. One guy named Jack, who I never met, once said that after you get tired of looking for all that there is in life, you get married. I think he's wrong; once you get tired of looking for life, you're dead. Not married. Marriage has got to be something a little bit more natural than that. Maybe people really need one special person, possibly for the rest of their natural lives. I don't understand it.

"No human society would have ever succeeded if the institution of marriage had not been deeply ingrained, says my room mate, who once took an Anthropology course, and attends Mass on Sunday and lives an existential fantasy the rest of the week.

If my room mate is right and Mike is right, then I guess this whole thing about marriage is just too complicated to worry about.

Writing Dopey Things

"I've been sitting at this typewriter for hours," opinion on this page so often tells us, "and still no column has appeared. So this is it, more or less: we need more writers up here so come on up and give us a hand."

Writing like that eats my heart out.

When you think about it this is the most volatile section of the Collegian. When the letters are interesting, when the columnists and the editorials have something to say, the op-ed pages represent the best and most creative efforts of us student journalists. Unfortunately it also works the other way. The other pages, after all, can be filled from the AP ticker, but this one rises or falls on our own work.

It's sometimes easy to forget that we are actually writing, that the words which won't come and the interest of friends in what of ours is good and bad, are experiences of people who make a living at this.

As writers-or apprentice writers-we can be jealous. We have to psych ourselves to the idea that what we are saying is worthwhile, and sometimes in the process we try to pull ourselves up mentally at the expense of others. It's hard to tell someone that you didn't like what he wrote; it's harder to say you did like it.

Sometimes writing these columns has been a ball. There were times when I'd write something humorous, about the bars around here, then carry it around the Hatch and use it to introduce myself to nice-looking chics who happened to be sitting alone over coffee. Some of my friends say that's all this business is good for, and lately it hasn't even been good for that.

Once I was thumbing through Virginia, writing a short piece about the South and the autumn. It was last October and the further south I went, the less perceptible was the change in season. "Autumn will surely come to Washington", I was about to say over the phone to the girl in the Collegian office, "not as quickly as to the North, but not as slowly as to the South." But I was in a small diner out in the boonies, and the two truck drivers behind me were getting edgy waiting for the phone. "Eh," said one, "he's reading poetry over the phone." I heard that and all I could see was Easy Rider. I hung up, paid my bill and got my tail out of there. That column wasn't finished until later.

It doesn't take going to another part of the country to find something to say, but I do think it's easy to get stale sitting around here doing little more than rapping out columns and getting by in courses. It takes reading and talking to people, new people, it takes occasional breaks from the hectic pace of the Collegian offices. It takes something to realize how isolated and different we are from so much of what is modern American life.

Silverman was right recently when he said that the quality of these pages has suffered. It has and they need new blood and new ideas. Even Eisenberg is writing dopey things like "we need more writers up here so come on up and give us a hand."

Tell It As It Is

WASHINGTON--Everyone seems to have his own opinion as to how successful the Laos operation was. The Administration has indicated that it's quite pleased with the incursion and that everything went according to plan. Press reports are less optimistic and some reporters went so far as to describe it as a "rout."

Once again the poor American public doesn't know whom to believe. To make it easier I have decided to let everybody write his own news story and "tell it as it is" according to his own feelings on the war. Just fill in the blanks.

WASHINGTON, D.C.--Pentagon spokesmen have announced that the recent incursion into Laos by the South Vietnamese was the greatest ——— of the Indochinese war. While expressing disappointment that the ARVN did not remain in Laos until ———, the consensus was that the incursion had proved that the ARVN could ——— when put to the test.

Pointing out that the operation had gained ——— (A) months, (B) weeks, (C) days, for the South Vietnamese, officials said that the operation would permit President Nixon to step up his withdrawal plans to ——— troops a month.

The spokesmen said that not only had the ARVN ——— in their objective of taking the key town of ——— as well as cutting off route ———, but they had destroyed ——— boxes of ammunition, ——— bags of rice, ——— chickens, ——— feet of oil pipe and ——— tea bags.

They also killed ——— crack North Vietnamese soldiers. This now brings the total body count of North Vietnamese soldiers killed in action up to ——— million.

The operation's ——— could be attributed to ——— planning, ——— intelligence and ——— ARVN officers who had fought without American advisers.

Letters To The Editor

An Excuseless Act Of Moral Genocide

Open letter to the Student Affairs Reorganization Board:

Foremost in a basic reform of an organization is the establishment of a philosophy of operation and a statement of the reason for the need of such an organization. Such is the case with the current Student Affairs reform.

It is the case that is difficult to affect change in dormitory living conditions. There is no one fault for this, but one major aspect is the fact that the person whose authority it is to state those conditions is unknown or not approachable. Is it the Trustees, the Dean, the Area Coordinator, or the Residence Hall staff? For instance, the decision as to the conditions of coeducational living (ie, where and how) were defined in an attempt to present students with the quality of life they desired. Did the Trustees understand that in diluting the proposal by not allowing freshmen and same floor conditions (even where physically possible) they defeated the purpose of the plan? Or when students demanded that the policy for painting rooms be altered according to their needs and desires, was it clear at any time whose decision it was and why it was not immediately available? Or, thirdly, when the Northeast (Sylvan) area opened why was there no planning for parking facilities? Had not the students protested violently they would have been living in the furthest part of campus and been parking in the most Southwest lot. Judging from these limited examples it is obvious that where responsibility lies is not clear (or so clear that no one sees it).

It is the case that students seek out that administrator closest in proximity to him for airing constructive ideas and grievances. This is not a matter of working through channels or laziness. Rather it is the Area Coordinator that the student sees as far enough away to be responsible, yet close enough to be seen. Unfortunately, in the past, it has been nearly impossible to receive satisfaction there and the student is defered to that nebulous responsible party one half a mile away. Students and staff must realize that the staff has the task of serving the student. One should not have to be like Ulysses in attempting to seek answers to problems which can be solved. The raison d'etre of dormatory living is to foster responsibility for one's self; to deny the chance for growth by the exercise of that responsibility because of a functional problem is to commit an excuseless act of moral genocide.

There are three sorts of problems which can occur in an oncampus living situation. First, there are problems that arise within each dormatory. Second, there are problems unique to each living area. Third, there are universal, school-wide problems. Now, in issues affecting the daily lives of the student the area coordinator, not the Student Affairs office or the Trustees, is most capable of recognizing the ramifications of policy. Therefore, jurisdiction for parking, dorm life styles (specifically the manner of co-ed), dorm fiscal and political autonomy and staff choice or lack or need of staff (specifically in terms of tenants associations, heads of residences and counselors) must be given to the Area Coordinator.

The American Revolution occured (in part) because people were dissatisfied with a King several thousand miles away deciding what was best for them. When the King conceded part way it simply made matters worse because their basic philosophy was being ignored and rebellion began. The revolutionaries demanded home rule because they knew that they, and not an exploitive King, were best able to see their own situation. The parallels are obvious. Student Affairs must be constructed so that only the most general problems are dealt with. To go half way is to do more harm than not to act at all. To reorganize and not totally reform is to deny the existence of the original problem.

Do You Exist?

To the Editor:

Subjugation without representation is tyranny. The students of UMass spend the major part of the year here in Amherst-nine months of every year. They spend the greater part of their money here. The good people of Amherst are afraid that if the students get the vote, they will take control of the town. Is that not the right and duty of a majority in a democracy? Let us remember that if it were not for the good student's purchasing goods in Amherst, the merchant-capitalists would go broke in two weeks. Certainly I don't have to say anything about the prices they charge; the merchants of Amherst are making a fortune from the isolated and captive student body. Do you think that if it weren't for the student, that they would ever be able to rent half the apartments they have at half the price they do? They have us at their economic mercy, but such is the nature of capitalism. But to have us at their political and legal mercy too is not the nature of democracy. Why should this be, the students constitute the majority, the democratic majority. The people of Amherst are dependent upon him for economics, but he is at the mercy of the town and its laws over which he has no control. By what principle is it right that a student should live in a town and contribute to it economically and still be deprived of political participation in it? All we ask for is our democratic and legal rights, if this seems radical it is because the people we ask them of are unrepresentive reactionaries.

Wake up, and look at Berkeley where the students will soon control the city council and will institute much needed reforms in public education, day-care centers, drug centers, rent control, and community control of the police. If this is the radicalism which the people of Amherst are afraid of, then they are afraid of nothing less than a democratic desire to make the community responsive to the needs of the people. Stop being apathetic, seize the time and realize the opportunity that real democracy presents.

The question of whether students have a right to vote is a legal one and should be brought to the court if necessary, as is now the case in Boston. However we do have this hope. The Secretary of State in Calif., not a noted liberal, sent a letter to all election registrars in that state advising them that to bar a student from voting, at least in federal elections, is a crime. The actions of the Amherst registrar may be criminal and unconstitutional, lets find out!

The question is not simply one of whether the student should vote, but rather what is the standing of the university student in the community. Is the university merely an ivory tower, an abstraction with no relevance to the community around it or to the world outside it? It is an unacademic proposition that says that the university has no relevance to the community and it is an undemocratic rule that states that the majority should be governed by the minority. The question is simply this; does the student live in a political vacuum nine months of the year and become a political entity for only three months in a community which has little or no affect on his life the rest of the year? If the student exists in any real sense, he exists here and should be able to vote here.

Baker's Dozen

To the Editor:

In a March 31 letter to the Editor, Mr. Richard M. Ryan observed that of the 1700 veterans on the University of Massachusetts campus only 250 have shown an interest in the "Veterans for Peace" movement here. He suggests that "the other 1450", since they are not involved with his organization, perhaps favor war. Mr. Ryan should soak his head. Many of us would flock to a valid peace movement, if such a movement existed. The fact is, it doesn't. The "Veterans for Peace" movement on this campus has been bastardized by the presence of an alliance with the MOBE and the YSA. It's scheduling and activities are steered (oops! I meant coordinated!) by the interchangeable flunkies that control these latter two groups.

Since Ryan insinuates he is "one of us", perhaps he should be reminded that the ex-GI's here are several years older than the average UMass student and are less apt to be intoxicated by empty slogans and selective indignation. Also, many of us have put in time in Vietnam, and are painfully aware that U.S. Imperialism is not the only cause of that war.

Many Veterans on this campus were deeply insulted by Ryan's comments, but we realized the quality of the source by what seemed to be a McNamara-type body count. Could it be, Mr. Ryan, your 250 count is really a Baker's dozen with 237 "ghosts?"

Wild West Idiocies

To the Editor:

Perhaps it is my internal optimism that gets me into trouble. At least I should have been sufficiently warned when I passed the playing of "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid" on the way to seeing "Little Big Man" at the Campus Cinema. For I experienced the same anger, confusion, frustration and disappointment with this newest of modern Wild West idiocies as I had upon viewing the former last year.

It is my optimism which leads me to believe that a sophisticated and realistic portrayal of Indian life and white man thinking a century ago will be put on film. But it seems that it is only the usual drivel and re-run garbage that makes money, the truth not being worth examining. At a time when we plead for our government to rearrange its priorities, it is time we ask all segments of society to do likewise. The film "Little Big Man" echoes the shallowness of a society which insists upon playing games with serious. Please, don't waste your time as I did-- don't see "Little Big Man."

Editorial Points

Yes, sports fans, Julius Erving has officially signed with the Virginia Squires of the ABA. True, things will be a lot different and probably a lot quieter come next basketball season, but there'll be new excitement and new things to get interested in. But it just won't be the same. The sad part of it all is that a classy guy like Erving is virtually forced to give up some things that mean a lot to him just because some greedy people are trying to force their way into a merger. Although it may seem contradictory, about all we can do is wish Julius the best of luck and hope that the ABA falls apart as soon as possible.

Georgia Governor Jimmy Carter has been making it known that he feels his state should abolish the office of lieutenant governor, a post now held by former governor Lester Maddox. Although Carter said he would not press the issue, Maddox commented, "I just dare him to try." The way things have been going for lieutenants in Georgia, perhaps Lester better not press the issue.

Lt. William L. Calley mentioned in an interview held just before he was found guilty with Time magazine that he developed a fear of dying accidently because the world would think he "copped out". According to the article, this paranoia bothered him almost constantly during the months of the trial. Perhaps he should spend more time worrying about what people think of him while he's alive rather than after he's dead.

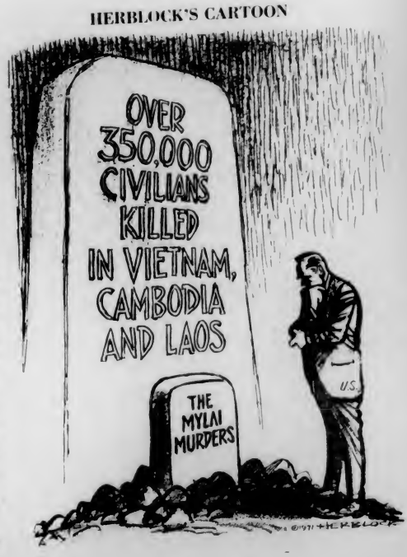
If the Bruins lose a game in the playoffs, it will only be because they are trying out a few new lines for next season.

A One Way Street

By JACK GRIFFIN

Hank and I are working dorm security tonight, last night, and there's this motorcycle tucked away in the corner of the lobby and we go over to take a look. It's a nice bike, clean anyway, and pretty big. Bill comes in with his helmet and says something about 650 c.c.'s I say to Hank that it must take a pretty tough body to ride this bike and he looked at and said, "Here's the police." He's right. There are police.



This big man comes in, black with a blue uniform, got a flashlight, a badge, a gun and a moustache. I'm standing in front of him and he asks for identification. I think that's pretty stupid but another man in a blue uniform has come in, he's got a cap with a brim and can't quite get out 'Specifically'. I'm saying something about how cool the bike is just sitting there in the corner, but the big black guy, who looks somehow mean, says, "I don't care what you think." He really means "Fuck off, boy". That's all right, I think, he's probably got a family to support.

Pretty soon there are seven of them, of one color or another. Blue uniforms, brown uniforms (they might have been green) and two guys from a tow truck. One of these has got a hammer and an iron bar and he's trying to break the lock. So do I. Hank and I are pretty down about it, like watching a rape. Well, not quite. I ask one of the colors why they're taking the bike away. He's really not a healthy looking man and he turns away. The one next to him, whose face looks like an owl's says, "It's a fire hazard and would you put it in your house?" I have already been asked the second part of the question. Last time I said I couldn't answer, since I'd never owned a bike. I regretted that though, sort of putting too much emphasis on the past, a posteriori and such. This time I didn't answer, he didn't mean it anyway. Three of them were smoking cigarettes. Smoking cigarettes as they stand around the fire hazard. Right on and who are you kidding?

The guy with the hammer finally breaks the lock. He asks if he should take it and the chain with him. The man with the cap says no. No one disagrees. The bike is wheeled away into the tow truck. The blues get into a car. The browns leave on foot.

Hank wants to wave them good-bye. That's cool. Why hassle on a one way street and moral responsibility.

Fantasies of Children's Minds

(Editor's Note: The following stories were written by children participating in the NES program in Springfield. Many of them are tutored by UMass students.)

Once there was this old man who wanted to be a king. He lived in a forest with all the animals. When people would come in the forest and just for meat he would capture them and keep then for his slaves. The people in the village didn't like that. One day the king of the village got a group of men to go out in the forest to get him because they didn't like him he was mean. The third day the group of men set a trap to capture him. When the old man stepped into the trap the men took the old man to the king and the king punished him. They they killed him and the people in the village never saw him again. Age 11

Once there were three snowmen in the park. And when I went over there the sun was out and I saw them melt. And a little boy came over there and said, "What happened to my snowmen?" and I said I was coming to the park and I saw the sun out and I didn't do it the sun did it. Age 7

I have a sister, she is 10 years old. They call her the F.B.I. agent of the house. She does not miss a trick. Whenever the phone rings she is right there. When my mother starts to talk Martha is right under her nose. Age 13

Black and White should get together because that is the only way people can live. People can't live without fighting and shouting at each other because every time they talk about each other they start fighting with each other. But people should always love one another and live without fighting and the world would be better. But most people don't figure it out the way they should. They think that they can get something out of fighting. But they don't, they should do things the way they ought to because anyway they don't get nothing but sores and scratches. When my sisters fight my mother beat them good because they ought to be friends instead of fighting. She tells them that they ought to like one another no matter if they are black or white. So any way I think all colors should get along with each other if they do I think our world could get along. I wish we could try it.Well I don't have no more to say so I will close this up. It is close. Age 13

These children, from impoverished families of the Springfield area, are busy playing and creating at the NES center in that city. The children are tutored by interested UMass students.

This is a story of how I helped my mother get ready for her party. I got up this morning and got dress and she fixed breakfast for me and my brothers and her. We had eggs and bacon and toast. We had orange juice to drink. Then she asked me to go to her friends house and asked them if they wanted to come to the Stanley party. She had the order blanks and the book she made invitation slips and this is what it said:

"Do you want to come to a Stanley party at 43 Central Street this is what I said:

"Do you want to come to a Stanley party at 43 Central Street at 8:00 Thursday night at Mrs. Robinson's house.

I ran all over the place going to her friends house soon I was finished and I asked her could I go to my girlfriends house she said yes I could go and then I stayed over her house until 2:00 then I came home and ate lunch then I asked my mother could I go with her to her friends house she said yes. So I went with her and her freinds little girl was there We played and played and played until her other girlfriends mother came and her husband bought her doll some doll clothes and she only could fit her P.J.s She could not fit her pants set so it had to take it back and got another one bigger than that so it could fit her then while they took it back we played cards. After that we played Spirigraph after that we had to go home then when we got home I asked my mother could I go to the N.E.S. and she said yes and I said would she ride me down there she said yes so I got into the car and when we got here I said by and she said by and when I got here Mr. Smith said I got here just in time and my tutor frend gave me apieceof paper to throw away and then we read a story of a puppy sitter then we wrote this story. Age 9

Southern Politics Discussed In WMUA Special Report

Tonight at 7:30 p.m. WMUA's News and Public Affairs Department will present a special in-depth report on an unusual political struggle currently taking place in the First Congressional District of South Carolina, which includes Dorchester County and eight other impoverished counties.

Mrs. Victoria Delee, the 45-year-old black civil rights activist from Ridgeville, is campaigning vigorously to win the Congressional seat formerly held by L. Mendel Rivers, the chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, who died on December 28, 1970.

A special election to fill the vacant seat will be held on April 27, 1971.

Mrs. Delee, with the endorsement of the United Citizens Party of South Carolina, is opposing Mendel J. Davis, the 28-year-old godson of L.Mendel Rivers, running as a Democrat; and 44-year-old Dr. James Edwards, a Charleston dentist who won the Republican nomination.

Both Mr. Davis and Dr. Edwards are political conservatives. Both are white. Both have well-financed campaigns. But 34 percent of the registered voters in the First District are black. Mrs. Delee feels that she can win if the white conservative vote splits and if even a small percentage of the white moderates and liberals who voted against Davis and Edwards in the primaries decide to support her in the election. Mrs. Delee's candidacy has attracted national attention in The New York Times (articles February 15 and 25, 1971), The New Yorker magazine (March 27, 1971), and other publications.

Over the Spring vacation, WMUA commentator Ken Mosakowski (who will narrate tonight's program) and Ann Nichols, acting head of the UMass Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs, visited Mrs. Delee at her home in Ridgeville. The Committee since last year has been attempting to focus public attention on the widespread malnutrition and conditions of worm infestation which plague thousands of poor people in Dorchester County, South Carolina, and in hundreds of other "hunger counties" in the United States.

Last Tuesday, the Committee and the Immanuel Lutheran Church of Amherst co-sponsored a "Bread for the Hungry" luncheon which raised $250 for the Four Holes Day Care Center, which Mrs. Delee established in Ridgeville last year. The day care center now has a total of 78 malnourished black, white, and red children enrolled, although many are ill with chicken pox and other diseases and must remain at home.

Mrs. Delee feels that the only way the poor people of her district will ever receive the help they need is for her to represent their interests in the Congress of the United States.

Attention, Motorcyclists

Student Senate Counsel Richard M. Howland issued the following statement on motorcycles on campus:

"In as much as there have been 8 arrests on campus recently,

—Be sure to wear the appropriate headgear as required by law.

—Drive only on roads, not sidewalks, lawns, etc.

—Register your vehicles and keep the registration in your possession when driving.

—Insure your motorcycle.

—Have your motorcycle inspected.

Dreams and Fantastic Art

"The False Mirror," by Rene Magritte, painted in 1928. Magritte, the Belgian surrealist best known for his irrational juxtaposition of images, was one of the foremost photographic surrealists until his death in the mid-sixties.

As an introduction to the Five-College Festival of Dada and Surrealism, running April 20 to May 8, Dr. Stanley Krippner, director of the Menninger Dream Clinic of Maimonides Hospital, will speak on Dreams, Surrealism, and Fantastic Art on Wednesday April 7, in the Colonial Lounge at the Student Union at 1:30 P.M.

Film And Drama Festivals Planned

The first New England Student Film Festival, sponsored by the University Film Study Center and held originally at MIT on December 11-13, will arrive on the University of Massachusetts campus on April 7. Sponsored by the University Film Study Series, the program will include two hours of film selected from the eighty-eight entries submitted by seventeen schools.

Among the films included will be: TX 7278, by B.U. student Jesus H. Maldonado; two animated films, The Trip, by Nathan Garland (Yale) and Sand, by Caroline Leaf (Harvard); the prize winning documentary, 42nd Street Movie, by Nicholas Doob (Yale) and a gangster movie by Stanford student David Chase, called The Rise and Fall of Bugs Manousos.

The festival films have had wide acclaim. David Sterritt, in his review for the Christian Science Monitor, described some of the films he saw as "examples of the...best independent youth-oriented film making." And film maker Jonas Mekas, who was present throughout the original festival, concluded in his column for The Village Voice, that "neither New York nor San Francisco has the monopoly on 'creative' film any longer."

The Festival program will be shown in Thompson Hall Auditoriums 102 and 106 at 6:30 and 8:30 p.m. The first showing scheduled to accommodate those interested in attending the D.V.P. lecture by Stan VanDerBeek and other evening events.

Tickets will be available at the door for both showings.

Wednesday evening the UMass Theatre will do a final production of Aristophanes' THE CLOUDS at 8 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium.

Originally presented last December, CLOUDS was selected as a finalist at the American College Theater Festival held this past week in Washington. As one of the ten finalists, it was selected from the more than 150 college productions considered.

Gary Stewart directed and Janet Craft choreographed with an original music score by Jay McAullife. William Arrowsmith did the translation used in this production. There will be no admission charge for this performance.

Borodin String Quartet Set Concert Next Week

The Borodin String Quartet will appear in a single concert at the UMass on Wednesday evening, April 14th. This concert in Bowker Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. is part of the 1970/71 Fine Arts Council Chamber Music Series and brings to the attention of Connecticut Valley music lovers the Soviet Union's leading string quartet.

Joining the Borodin String Quartet on this fourth North American tour will be the distinguished pianist, Lyuba Edlina who will perform the Piano Quintet in G Minor by Dimitri Shostakovitch. Also programmed is Beethoven's String Quartet in B Flat Major, Opus 130 with the Grosse Fuge, Opus 133. Members of the Borodin String Quartet are Rostislav Dubinsky, first violin; Yaroslav Alexandrov, second violin; Dimitri Shebalin, viola and Valentin Berlinsky, cello.

Reserved tickets for the Borodin String Quartet's concert are now available by contacting the UMass's Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium one hour before the concert. A telephone reaching both box offices is (413) 545-0202.

O's Over B's In East

BOSTON (AP)—Ever since the Boston Red Sox won the American League pennant at 100-1 odds in 1967 there has been the temptation each spring to pick them to win again. But not this year.

The Baltimore Orioles are loaded with talent and appear a sure bet to sweep to another East Division title. The Red Sox, the New York Yankees and the Detroit Tigers must hope for a total collapse by the world champions.

The Red Sox won 12 of their last 14 games in 1970, but still finished 21 behind Baltimore and six hebind the Yankees. Boston's hopes are high after some bold moves which annoyed some fans, but 21 games are an awful lot of pick up in one season.

The Orioles didn't stand still during the winter months. They added solid pitching strength in trades, and in Florida and on paper look like the class of the league.

The Red Sox definitely appear better defensively and their hitting in exhibition games was solid despite the loss of Tony Conigliaro and Mike Andrews in deals. However, the pitching was as spotty as every.

In Florida, the Red Sox looked improved enough to finish ahead of the Yankees and the Tigers. But the Orioles should own the league.

To pose any kind of a threat in the pennant race, the Red Sox must get off to a good start. They were 11-1/2 games behind the Orioles at the end of May last year and never had a chance.

The Red Sox filled one longtime trouble spot by obtaining catcher Duane Josephson from the Chicago White Sox last Tuesday. Josephson stepped in ahead of Don Pavletich and Bob Montgomery immediately.

Josephson is a hard hitting right-hander with a .440 average against Boston last season. He is more than adequate as a receiver.

UM Ruggers Open With Triple Sweep

The UMass Rugby Team opened its Spring season at home with a big day on Sunday playing three games with Hartford Rugby Club and The University of Connecticut Rugby Football Club. The day opened with the UMass first fifteen playing the Hartford A side. UMass came away with a big win, 5-0, as they took charge and played the game in their style.

The UMass Ruggers were led by Capt. Frank Boksanske who scored the only try of the test. The game in large measure was quite even. On the opening kickoff, UMass ran to within the Hartford 5 year line but could not move the ball in for a score. Hartford did not waste time getting out of trouble. For the greater part of the first half, it was the UMass forwards lead by Mark Chenoweth who pressured the Hartford backs into making numerous mistakes.

Hartford led by All American Hill Foy were not able to mount a consistent attack. Chenoweth shut off the Hartford running attack. Late in the first half after Chenoweth tackled Foy, Paul Reynolds picked up the loose ball at midfield, ran down field, avoiding a few tacklers; he was soon joined by Boksanske and Steve McElroy. The trio ran downfield, finally isolated Boksanske, who poured on the speed and ran past everyone for a try. The conversion was straightforward and made by Dale Toohey. The score stood at half-time 5-0.

The second half was no different, UMass came out to win. They could not mount a consistent attack but kept Hartford at bay for nearly the whole half. The Hartford side did penetrate effectively in the late stages of the second half. On two occasions it looked as if they might score, but continual recovery by the UMass backs and the continual hard play of the forwards kept UMass out of trouble and preserved a solid win for the Spring Rugby season opener.

The second game featured the UMass second XV against University of Connecticut first rugby XV. There was no question from outset who had the better team. UMass went out and consistently outplayed UConn. The UMass forwards were remarkable in their pursuit. In the course of the game the UMass forwards scored three trys. The trys were scored by Jim Tkacik, Bill Kesgen and Steve Connell. The backs scored two trys as well, both on the effective play of Dave Culver.

Within the first five minutes, UMass forwards had established the domination they maintained for the whole game. Deep in UConn territory a pack on the five yard line resulted in loose play from which Jim Tkacik picked up the ball and dove in for a try. The try was converted by Jim Clapper and UMass had a 5-0 lead early in the game.

Domination was again apparent a little later in the half when at approximately the 40 yard line UMass gained control of the ball from a set scrum. The ball came out to Dave Culver at fly half. Culver ran laterally, cut back inside, and in a remarkable bit of broken field running, sprinted through virtually the entire UConn team for a try. They try was not converted by Clapper and the score stood at 8-0.

Just a few minutes later, Bill Kesgen tapped the ball back to scrum half Bob DiRamio. DiRamio rifled the ball down the line towards Culver and to Craig Lovell who played an excellent first game. Penetration came in the center when Lovell was tackled. The ball was loose, Kesgen picked the ball up and found his way the next 20 yards in for a goal setting the score after Clapper's conversion at 13-0. The half was over with UMass atop 13-0.

UConn recovered a bit in the early second half and the domination of the UMass forwards was not as apparent as it had been earlier in the game. But the UMass team was not to be denied additional scoring. Penetration by Dave Culver into the secondary of UConn was instrumental in setting up the first try of the second half. Culver at about the UConn 40 kicked downfield into the goal and the kick was covered very well by Craig Schiff who dove on the line ball and scored the first UMass try in the second half.

The score at that point was 16-0 and the UMass team was content to rest on its laurels for the greater part of the rest of the half. The score by Hartford came on a breakway from wing forward Mark Lark and was set up by Bill Foy who was playing his second game. Play was rather even for the large fraction of the second half until in lineout play at the very end of the game, Steve Connell snatched the ball about a yard out and dove in for a try. Conversion was not successful and set the final score: UMass 19, UConn 3.

The domination of Rugby at UMass was again apparent in the third tilt. The game offered an opportunity to many players who hadn't played much rugby before to learn about the game in a pleasant way since UMass won 5-0. The game, a bit sloppy, was fairly even but the UMass players demonstrated their ability to learn and played a sound game. The only score of the game came in the first half when Jim Clapper at scrum half broke inside and picked his way 30 yards for a try. Toby Lyons converted and UMass's score was sufficient for a win and sets them on a good track for the rest of the season.

UMass goes into its second set of games this week and when they travel to Boston and play the Mystic River Rugby Football Club two games on Saturday. Mystic should present one of the more difficult games of the season since they usually feature a very experienced side. UMass, confident of its abilities, will be looking for another good showing.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Where sense of direction is concerned, Gemini and Virgo individuals seem to excel. When driving in a strange city, these natives are ingenious at picking out landmarks. The Gemini and the Virgo are excellent guides; they are not likely to lose their way.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Control tendency toward headstrong actions. Survey situation. Accent on health, work, relations with close associates. Strive to build good will. Otherwise, there is loss.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Plans expand. What was restricting now is removed. There is greater freedom of thought, action. Make contact. Spread your own word. Write, publicize and advertise.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Study Aries message. Be safe rather than sorry. Check details. Study fine print. One you trust may now be misguided. Best to heed inner voice. Refuse to go against your own grain.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be ready for change, travel, variety. Member of opposite sex plays exciting role. Creative activity is intensified. Specific emphasis on journeys, ideas. Relative may sing blues.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If you spend too much now on nonessentials, you may regret it later. Concentrate on home improvement. Conditions in domestic area demand attention. Diplomatic approach will succeed.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Legal entanglement could create some delay and dismay. Key is to time moves. Cycle is basically high. What appears a setback will probably rebound in your favor. Stick to principles.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Some secrets are revealed. Not a good time to try hiding things—including feelings. Express yourself. Realize those in positions of authority will back you. Stand tall.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Finish rather than begin—complete tasks, assignments. What appears on surface is deceptive. Look beneath superficial indications. You get chance to display potential. Go to it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You seem now to be very intuitive, but you also are seeing persons, situations as you wish they could exist. Key is to really know the score. Superiors are testing. Be aware.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Subtle approach is necessary. Heavy handed methods now will work against you. Realize this and act accordingly. What has been a secret will be revealed. Protect yourself in clinches.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Have fun but don't neglect commitments. You will have to face yourself. Some who encourage you may have ulterior motives. Take time to analyze. Give full play to intellectual curiosity.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Break through red tape. State needs in frank manner. Leo individual can now prove valuable ally. Aid comes through unorthodox channels. Know this and proceed accordingly.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are beginning a cycle which can lead to adventure and love. Excitement replaces boredom. Meaningful existence shoves aside boredom. You will be going places and doing things.

Erving Signs ABA Pact

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

Julius Erving is no longer a Redman basketball player. He is now the property of the Virginia Squires of the American Basketball Association who announced the signing yesterday of the 6-foot-6 junior at a news conference at 5 p.m. in Norfolk, Virginia.

No terms were disclosed, but it is believed that Erving has signed for a half-million dollars spread over three, four, five or who knows how many years, coming from the league that has held its raid of underclassmen under a veil of secracy and deceit that has had the collegiate coaches of America up in arms.

Erving is the second underclassman who has signed with the ABA in the past month. Memphis had earlier signed Mississippi sophomore Johnny Neuman to a multi-year contract and it appears from recent press clippings that the ABA battle has just turned into high gear against the National Basketball Association and more signings of underclassmen can be expected.

"We are anxious as anyone to see the young man finish college," said Squires owner Earle Foreman. "He's an intelligent young gentleman who wanted to play professional basketball. We did not influence him to sign, but we are pleased he selected the Squires."

It's very hard to buy what Foreman has to say as the major argument against the league if its unconcern for the educations of these young men. All they seem to want is their basketball skills and nothing else. The secrecy of these transactions and the seeming attractiveness of the pact hide the underhandedness of this league.

Upon hearing of the terms that Erving signed for, an irate head Redman basketball coach Jack Leaman last night said "They're going to try to make themselves look as good as they can. But we must remember the type of people that they really are."

The contract also calls for a bonus for Erving when he receives his degree and special tutoring for him if he needs it in pursing a degree.

Leaman called these clauses, "hypocritical things they put in there to appease the college people."

To add to the falicy of the report it was said that coach Ray Wilson had accompanied Erving at the signing and in truth coach Leaman said that Wilson was with him at the university all day.

Upon being reached last night Wilson noted that first of all Julie's happiness becomes paramount. Mentally he (Wilson) was there but physically it's impossible to be in two places at the same time.

If this is what Erving wanted or possibly what his advisors wanted (to say that Wilson was there) then it doesn't offend him.

A spokesman for the Squires said Erving did not sign as a "hardship case" as had Spencer Haywood and Ralph Simpson last year.

The spokesman also went on to say that Erving contacted the Squires through an agent and that he had received other offers.

On hearing this Leaman could not buy it and said that an agent had contacted Erving to sign with the New York Nets. When the negotiations fell through the agent then went to the Squires and the secret negotiations began.

Leaman earlier in the day reiterated what he has said all week in that he has nothing against Erving. "I have a great deal of confidence in Julius Erving. I feel he'll make the right decision for Massachusetts, his family and himself."

As one of the chief critics of the dealings of the ABA Leaman went on to say, "the big thing that I find wrong with it is the veil of secracy the ABA has placed on the entire thing. No one yet has contacted the UMass athletic department about the negotiations.

"If what they are doing is right why does it have to be a big secret?"

Warren McGuirk, Dean of the School of Physical Education and Athletic Director said, "it's unfortunate that these young men do not have the chance to finish their bachelor degrees.

"The ABA appears to want to make it clear to the NBA that they're in business and these signings are a tremendous breakthrough for them.

"Julius is just a pretty wonderful boy and the opportunity to sign was great."

The Squires have submitted Erving's contract to the league office and are waiting a response from the ABA officials which seems certain to pass from the recent wheeling-dealings of the league.

Bosox Hosts Yanks In Opener

BOSTON (AP) — The new-look Boston Red Sox and a New York Yankee team which stood relatively pat after last year's surprising second place finish open the 1971 American League season today at Fenway Park.

Hard-throwing Stan Bahnsen, who fashioned a 14-11 record for the Yankees last year, and veteran Ray Culp, who was 17-14 for Boston despite his club's disappointing third place finish, drew the pitching assignments in a duel of right-handers.

A near-sellout crowd of more than 30,000 is expected despite forecasts of cool and cloudy weather, with highest temperatures in the 40's and with rain likely by afternoon. Game time is 1:30 p.m.

The Red Sox, who dipped heavily into the trade market during the off season, will have three brand new faces in their starting lineup while everyone else except Culp will be playing at a different position from the one in which he saw the most service last year.

The Yankees, on the other hand, look much the same as last year's hustling young club which won 93 games and beat the Red Sox out by six games for second place in the East behind Baltimore's runaway champions.

"We haven't made too many changes," manager Ralph Houk says. "Instead, we're counting upon the additional year's experience our younger players acquired last season."

The New Yorkers will have an infield of Danny Cater, Horace Clarke, Gene Michael and Jerry Kenney and an outfield of Roy White, Bobby Murcer and Jim Lyttle, with 1970 rookie-of-the-year Thurman Munson behind the plate.

Culp, the Red Sox' top hurler for the past three seasons, will be making his first opening day start in a Boston uniform. He opened the 1965 National League campaign for the Philadelphia Phillies but ran into Jim Maloney when the Cincinnati ace tossed a two-hitter and struck out 16 in taking the decision.

This will be Bahnsen's first opening day assignment, but the Yankee fireballer has always been tough against the Red Sox, boasting an 8-4 lifetime edge including a 2-1 mark last year. Culp was only 1-4 vs. the Yankees in 1970 and now has a 5-5 lifetime mark against them.

ND Star Goes Canadian

TORONTO (AP)- Joe Theismann stunned the Toronto Argonauts by signing a two-year contract with the Canadian Football League team after it had all but given up hope of landing the Notre Dame star quarterback.

"We were surprised and delighted," John Bassett, chairman of the Argos' board said after Sunday's signing. The agreement was announced Monday. No terms were disclosed.

Theismann runner-up to Stanford's Jim Plunkett in the Heisman Trophy balloting as most valuable college player last season, was reported to have agreed to terms with the Miami Dolphins early last month.

Argo Coach Leo Cahill had been negotiating with Theismann to join the Toronto team but gave up after the reported deal with Miami, which had picked him fourth in the National Football League draft in February.

But Bassett said Monday that Theismann's March 8 visit to Miami had resulted only in an agreement on terms. The Dolphins later sent Theismann a contract to sign but the quarterback apparently found it did not completely coincide with the terms he thought he had won.

"This gave him pause for reflection," said Bassett, which led to his coming back for another talk with the Argos.

O'Brien Repeats As All Opponent

Four seniors and a sophomore have been named to the UMass 1970-71 All Opponent basketball team.

The only repeater from last year was Boston College star guard Jim O'Brien who was named for the third straight time. O'Brien was a 5th-round draft choice of Buffalo of the NBA and a 3rd-round choice of Pittsburgh of the ABA.

Seniors Charlie Yelverton, 6'3, of Fordham, Walt Szczerbiak, 6'6, of George Washington and Bob Kissane, 6'8, of Holy Cross and sophomore guard Ernie DiGregorio, 6', of Providence comprise the first team with O'Brien. Yelverton was drafted 2nd by Portland of the NBA and 8th by Pittsburgh of the ABA, Szczerbiak was the 3rd choice of Phoenix and Texas and Kissane was taken 5th by Phoenix and 2nd by the New York Nets.

The second team included forwards Bill Chamberlain, 6'6, of No. Carolina and Steve Waterman, 6'2, of Springfield, 6'7 center Jim Garvin of Boston U. and guards George Karl, 6'1 and Steve Previs, 6'3, both of No. Carolina.

B's-Espo Smash NHL Records

NEW YORK (AP) - Forty-seven records were set during the National Hockey League's regular season, 35 by the Boston Bruins-the big one being Phil Esposito's 76 goals.

Esposito also collected 76 assists for a record 152 points, according to the NHL statistics released Monday.

The runner-up in the scoring race was Boston's Bobby Orr who set records for defenseman of 37 goals and 139 points and a league record of 102 assists.

The other Bruins ranked third and fourth-Johnny Bucyk with 116 points and Ken Hodge with 105 and Bobby Hull of Chicago was fifth with 96 points.

New York Ranger goalies Ed Giacomin and Gilles Villemure won the Vezina Trophy with a goals-against average of 2.26.

Leo Marx Speaks On 'Pastoralism'

By STAN OLSON
MDC Staff

An Amherst College professor of English discussed the question "Revolutionary Pastoralism A Literary Disorder?" last night in Herter Hall before an audience of 60 people.

Pastoralism is defined by "an impulse to retreat from a complex society in the direction of nature," said Dr. Leo Marx, author of Machine in the Garden. As examples of this impulse in present-day America, he cited the ecology movement, psychedelic trips, the move to the suburbs, Salem cigarette ads, and youth-culture analysts like Charles Reich.

He noted the importance of pastoralism in American literature, finding that for Twain, Faulkner, Melville and others a return to the natural environment was "both an escape and a quest." Early settlers in America met with a real and wild landscape, he said, and tried to apply the pastoral ideal to politics, i.e. "the pursuit of happiness."

Throughout the discussion, Marx seemed to keep an open mind about the question of "revolutionary pastoralism"-whether this movement can ever effect changes in the social order. In fiction, the hero learns from his encounter with nature but finally decides to return to a more complex way of life, he said.

Offering Susan Sontag's "Trip to Hanoi" as an instance of literary pastoralism, he said that the essay is traditional in that "the writer feels intellectually superior but morally inferior" to the shepherds, in this case the people of North Viet Nam.

If what is learned from a return to more simple ways of living demands "radical restructuring of social institutions," the results will be "a kind of politics never seen before," Marx concluded. But, he added, if politics is nothing but a power struggle, "revolutionary pastoralism" is a disorder, it is the "use of a literary device to simulate a political solution."

DAVID SILVER

...As David Silver Talks of Happenings

By BOB NESTI
MDC Staff

"It's hard to talk about things not happening," said David Silver, host of the now-defunct Channel Two television series "What's Happening Mr. Silver?", last night to a group of forty students in the Colonial Lounge.

Silver began his talk by relating American culture to the world presented in George Orwell's 1984. "Orwell wrote of the erosion of the human spirit." There is in the country a "perpetuation of the death spirit," he said.

"The Basic Ecological Crime has been we have moved from tactility," he continued. "We refuse to touch."

He said our generation copes with the deadness in our society through the use of drugs and he found this necessary but "very sad". "It only proves how far away from our 'selves' we really are."

"The best thing about cocaine is that it fills out your body. You are one. You feel your windpipe."

The discussion turned to television. Silver had hosted a local educational Boston television show "What's Happening Mr. Silver" for more than a year ending in 1968.

"It went off the air for two reasons, one of which satisfies my paranoia. First, the contract ended, and second, they really didn't like me."

Silver said his show was an attempt "to use television as a tool" that could bring us closer to the vitalism which the media so completely lacks.

"Television is a dehumanizing agency," he continued. "It's run by old men interested in nothing but profit motifs. Anything which threatens them, just won't go on the air," he maintained.

Calling his attitude "defeatist" he advised anyone present not to enter commercial television with hopes of changing it. "People should forget networks and create their own", he said.

"The answer is simple and television would be great," Silver said. "If we could have free exchange between independent television stations brought about, it could work."

When someone asked what he thought of the controversial CBS documentary "The Selling of the Pentagon," Silver said he hadn't seen it but he believed it to be the exception to the rule. "You wouldn't have a series entitled 'Pentagon Sucks' every week."

Pointing to the lack of genuine worth found on most television shows, Silver asked the group whether they have seen anyone such as Captain Beefheart, Frank Zappa, or Mick Jagger on television recently. "Dick Cavett had the Jefferson Airplane on four years after they had all died," he said.

"American Television is so bad that it won't even buy the Beatles' 'Magical Mystery Tour' and that was nothing but garbage," he continued.

Silver finally became bored with discussing television and read short pieces from the works of Cage and Olson.

After reading a poem of Blake, Silver said he was "sick of talking." "I'm getting an enormous amount of money for this," he told the crowd, "but I deserve it for coming to places like this."

College tours are what Silver has been doing since the demise of his television program and he told some stories about some of his more interesting trips. Once he visited a convent in Pennsylvania while coming off an acid trip after hearing the Beatles' "Abbey Road" for the

D.C. Living Conditions Topics For S.W. Task Force

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

The subject of conversation at last nights TASK force meeting in South West centered around the meal ticket policy the service of the Dining Commons, and the hopes of converting South West into a real living and learning Residential College.

Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Randolph Bromery and Vice-Chancellor of Administrative Services Thomas Campion joined about 25 SouthWest students in an informal rap session. In opening the meeting, Dr. Bromery said that the main purpose of the TASK

Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Randolph Bromery and Vice-Chancellor of Administrative Services Thomas Campion joined about 25 Southwest students in an informal rap session. In opening the meeting, Dr. Bromery said that the main purpose of the TASK Force is to try to get inputs from the students as to what to do to make student affairs more responsive to the needs of students.

The first issue of discussion concerned the mandatory Dining Common policy and the students gripes concerning the quality and choice of food served in the Commons. Dr. Bromery told the group that Mr. Campion will be releasing a multiple options plan later this week concerning the Dining Commons. Dr. Bromery suggested to the group that a Dining Common Council be set up composi mostly student members to suggest changes in policy and to make the Commons more responsive to student's needs. A suggestion then arose from one of the students suggesting that one or two of the Dining facilities be closed and reconverted to classrooms, meeting areas, and libraries to help in the conversion of South West into a real Residential College. John Hunt, Head Master of South West told the group that conversion of South West told the group that conversion would not be possible. He said to think that they can be changed is an illusion and he added "They are three White elephants and they must be fed."

Speaking about residential colleges, Dr. Bromery felt that the University never made a sincere attempt in the past in building up the residential colleges. In the following discussion students suggested bringing in faculty members to live and work in the South West area in an attempt in building up the area. To this idea, Dr. Bromery said if the whole reward system is changed around, then it would become possible to get Faculty into the Dormitories. Students then asked how they might go about getting money to convert the dorms into more suitable places to live. "Until the dorms are State owned," Bromery said, "About the only way to get money appropriated is through the Legislature, which is a pretty hard task." "But this can be done through lobbying by the students and their parents."

In a meeting Monday night with residents of the Quad the topic of conversation included the meal ticket issue, tuition, and dorm security which appears to be a very important issue among Quad residents. The debate concerning meal tickets was about the same as that which was brought up at the South West meeting. Speaking about tuition, Dr. Bromery explained that the tuition was returned to the State for redistribution. Speaking about the Student-Security program, Douglas Forsythe, in charge of campus security "interim" said that when the funds for Student-Security guards are depleted this month, two policemen will patrol the Quad Area at night. This new policy met with considerable opposition from the students.

Millions Not Made Off UM Students

By JEFF THOMPSON

"People are not making millions of dollars in Amherst from student purchases," said Robert Lindquist, newly elected President of the Amherst Chamber of Commerce in an MDC interview yesterday.

Topics discussed included peak buying times and seasons, changes in merchants' product lines to match the new trend of students shoplifting and the relation between students and Amherst businessmen.

"Amherst only has a nine-month business period because students are away all summer," Lindquist said. "Even during that time the cold from January to March keeps the students away from the center of town."

Lindquist noted the rush by outside businesses to invest in Amherst to get students' money, but he said they have their problems.

"They must gear their product line to an adult population of 13,000," Lindquist said, because one clothing store,which catered solely to students' tastes, was the only clothing store to go out of business over the past few years, despite the new trend in clothing.

Another clothing store, Thompson's, discontinued its boys' department because people are tending to make these purchases at large department stores such as Zayres, so Thompson's expanded its men's department for students, Lindquist said.

Commenting on the new styles, Lindquist said: "In spite of the fact that students today think dungarees and sweatshirts are good enough to wear, the majority continue to be affected by styles. Every kid that has dropped out of style to Carter's dungarees with minimal lingerie for girls and those Alpine boots for boys is offset by the increasing enrollment (1500/yr.) of the university."

He said that few students come into Amherst center in the mornings, but that the main student purchasing arrives Thursday, Friday, and Saturday afternoons.

"For the merchant, shoplifting is a tough problem to grapple with. If he prosecutes, he risks reprisals. If he doesn't, he is looked at as fair game," he said.

Lindquist objected to the University's policy of disciplining for shoplifting that occurs on campus, but refusing to do so for shoplifting that happens downtown.

When it was mentioned that the university had no jurisdiction about what went on off campus, he replied, "This is a very convenient policy for the university but most merchants feel it is wrong. Now students are taking a greater interest in national, state, and local politics and it certainly seems funny that they can be worried about US morals in Vietnam, but not worry about their own morals downtown."

Quoting the Amherst Record, he said that self-service food stores are hit the hardest, followed by discount department stores.

"Generally there is a good rapport between the Amherst businessmen and the students," Lindquist concluded. "Many stores hire student employees and the workers turn out to be very conscientious."

S.W. Needs Spirit, Belonging, And Unity

Southwest Patriots are announcing Spring selection of new members. The aim of the organization is to promote spirit, belonging and unity in Southwest.

The activities of the group are quite varied. Social activities include Glass Onion Night Clubs, as well as outdoor dances and concerts. Patriots are presently working on a Southwest week which will be at the beginning of May, and will consist of activities ranging from crafts to picnics.

At the beginning of each year an orientation session is sponsored for new members to Southwest, the purpose of which is to unite students and help them adjust to what seems to be a large University.

A weekly movie series is sponsored, bringing popular movies at as low a cost possible. The group also acts as a pep squad at UMass football games and as proctors at the nightly study halls in Hamden Commons.

Applications are available in the Patriots Office in Coolidge Tower Lobby. Any undergraduate of Southwest is invited to apply. Selections will be made after Southwest Week. Applicants will be judged as to their sincerity and willingness to participate in the activities of Southwest Week. Recommendations, and an informal interview will be required.

Patriots are open to new ideas for Southwest, whether they be social, academic, or cultural. Join us in a get together hour April 25 in the fifth floor lounge of JQA.

Of Birds And Clouds

The Classical Drama Festival will continue this week. On Wednesday afternoon, April 7, at 4:00 in Hasbrouck 20, Professor William Arrowsmith will lecture on "ARISTOPHANES' BIRDS: EROS AND THE POLITICS OF FANTASY." William Arrowsmith, who now describes himself as Professor At Large and Educational Consultant, created America's largest and most lively department of Classics at the University of Texas. He is well known for his translations from the Greek and Latin and for his revolutionary theories of higher education. He is presently teaching at M.I.T.

Wednesday evening the University of Massachusetts Theatre will do a final production of Aristophanes' Clouds, at 8:00 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium. William Arrowsmith did the translation used in this production. There will be no admission charge for this performance.

Viet Vets Ask Help From American Vets

Viet Nam Veterans Against the War (VVAW) calling for any veterans of the Viet Nam War to testify to specific instances that can show how the United States is violating the agreement of the Geneva Convention.

The national organization, with a chapter in Boston, is sponsoring its own smaller "Winter Soldier" testimony in conjunction with the UMass Veterans For Peace.

"Winter Soldier" is a film of veteran's testimony about the acts in violation of the Convention.

On this campus Veterans for Peace includes all veterans. According to the GI Bill anyone with 180 days of service is a veteran, not all men who serve in Viet Nam, thus VVAW has appealed only for Viet Nam Vets.

A meeting will be held Thursday at 6:30 PM in rooms 170-172 o Campus Center for all those interested and qualified.

Right On!

ASA (American Student Association) meets tonight at 7:30 in Room 911 of the Campus Center to ACT on the issues of the Free Spring Concert Festival, Collegian Policies, Campus Center Transformation, and "the Commencement Secret."

Any student who has questions or gripes about any of the above issues or about related issues and wants to DO something about them urged to attend.

Public, Senates Meet on Governance

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

At a meeting open to the general public, members of the three Senates on campus met, (Student, Graduate and Faculty), to make comments on the basic principles and mechanisms of the proposed University Senate. The document will then be revised if necessary and it will go to the Senate where the final vote will be held the week of April 30.

At the meeting the Chairman discussed why the idea for a Unicameral Senate came about. The reason given was to make the University a community "in the real sense." This would come about through rational discussion of problems by Faculty and Students alike. The second reason given for the establishment of a University Senate was that three separate Senate bodies couldn't handle important issues of joint concern.

The first topic for discussion concerned the time limit involved in working on the document. A few felt that not enough time was given to discussion but those against giving more time cited that many people weren't interested and just prolonged discussion wouldn't do any good. They cited the lack of attendance of students at the open meeting.

Next issue discussed at the Tuesday afternoon meeting concerned the membership of the proposed University Senate. It was recommended that members should be independent and that they should not represent specific interest groups as the independent Senates in the past.

Those at the meeting said that they wanted Senate members to come and discuss ideas from the beginning and the way that the proposal was set up was so that different factions would not be fighting among each other.

Discussion was then centered on lines 143 and 144 of the proposal. A member of the Commission suggested that separate groups be able to formulate their own bills. Debate followed and it said that one or more conferences might result in disciplinary agents. It was decided that issues involving all members of the community would be initiated on the floor and that issues only concerning one group such as the undergraduate students would be initiated in conferences of the particular group involved.

Most of the remaining discussion centered around what one member of the committee deemed the "numbers game," or the ratio of Faculty- undergrad-grad representatives to be established as the permanent ratio for the University Senate.

Several of the committee members present favored a 1-1-1 ratio, while others favored other, unspecified, percentages. It was proposed by one committee member that a temporary 1-1-1 ratio be adopted for a year, allowing of course for the approval of the University Senate proposal. At the beginning of the second year of the University Senate, the success of the program would be investigated, using attendance records and other similar documents.

Other questions were raised about the constitution of the proposed University Senate.

Final resolution of the recommendations of the committee will be presented to the Student Senate sometime in the near future.

Peace Treaty Circulating For Campuswide Support

The People's Peace Treaty signed by the South Vietnamese National Student Union, the South Vietnamese Liberation Student Union, the North Vietnamese Student Association, and the United States National Student Association, is an attempt at creating a new drive for peace that will link the antiwar majority of the American population with the people of Vietnam.

People will soon be circulating the treaty throughout the campus asking for signatures and support. There is also a table set up in the Student Union where the treaty can be signed and where information can be obtained.

All those interested in working on the People's Peace Treaty, discussing May Day activities, a caravan to Washington, and the possibility of a strike at UMass on May 5th are urged to attend the Wednesday, April 7 meeting at 7:30 in rooms 805-809 of the Campus Center.

The following is a copy of the Joint Treaty of Peace:

Be it known that the American and Vietnamese people are not enemies. The war is carried out in the names of the people of the United States and South Vietnam but without our consent. It destroys the land and people of Vietnam. It drains America of its resources, its youth and its honor.

We hereby agree to end the war on the following terms, so that both peoples can live under the joy of independence and can devote themselves to building a society based on human equality and respect for the earth.

1. The Americans agree to the immediate and total withdrawal from Vietnam, and publicly to set the date by which all U.S. military forces will be removed.
2. The Vietnamese pledge that as soon as the U.S. government publicly sets a date for total withdrawal, they will enter discussions to secure the release of all American prisoners, including pilots captured while bombing North Vietnam.
3. There will be an immediate cease fire between U.S. forces and those led by the Provisional Revolutionary Government of South Vietnam.
4. They will enter discussions on the procedures to guarantee the safety of all withdrawing troops.
5. The Americans pledge to end the imposition of Thieu-Ky-Khiem on the people of South Vietnam in order to insure their right to self-determination and so that all political prisoners can be released.
6. The Vietnamese pledge to form a provisional coalition government to organize democratic elections. All parties agree to respect the results of elections in which all South Vietnamese can participate freely without the presence of any foreign troops.
7. The South Vietnamese pledge to enter discussion of procedures to guarantee the safety and political freedom of those South Vietnamese who have collaborated with the U.S. or with the U.S.-supported regime.
8. The Americans and Vietnamese agree to respect the independence, peace and neutrality of Laos and Cambodia in accord with the 1954 and 1962 Geneva conventions and not to interfere in the internal affairs of these two countries.
9. Upon these points of agreement, we pledge to end the war and resolve all other questions in the spirit of self-determination and mutual respect for the independence and political freedom of the people of Vietnam and the United States.

By ratifying this agreement, we pledge to take whatever actions are appropriate to implement the terms of this joint Treaty and to insure its acceptance by the government of the United States.

You Can Take Nine Credits This Summer

The University will hold one main 8-week session this summer. People interested in taking courses must have their applications submitted prior to June 10. Registration Day is June 28, and classes commence on the 29th. Courses run through Aug. 20th and normally meet five days a week, one hour a day.

A regular summer load consists of six credits. Nine credits may be elected, however.

In addition to the main session, several departments have scheduled courses which run through different dates. The Departments of Anthropology, Education, Engineering, English, Food Science, Home Economics, Nursing, Physics, and Speech offer these special sessions.

Tuition during the summer is $10 per credit hour taken; $15 for out-of staters. For those will occupy dorms during the summer, rent is $140 for the session, board $16 per week.

Applications may be obtained in the Registrar's Office in Whitmore. Completed forms should be submitted to the Admissions Office in Whitmore, or to Munson Hall for Graduate students.

Registration and scheduling for courses will be handled on a "first come, first-served" basis. Students should apply early to ensure their schedule preferences.

To Speak Tonight

Nixon May Up Pullout Rate

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon secluded himself with staff members Tuesday in the final stages of putting together his Wednesday night announcement of a new round of U.S. troop withdrawals from Vietnam.

Although there is wide speculation he will announce an accelerated pullout, the White House kept strictly silent on what he will say as well as on recent unofficial estimates on the figures he would come up with.

A year ago, the President did not reach a final decision until three hours before he announced it.

Since that time, when he told the nation 150,000 troops would be pulled out in the year ahead, withdrawals have averaged about 12,500 a month and U.S. Military manpower in South Vietnam has declined to around 300,000. And the administration says it will come down 284,000 by May 30, the goal originally set.

But from there on there was only a speculation as to numbers and withdrawal rates. Some guesses center on stepping up to 15,000 to 20,000 pullouts a month.

Sen. George D. Aiken, (R-Vt.), said Tuesday that in the past two weeks withdrawals have been pushed up to a rate of 18,000 a month which will be made officially public Wednesday night. He added that if Nixon retained that rate, the President "would get them all out sometime next year."

Aiken was interviewed by Metromedia Radio News.

But White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler stressed that in past months the 12,500 withdrawal rate has been an average rather than a steady pace. He said totals were below that figure in earlier months and above it in later stages. So in April, he said, the withdrawal was about 17,000.

Since the President chose to announce an annual withdrawal figure a year ago, there were conjectures that he might do so again and come through with a figure of perhaps 200,000. And some reports have it that the number of American troops left as a residue in Vietnam would be down to 40,000 or 50,000.

Nixon has said that some U.S. troops will stay in Indochina until Hanoi releases all U.S. war prisoners.

But Nixon has voiced also his confidence that the South Vietnamese have demonstrated they can pretty much "hack it," as he put it at a news conference, on their own.

Nixon has said he was against making a unilateral deadline for a total withdrawal of the U.S. forces.

Nevertheless, there has been some swelling of sentiment in Congress to name a date, polls have not been too glowing as to presidential popularity, and Nixon will be under continuing pressure from here on to wind up the war with the 1972 presidential campaign in the offing.

Refugees Witness Mass Executions In Pakistan

CALCUTTA, India (AP)—U.S. and other foreign refugees from East Pakistan said Tuesday the rebels and their antagonists, the army, had staged an orgy of mass executions in Chittagong. Burning and looting left that great port an almost deserted wasteland.

The Bengalis of East Pakistan still were fighting outside Chittagong but the city itself was in the hands of West Pakistan's army, reported some of the 37 Americans and 82 other foreigners reaching Calcutta on the British ship Clan MacNair.

"The army only had to see a Bengali on the street and they shot him," said a Briton. "Chittagong is now deserted. Everyone has fled to the villages outside."

Said another Briton who was an engineer in a Chittagong jute mill: "In my own mill, people were murdered in front of my eyes. Many people were burned in their houses when the army put them to the torch. They seemed to take a delight in destruction. Machine guns were going day and night and there was shelling from gunboats offshore."

The Britons said, however, that for two weeks before West Pakistan's army arrived, Bengalis had been murdering West Pakistanis living in Chittagong. They told of corpses lying in the streets for nine days.

Leon Lumsden, an American engineer working on a U.S. aid project reported: "Soldiers just walked up to anyone wearing a lungi, the native Bengali dress, and shot them through the head." He estimated he had seen 15 Bengalis killed.

Bengali dress, and shot them through the head." He estimated he had seen 15

"We saw dead bodies and smelled the stench of death," said Neal O'Toole, New Rochelle, N.Y., employed in a U.S. CARE mission in Chittagong. "There is indiscriminate looting and burning."

O'Toole reported the West Pakistanti army ruled Chittagong the past week "by brute force and terror." He predicted the East Pakistanis would make a stand, adding: "Already they control most of the countryside."

Jesse Eaton, a Baptist missionary from Lockport, N.Y., reported the army of President Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan had cleared an area of about five miles around Chittagong. Beyond that, the Bengalis were in control.

Eaton, his wife and three children drove 60 miles from their mission to Chittagong.

"You run into no man's land just past the Chittagong radio station and its 300 yards before you hit the Pakistani army positions," he said. "That was the most terrifying part of the journey."

While Pakistani jets knocked out the radio station, the East Pakistanis still control it.

"From there to the center of Chittagong we saw only the ashes of bamboo huts," Eaton added.

Stories told by refugees and information gathered by reporters slipping into East Pakistan indicate Yahya's army was increasingly isolated in the major cities of secessionist East Pakistan.

After 12 days of civil war, a general picture of strength of the opposing forces was emerging.

The West Pakistan army is in control of at least the major cities in the province, Dacca, the capital, and Chittagong.

Elsewhere in the 55,126-square-mile province, and even on the outskirts of Dacca and Chittagong, the followers of Sheik Mujibur Rahman and his outlawed Awami League were reported to be in control.

Foreign correspondents who have visited East Pakistani towns held by the rebels near the Indian border the past week have reported that army units have retreated to their cantonments, in scenes resembling U.S. cavalry stands in forts of the American West during the 19th century.

With internal river transportation disrupted in the province, the army, according to Indian intelligence reports, was having logistical problems that were being complicated by a fuel shortage.

Hassein Asks Guerrillas To Attack Israelis Border

AP—King Hussein of Jordan told the Palestinian guerrillas Tuesday to end their attacks on his army and fight the Israelis occupying Jordan's west bank.

The king said his army, which has fought the guerrillas for 12 consecutive days now, would willingly support the guerrillas against Israel's west bank positions.

"Nobody is more anxious than we are to safeguard the resistance movement," Hussein said in an address before a delegation of Jordanian doctors, lawyers and engineers in Amman. "But the guerrillas should shift their activities to their proper sphere-the Israeli-occupied west bank."

The king said he was determined to maintain order in Jordan and "make every citizen feel safe in his home."

The commandos fought "trench to trench" pitched battles in northern Jordan with Hussein's army Tuesday in fighting what one guerrilla leader warned could lead to prolonged civil war.

According to government and guerrilla accounts, the fighting centered around a guerrilla stronghold 25 miles north of Amman, the Jordanian capital, and at a Jordanian air force base close to the Syrian border.

Each side blamed the other for opening fire.

The guerrillas reported in Beirut they threw back four infantry and armor assaults on commando positions at Sakeb, six miles west of the key town of Jerash, 25 miles north of Amman.

The guerrillas claimed to have lost three dead.

A military spokesman in Amman made no mention of that action but reported a night rocket assault on King Hussein Air Base, 30 miles northeast of Amman.

"A number of 6-inch rockets were fired at the base damaging two jet aircraft," he said.

Part of Hussein's air force of Hawker Hunter and Lockheed Starfighter jets is stationed at the King Hussein Air Base. The guerrillas have claimed the king is preparing to throw in planes against their forces.

Tuesday's rocket attack may have been an attempt to parallyze the king's air power in advance of any such move.

Zap Into A New Justice

By GILBERT J. SALK

I want to say a few words today about the Calley case as it (maybe) relates to cultural alternatives, but first I have a couple of short zaps to share with you.

ZAP #1: Pierpont dorm will run a week-long series of workshops on nonviolence with particular emphasis on the April 24 March on Washington. There should be some good stuff for those of you interested in either the march or in nonviolence. The program will run all next week. I'll be doing a rap on my idea of revolutionary nonviolence (the end is a product of the means) Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the main lounge. Come learn and teach. Watch the Collegian for other info about the week.

ZAP #2: If you are looking for a relevant summer job or employment after vacation, the United Christian Foundation has a new service you should check out. Elaine Fraser is running a vocations-for-social-change counseling service. She has been gathering info from government, church, and private agencies on social service-type programs and employment. Salaries are generally small, but the work provides its own rewards. The locations of the jobs are in Spaceship Earth (in the U.S. and abroad.) Visit UCF in 319 Hampshire House on Monday or Friday afternoon between 1:30 and 4:00 p.m.

Now on the Calley. I don't want to speculate on his guilt or innocence here. I'm more concerned about an important precedent which Richard Nixon has set by releasing Calley from the stockade until his appeals are exhausted. This was an important move which should be duplicated in the case of every prisoner who is in jail awaiting either trail or appeal. In the name of the kind of justice to which we pay lip service, no man should spend a day in jail until he has been tried and granted his right to an appeal, he is to be assumed innocent, and no innocent man should be penned up in a cage against his will.

Some will cry that someone who is dangerous to society, who has perhaps committed a murder, should not be allowed to walk the streets. This is a kind of doublethink. We are all, it seems, willing to free Calley, who was accused of multiple homicide. Others who are accused should be granted the same rights.

The question goes far beyond this relatively simple one as we begin to study it, however. If our counterculture is based on some kind of respect for humanity, where is there ever room for cages for human beings? Can we ever solve the problem of men treating other men as less than human if we allow our institutions to deprive our brothers of their humanity? I would suggest that we must do away with prisons altogether.

Our institutions are a reflection of our culture, but at the same time they shape the growth of the culture. If we find that certain institutions are betraying our ideal culture, we must do away with that institution. This holds for political systems, educational systems, life support systems, and judicial systems.

Our new culture will hopefully do away with punitive "justice" and institute a program which will assert and reinforce the humanity of lawbreakers. This will obviously mean that the entire legal code will have to be rewritten so that llfe and personal freedom is always more important than property, rather than vice versa, as it now exists. It will require that our judicial system begin to place a greater concern on individuals than on courtroom ritual. It will require paying District Attorneys to see that justice is done rather than for obtaining convictions. It will mean training police to treat pigs like human beings, rather than acting like pigs themselves. (Dig on that for a little, will you?) It will mean finding alternative ways to deal with convicted lawbreakers which will allow them to retain (or regain) their self-respect, instead of caging them and destroying their humanity. We all suffer when we throw people behind bars. As Martin Luther King Jr. said, "No man is free until all men are free."

PEACE.

Help The Holt Family Survive

The campus service organization, Arnold Air Society and Angel Flight, feel a personal responsibility to inform you of the plight of the H.B. Holt Family of Austin, Texas. This family is poor, not so poor that they can't feed or clothe themselves, but just so poor that if they don't collect $20,000.00 in the ne' t 3 weeks two more members of their family will die!

Three members of the family have already died from a disease known as Nephritis. This is a rare kidney disease which requires a combinational treatment with a special kidney machine and a special chemical.

Two of the Holt children, Paula, age 17, and Gary, age 20, require three, five-hour sessions of treatment per week. If they can stay alive, in four years they will be receptive to kidney transplants, but until then, they must depend upon this costly treatment.

The treatment costs $6,700.00 per year per child and chemicals are $360.00 per month per child or a total of $4,320.00 additional per child per year. In other words, it takes $11,020.00 per year to keep just one Holt child alive.

As of now though, Mr. Holt is $20,000.00 in debt trying to keep his children alive. He drives a bread truck and makes $500.00 per month and his wife suppliments the income with her $400.00 a month. This barely keeps the family's monthly expenses paid.

With this debt in mind, the company that manufactures the chemical cannot supply any more to the Holt's unless their debt is paid. The Holts have only a few weeks of this precious chemical left.

The Holts desperately need money and UMass can help. Arnold Air and Angel Flight representtives will be collecting contributions at the tables outside the Campus Center Bookstore this week, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, from 9 A.M. to 4 P.M.

Black Feminist To Speak

Myrna Hill, a Black feminist from New York City, will speak Thursday night, April 8, on the interrelationships between feminism and Black nationalism, and in so doing will address herself to the myth that Women's Liberation is a "middle-class white" movement.

"Women's Liberation demands equal opportunity in jobs. Black women workers, averaging $3,000 per year, have the lowest average wage in the country.

"Women's Liberation demands free, community-controlled abortion services. Four times as many Black women die from child-bearing related causes as do white women.

"Women's Liberation demands community controlled 24-hour child care. Bureau of Labor Statistics show that a larger proportion of Black women in almost every age group hold jobs than do their white sisters."

The discussion, sponsored by the Militant Forum Series of Young Socialist Alliance, will be held at 8:00 Thursday night in Room 174 of the Campus Center.

YSA Supports Prague 18

The UMass chapter of the Young Socialist Alliance is enlisting in the international defense campaign to free eighteen young Czechoslovaks accused of "Trotskyist activities" in Prague. Sixteen of the defendents were convicted on March 19 on charges of "subversion" and given sentences ranging from one to four years. Two other defendents still await trial.

Internationally the defense of the Prague 18 includes such outstanding socialist intellectuals as Jean-Paul Sartre, and Ernest Mandel, who has been denied an entry visa to the United States, because of his revolutionary socialist viewpoint. Sponsors of the defense campaign in the United States include Irving Beinin of the radical weekly Guardian, Isa Hanna of the N.Y.U. Organization of Arab Students. May Kochiyama of Asian Americans for Action, Nan Maglin of New University Conference, Raymond Markey, chairman of the political action committee of AFSCME (American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees), and Paul Sweezy of the socialist journal Monthly Review.

Locally the UMass USA will run a petition drive to be sent to the Czechoslovak consulate in New York City.

The petition will read: "We, the undersigned, socialist, nationalists, feminists, and gay activists struggling for revolutionary change within the greatest imperialist power in the world: the United States, express our international solidarity with the Prague defendents charged with "Trotskyist activities" and demand their immediate release.

"We understand that the "crime of Trotskyism" is used by the present Czech government leaders to repress anyone who opposes the present bureaucratic regime in the name of socialist democracy, according to a YSA spokesman. YSA stands unconditionally in support of the socialist system of Czechoslovakia embodied in the state ownership and planning of the means of production, according to the spokesman. But YSA feels that thought control, political show trials, not only fail to protect socialism from imperialist attacks but actually aid imperialism by constituting a slander of the very idea of socialism, he said. Socialism, Yes! Bureaucracy, No!" was his cry.

A summary of the charges, which were prepared in Prague by the Czechoslovakian government, against the eighteen young Czechoslovaks students and workers included the following:

--Posting the "Manifesto of the Revolutionary Youth Movement in the philosophy department of Charles University in Prague.

--A private meeting in Prague at which one of the defendents "expressed radical views and spoke about a possibility of an armed uprising" (emphasis added).

--Organizing a demonstration at the East German Embassy to protest the expulsion of Burmese students from East Germany.

--Encouraging members of the group to read articles by Trotsky, Bukharin, and Djilas.

--Producing four hundred nimeographed copies of a book entitled Bureaucracy No--Revolution Yes.

In addition, one defendent, Filipp Serrano, was charged with the "crime of translating works of Trotskyists and revisionists." The summary of the indictment also stated the defendents "wanted to replace the state and party apparatus by a system of so-called "self-management of the entire people."

YSA feels that it is very strange to be tried in a "socialist" country for holding the viewpoint of Lenin, the spokesman said. They invite anyone in the Amherst area who considers themselves revolutionary socialist, nationalist, feminist or gay activist to join in this campaign to defend the Prague 18. For more information come to the YSA table in front of the Hatch tomorrow.

"It Says Here They're Winding Down The War"

Dear Margaret

WASHINGTON——President Nixon pulled out all stops in trying to rally enough Senate votes to get the funding of the SST passed. Although he failed, he should get high marks for every tactic he used.

One that came to light, just a few hours before the vote, was a letter he had hand-delivered to Sen. Margaret Chase Smith of Maine saying that he intended to keep open the Portsmouth Naval Base in New Hampshire, where many citizens from Maine are employed.

Sen. Smith became so indignant at what she considered an attemptedbribe to get her to vote for the SST that she released the "Dear Margaret" letter to the press and then voted against the supersonic transport.

While this was a setback for Mr. Nixon, it's doubtful that this will be the last such attempt to win over votes by promising federal projects to various senators.

The next big bill President Nixon hopes to get through is his revenue-sharing measure for cities and states, and we can just see a spate of letters being sent off to the Hill a few hours before that vote.

They'll probably go like this:

Dear Clinton,

After consulting with the Defense Department, I have decided to go ahead with the building of a submarine naval base in New Mexico, for $100 million. The base when fully built will employ 20,000 people and will bring to Mexico another $500 million in wages and industry.

Because New Mexico is not connected to any major waterway, I have concluded that this would be the safest place for a submarine base. The Navy is now working on methods of land transportation to deliver and bring back the submarines from the sea. You have my permission to announce this, and Mrs. Nixon and I are looking forward to seeing you at Tricia's wedding.

Sincerely,
Dick

Dear Mark,

I am happy to inform you that I have authorized a multi-billion-dollar project to include Portland, Ore., in our ABM system. Mel Laird tells me that Portland is probably the key target of any Chinese missile attack, and we in the White House believe the people of Oregon deserve all the protection they can get. With this installation, plus revenue sharing, which I know the Senate will pass, I can see Portland becoming the most important city on the West Coast.

Why don't you come down to Key Biscayne for the weekend?

Sincerely,
Dick

Dear Jim,

As you probably know, we've been looking for a new site for our atomic underground tests, and the AEC has recommended Westchester County in New York as the ideal place. (Underneath the Penn Central railroad tracks.)

I thought since you were a freshman senator, and because of my affection for your brother Bill, that you would like to hear about it before Jake Javits. The AEC plans on spending $300 million and hiring 600 people, which will bring great prosperity to the area. After the revenue-sharing vote this morning, why not come over to the White House and have lunch? I'd love to meet your sister.

Cheers,
Dick

Dear Strom,

It's hard to squeeze one more military base into Charleston, S.C., but our defense people think they can do it. What's your poison?

Sincerely,
Dick

P.S. Julie and David said they'd baby-sit for you any time you and Mrs. Thurmond want to go out.

A Little Bit Brighter

I've been around campus now for two years, and sometimes I wonder if its all been worth it. And yet at other times I wonder if it isn't all as bad as these pages say it is.

Yesterday was another of those "typical" UMass days -- gloomy, more like autumn than spring. Students were dragging themselves around to their classes and whatnot in a quiet daze -- I felt barely able to do even that. I'd woken up to jump down my roommate's throat for not waking me in time for a 9:05, not realizing that I probably wouldn't have gone anyway.

So I was in terrific shape for my eleven o'clock breaklast of a hamburger and watery Pepsi -- my annual spring journey to the doldrums was beginning, accompanied this year by an awfully persistant sore throat. But fear not, readers, I am not writing merely to tell you about my own humble problems -- I know that you have enough of these hazards of your own.

For the past week I had been trying desperately to track down my Modern Novel professor -- the bastard had given me a low mark on a test, and though I might have deserved it, I didn't think he should have gone and nit-picked. True, I have not spent the time necessary to do as much studying as I should -- trying to put this paper together is a lot of work for the few people who hang around the office -- but that's another column. I was angry, and I wanted to talk to him.

There was a bomb scare yesterday in SBA, where my Modern Novel class is held. My professor was no where to be seen, so I took a chance and walked over to Bartlett, bluebook ready, a little nervous now that the confrontation was so near at hand. I knocked softly, and someone stirred. Maybe he's got another student in there, I wishfully thought. I'd never been this close to a professor before, much less talked to one.

My professor peeked out of his office timidly, as if he were expecting someone he didn't want to see. But his expression changed, and he smiled as he shook my hand while directing me into a battered office chair. His office would have been cramped if there had been much more in it -- but it certainly didn't look as if he lived there. I looked out the window watching the crane hovering over the new psychology building, trying to think of what I wanted to say.

"How are things going?" he asked. I turned to see his face -- he was elderly, and his face gave the impression that he'd been around for a long time. He seemed as nervous as me.

I told him everything was okay, and soon we were talking just like any other two normal civilized people. We discussed things like student apathy, the dope on campus, the latest books and movies, the new campus governance proposal, and well, almost anything that wanted to be said.

I had been there for about an hour, and I'd almost forgotten why I'd gone in the first place. My anger about the test became ridiculous -- it was no longer as if a computer had graded the essay. This person, perhaps old enough to be my grandfather, was really just a pretty good guy. I decided not to even bother to ask him about the exam--I figured I'd try and make it up on the next one.

I took my leave, and outside the day was maybe a little bit brighter.

Taking A Ride On A Train

You're on a train rifling aimlessly forward, while hopelessly watching the scenery fan out at you in vague bullets of greenish-blue.
The sun reflecting off the window sails tediously over your eyes holding you in its hypnotic gambol
as it dips out of the opposite window.
Breathing shallow, you fidget uncomfortably in your seat and decide on really nothing.
Whenever you try to get up you're pulled back--impotent like running stationary in a dream.

And with swelling resignation you drop down agitated into your seat
Each time gathering up,
pulling back, submerged.
Finally your breathing, thrusting body breaks over the crest and plunges headlong beyond the tracks and gazing back at the rapidly vanishing train you brush off your coat and knowingly shake your head.

"Please, See!"

We walked
And the people at Home
walked the other way.
We walked.
And the people at Home
had nothing to say.

We crawled.
And the men at the top
hid under the dome.
We crawled
And the men at the top
had their dinners at Home.

We stopped.
And the man in the lead
said we should defend.
We stopped.
And the man in the lead
and the rest of us end.

We died.
And the people at Home
walked the other way.
We died.
And the people at Home
had nothing to say.

Letters To The Editor

Hot Air Creates A Fog

To the Editor:

In an April 6th letter to the editor, Mr. Robert A. Corry beautifully executed a salient thrust to a previous letter by Mr. Richard M. Ryan on behalf of the "Veterans for Peace" on campus. My purpose is not to defend the group, merely to question his intent: Would he actively support a "valid peace movement" or is he simply suffering from diarrhea of the mouth?

I organized the "Veterans for Peace" at UMass on February 19th of this year. I saw veterans as a credible source that the American people could relate to against the War. To further this prospect I felt a non-political, veteran and G.I. organized group to "end US involvement in Indo-China" was essential. To all interested, I emphasized "non-political". I am no longer actively involved with the group because of personal disagreements with those (few) who are still active. I spoke to Mr. Corry at great lengths at our table outside the Hatch before our first meeting and he was quite aware of my position. I never spoke to him again. I never saw him again. Where was he and the "1450" others, when I needed real, "valid" involvement; not hot air? Hot air creates a fog to hide behind. You blow your horn loudest when you can't be seen.

Well, I don't see where a lot of noise will bring down any walls for us. I prefer working for Peace. I am presently an active Draft and Military Counselor. This is my effort to end the war. I help people to not go in and attempt to show those in legal ways out. What are you doing fellow veterans? When will the air and walls of your rooms and the Hatch finally become stagnant and boring? Do you think you could stir yourselves to action now?

Sure, there are some veterans that are for the war, but the vast majority of us are against it. Let's make ourselves known.

I was in Nam and I hate every aspect of it. But I'll not sit idly on my ass playing thumb switch. I'll work. Alone, if necessary. With others wanting to work, if available. I have my doubts if anyone wants to act. If you do, contact me through Draft Counseling. If not, see how you relate to the poem on page 6.

Sin Of Omission

To the Editor:

In a letter yesterday, Mr. Robert A. Corry commented upon an earlier letter of mine concerning Veterans for Peace. He states that the Veterans are steered by "flunkies" from the MOBE and YSA. In fact one of our officers is a member of those two organizations, he is also an ex-lieutenant in the Army. If a veteran happens to be a socialist who wants peace, can't he join a veteran's group for peace? If you belong to the Young Americans for Freedom and are a veteran and want an immediate withdrawal from Indochina, you can join us. We will gladly welcome any veteran who can support our one sentence platform. "We demand an immediate withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Indochina." If moderates leave support of peace to the leftists, they should remember that there is a sin of omission as well as commission.

Mr. Corry also seems to doubt my credentials as a veteran. I'll gladly show him my DD214 that proves one year, eight months and ten days of foreign service with the Marine Corps in Viet Nam. For that matter I'll show him my membership card in the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

This group is not pro-Viet Cong. We have seen too much shit with our own eyes to have any delusions about Good Guys and Bad Guys on a battlefield.

Mr. Corry does make a very good point in his letter; He implies that a "Baker's dozen and 237 ghosts" form our group. About 250 people have signed mailing lists and petitions at our tables in the Student Union. Only about a dozen do most of the work; the rest, apparently, are too busy or disinterested. The sad part is that if you're a veteran, people consider you to be pro-war. As a home town friend asked, "Dick, have you run into any of those peace-creeps at UMass?" Nixon counts you as part of his silent majority.

You risked your life to support the war. People respect you for your courage and maturity. If you don't speak out against the war, you are still helping fight it.

I ask Mr. Corry and any other veteran of military service to meet us Thursday, April 8, at 7 p.m. at the Campus Center, Room 170-172.

Closer To Home

To the Editor:

Where can the pregnant co-ed seeking an abortion turn to for financial aid? On their campus there are very few avenues open for obtaining money for this purpose. Turn to her parents? Very few girls ever tell their parents of their pregnancies. The boys? Most likely he too is a student already struggling with the rising cost of education. Friends? How much money would your friends be able to loan you for a personal reason?

When one considers the number of girls from this school who have had an abortion and who needed money for the operation, one will recognize the need for a loan fund on campus.

On Monday afternoon I attended a meeting to set up such a fund. The planning committee is willing to do the leg-work involved, but we do need student support and most importantly their monetary backing. At the University of Maine a few cents is taken out of each student's activity fee to go into a similar fund, but the Abortion Laws in Massachusetts would make a similar plan unfeasible here. For this reason funds would have to be solicited from the students directly.

If you want to hear more or wish to voice your opinions, there will be another meeting on April 14 in room 802 Campus Center at 1:30 p.m.

It has been estimated that one of every four co-eds on campus has had an abortion. The problem might be "closer to home" than you think.

He Beat Shirley

To the Editor:

In recent weeks Republican Congressman Paul McCloskey of California has talked of entering the Presidential primaries next Spring, against President Nixon. McCloskey is primarily concerned with forcing the President to bring an end to the war in Viet-Nam. The Congressman has said that if the Congress does nothing to end the war, and no Republican with greater stature than himself enters the race, he will become a candidate. He is expected to decide sometime this summer what he will do.

McCloskey's opposition to the war dates back to 1968, the year he beat Shirley Temple in an upset election to take his seat in Congress. For the next two years he worked to put pressure on Nixon to end the war, finally breaking with the administration during the 1970 elections. By February 18, of this year he had been alienated enough to call for national discussion and debate on possible impeachment proceedings against President Nixon for his conduct of the war.

A McCloskey candidacy would have a fairly good chance in Massachusetts. Nixon's standing in the 1968 primary, John Volpe, was beaten 2-1 by Rockefeller, and the Republican's in this state are liberal as Republican's go. McCloskey himself, with a moderately liberal voting record in the House, and a record was a war hero in Korea, seems well cast for an antiwar candidate. Nixon and his curious crew will be hard put to pin an "unpatriotic" or "soft on communism" label on him.

This evening at 9, The Committee to Elect Congressman Paul McCloskey of California President of the United States, (popularly known as the McCloskey for President Committee) will meet in room 802 of the Campus Center. If you are interested in working for McCloskey, or are just looking for more information, please come. Frequently if you call me at 6-4000 you can also get information on McCloskey.

Sheer Nonsense

To the Editor:

In yesterday's Collegian there appeared a letter from Robert Corry which dealt with his criticisms of the UMass Veterans For Peace. I am confident that several of my fellow vets will respond to all of Corry's accusations but as a member of both the Vets and the Young Socialist Alliance I feel called upon to answer his more serious allegation that the group is controlled by both the Student Mobe and YSA.

The Veterans established themselves as a group in February with one purpose to end the war. Since that time, all its efforts have been devoted to that purpose. Even in [illegible] with we realized that our political actions could not be discussed in a vacuum. When we realize that our uniqueness as veterans will aid us in getting a point across, [illegible]use that uniqueness-i.e. the veteran conducted co[illegible]tation with the Marine Corps recruiters. But w[illegible]n we realize that an action requires the most m[illegible]sive participation possible, we work with other groups-i.e. our planned attendance in Washington on April 24th. It would be sheer nonsense to divorce ourselves from the rest of the anti-war movement for the sake of organizational purity. We have decided not to do so. Our relationship with the Student Mobe takes no more than this form. Above this tactical question remains the fact that any Vet who favors immediate withdrawal is asked to join-no one limits membership other than on this basis.

The consideration reduces itself to decision making. The method we use is a democratic process called majority rule-one vote per person. Given the fact that membership is not controlled and there are only 2 YSAers in the group I cannot understand how one is led to believe that the group is controlled.

A final point to be made is that nowhere is his letter does Corry mention specific issues that he disagrees with. Instead he wrongly conjures up the fear of an infiltrated group as proof that whatever it decided must be wrong. I invite you Mr. Corry and the others you cited in your letter to come and talk to us about our program on a concrete and realistic basis.

Editorial Points

Mrs. Louise Bruyn, who walked from Newton to Washington in protest over the war in Vietnam was granted a 30 minute interview with presidential aide Robert H. Finch Monday. In their discussion, Finch promised to ask President Nixon to meet with her personally this week. If it actually happens, it may set a dangerous precedent considering the numbers of people expected to march on Washington on April 23-24.

Does the name Hanson ring a bell? No, we don't mean the well-known editor of your local college daily. The person in question is John Hanson, who, you will probably be surprised to discover, was the first President of the United States under the Articles of Confereration and President of the Continental Congress and who, if Rep. Clarence Long has his way, will soon have his own day. And why not? If our Hanson can have a daily why can't his namesake just have one day?

The following item appeared in yesterday's Boston Globe:

Rep. Silvio O. Conte (R—Mass.) has prepared a farm bill amendment to help the Washington Senators in their financial plight by giving them a subsidy not to grow corn in RFK Stadium modeled after a similar amendment which would make 300 sugar beet farmers eligible for subsidies for not growing corn. Neither the beet farmers nor the ball club have ever grown corn, but since the government cannot give the beet farmers a subsidy not to raise sugar beets, the bill, which has passed the Senate, would call them corn farmers and pay them not to raise corn.

No comment.

More Food For Thought

To the Editor:

A week has passed since my first letter was published in the Collegian correcting Gil Salk's column on Organic Gardening. Since then, a letter was printed on this same page stating that my views were wrong.

I would first like to say that I am not against the idea of Organic Gardening in a small garden. But as I said in my letter of April 1, farming organically on a large scale is not possible. The followers of J.I. Rodale, the alleged "High Priest" of Organic Gardening are wrong when they insist that the food which we buy everyday can be grown by the Organic method. His slanted monthly magazine, "Organic Gardening and Farming" and his books, "Pay Dirt," and "The Basic Book of Organic Gardening" mentioned by Mr. Salk give readers a one-sided, biased view of food growing practices of the nation's farming industry. Mr. Rodale is an editor, not a farmer. But omitting important facts, and using very little scientific data in his publications, Mr. Rodale is able to convert many gullible followers to his organic method. Apparently these people know very little concerning food production and are easily led by the techniques which Mr. Rodale employs. Mr. Salk and Mr. Anerson are apparently two of his victims. To them I suggest reading any of the Yearbooks printed by the U.S.D.A. or any of the books in the Plant and Soils Science Libraries on Soils or Vegetables and food production.

Mr. Anderson, Chemical or inorganic fertilizers supply more than N, P, and K to the soil. There are approximately 15 elements which can be added safely to the soil with these types of fertilizers. And with the proper use of fertilizers, they can be applied in any amount needed by the plant. With use of all organic matter in food production many of the needed elements may be present in the organic matter but not in sufficient amount for good crop growth. For example, Phosphorus (P), the most lacking element in soils, if not supplied in the needed amount will prevent crops from maturing early and as a result they will be killed by frost before they are able to be harvested. Insufficient amounts of Potash will cause plants to become very acceptible to disease and to loose their vigor. Also the grass crops such as wheat and corn will have imcomplete kernel development due to insufficient amounts of this element.

Organic materials take a long time to break down in the soil to supply needed elements. They also have to be supplied in extremely large quantities. Many tons of Organic material are needed to produce just one additional ton of organic matter in the soil.

Mr. Anderson, you also mentioned treating sludge, leaves and paper into organic fertilizers. There are very few plants of this type in our country. There is one plant in Wisconsin that treats human sewage and converts it to fertilizer. One element, Nitrogen is gotten, the others are not produced. Leaves are not good for supplying nutrients. When vegetation (such as leaves) is allowed to dry out before it is turned under, the nutrients are transferred to less available forms.

I am not in favor of all chemical farming. Both organic matter and fertilizers are needed together. One cannot work without the other.

For those worried about "poisonous contaminants" in foods, the Food and Drug Administration keeps a close watch on all food produced in the United States.

In closing, I would like to say that what I have written is the result of much research and can be backed up by facts. If anyone has any more questions on this matter I would refer them to the Plant and Soil Science Dept. I'm sure that the Professors in the Dept. would be most helpful in answering questions which anyone has on this matter.

Heavy Stuff

To the Editor:

It's almost May, and here we are UMies, one and all sweating out finals, papers and graduation. Boy that's heavy stuff. Well don't worry about a thing. The Student Mobilization Committee has passed the word, its "STRIKE TIME".

Wow! That brings back fond memories of sleeping late, telling teachers where to get off, catching the rays and catching the "A's". For you freshmen, the Strike means, if successful, that you'll pass each course with nothing more horrible that a [illegible]". If you Strike real hard, like I did last spring, you'll get a [illegible] Score!

So you see you do have a stake in the Strike. For me this is my second Strike so I'll be looking forward to trying my hand at spray painting, I might even wait in line to put my feet up on old Oz's desk.

But anyway sports fans, the new season is upon us. Last spring's records were made to be broken. To the streets. Revolution until we are all honor graduates.

David Bar-Illan: Stunning Expression

By ED JANUSZ
MDC Staff

David Bar-Illan was the cause of a stunning flow of musical expression last night in the first of his two concerts here. The forms ranged from baroque to jazz, and Ben-Illan was a master of them all.

The Baroque pieces opened up the program. The two sonatas by Antonio Soler were originally written for harpsichord; the more sensitive medium of piano introduced a new dimension to the rigid Baroque styling.

The music of Paul Ben-Haim, which followed, is as yet rarely heard. Ben -Haim was a refugee from Nazi Germany; the four pieces we heard reflected the confused world of Germany between the wars: the stunned, lazy nihilism of the large bohemian movement contrasted alarmingly with the forces which became World War Two. Ben-Haim's composition used warm jazz interspersed with tense staccato, and was astounding.

Bar-Illan played three works by Liszt, as well. The "Dreaming" Nocturne was the only piece that was relaxing instead of challenging, and was all too short. The "Dante" sonata was one of the most moving Liszt interpretations I've ever heard; the effect was cyclonic, reminiscent of the bitterness of Dante's Hell, and studded with mad, rushing sounds that foreboded Hell's eternity.

For his two encores, Bar-Illan played part of Bernstein's "Age of Anxiety" and Liszt's triumphant "15th Hungarian Rhapsody." The Bernstein work, one of modern music's greatest achievements, was a stream-of-consciousness rendering of a childhood fantasy ("Rock-a-bye Baby") against a whirlwind avant-garde jazz tempo.

David Bar-Illan is giving another performance tonight. He is repeating the Liszt nocturne and "Dante," and is also performing Beethoven, Chopin, Rameau, and Mendelssohn, in an opportunity to hear great music by a breathtaking pianist.

The Campus Center Program Council did not, will not nor ever has any intention of sponsoring "Cisco" in the Blue Wall Cafeteria or elsewhere on campus. The Campus Center Food Services sponsored "Cisco" yesterday.

AN APPEAL FROM SENATOR VANCE HARTKE

STOP THE WAR NOW!

United States Senate
WASHINGTON, D.C.

Dear Friends:

The highest priority on our national agenda is ending American participation in the Indochina war. Senate Resolution 66, which I had the honor to introduce on March 4, 1971, calls for immediate—repeat, immediate—withdrawal of all our forces from Indochina and an end to all combat operations from whatever place launched.

But, that Resolution will be adopted—and, more importantly, the policy shift which it symbolizes will be effected—only with the massive support of the American people. Only the people can make it finally and unequivocally clear to their government that this slaughter of the innocent, this wastage of our treasure, this perversion of our ideals has gone on too long and must stop.

That is what the April 24th rallies in Washington and San Francisco can show beyond any possibility of doubt or question. The American people, peacefully and massively assembled, can at last prove that the Peace Movement is truly national—and that the nation is truly determined to end the war now.

I wholeheartedly urge every American to march on April 24th and I will do all I can to help it succeed.

Sincerely,

Vance Hartke

MARCH ON WASHINGTON APRIL 24
BRING ALL THE GI's HOME NOW!
END THE DRAFT NOW!

FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED

A massive and peaceful demonstration on April 24 may be critical to the well-being of the people of this country and the world. The terrible expansion of the war threatens us all. For the first time, trade unionists, students, women, Black and Brown people, city and suburban residents and G.I.'s can combine their strength and numbers in opposition to the war. The organization of such a massive outpouring requires equally massive financial resources. Advertisements, literature, radio and TV time, buttons, sound systems and the organization of thousands of marshals depend on the contributions of those who oppose the war. Please contribute what you can.

Music/Films

The Borodin Quartet will appear in a single concert next Wednesday evening April 14th in Bowker Auditorium. One of the Soviet Union's leading STRING QUARTETS, THEY WILL PERFORM TWO WORKS: the Piano Quintet in G Minor of Dimitri Shostakovitch (assisted by pianist Lyuba Edlina) and Beethoven's String Quartet in B-Flat Major, Opus 130 with the Grosse Fugue, Opus 133. Tickets are available at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, and at Bowker one hour before the performance.

Room To Move Sponsors Films With Kinesthetic Feeling

By BARRY SCHONHAUT
MDC Staff

To give the community a better idea of what sort of films are being shown tomorrow in the Cinemagic film showings the following descriptions are offered. Realize that these verbal linear descriptions of the films are not nearly sufficient to give you the kinesthetic feeling which these films are geared towards.

The Magic Machine-a film of the colorful, joyous junk sculpture of Robert Gilbert-"I like fantasy, it's realer than most of the reality."

Canabus-an animated film in which seeds, stems, papers, and grass do their thing.

Lapis-Lapis means philosophers stone. It derives its name from Zen disciplines in which Zen masters would meditate on the intricacies of beautiful stones. The modern day Lapis-a computer animated film-will take you away into its' many spinning infinitesimally small worlds.

Cibernetik 5.3-a computer film-five years in the making. A world more geometric than that of Lapis draws us into itself. This film has the feeling of some mysterious trancendental intelligence at work in the universe.

Circus-a three ring circus on film. We see the circus as a child. The multiple exposure technique captures the frenzy and joy of the experience.

Beatles Electronique-electromagnetic video distortions of the Beatles performances on the Ed Sullivan show a few years back. We see the Beatles as eerie electric pop stars of the 21st century.

Newsreel of Dreams-Vanderbeek piles layer upon layer of visual information and lets us synthesize our own meaning from the message.

Plum Pudding-a collection of animated films by children 8-15 yrs. old. Proof that kids really do know it all. These short films are alternately heavy, light, and totally tripped out.

Short Subject-this one is a surprise.

Moon 1969-A metaphysical voyage through time-space-void which will keep you high for a long time. Techniques include video feedback, color synthesizing, and far out optical printing effects.

The films will be shown Thursday April 8th at 1:00, 3:00, 7:30, and 9:30 in the campus Center Auditorium and are sponsored by Room to Move. There is no admission charge to see the films. But a small donation (25¢-50¢) would really be appreciated to help RTM defray the costs of film rental and publicity.

Familiar With Boss On Two Fronts

(EDITOR'S NOTE: With the appointment of Dick MacPherson to replace the retired Vic Fusia to the head coaching helm, UMass football has undergone a complete change in faces on its coaching staff. In order that university sports enthusiasts get better acquainted with the newmen who will assist coach MacPherson in the fall, the Collegian will carry a special series of sketches, written by staff reporter Mark Vogler, which will focus in on the background and interest information pertaining to each of the six assistants. Today is the fourth in the five part series.)

New football assistant Ken Conatser probably has no qualms with the Ohio way of life. Afterall, he did spend his boyhood there, went on to play collegiate football at Cincinnati, and proceeded to coach nine seasons in the Buckeye state.

But when offered an assistant post on the UMass football staff, he balked at a local job opportunity, gave up a new home, rounded up his family and headed east. Why all of a sudden the shift to a New England setting?

Well for one thing, the appointment of Dick MacPherson to the helm as successor to Vic Fusia was indeed significant. For Conatser had played out his senior year at Cinci with MacPherson as an assistant under Chuck Studley, a former Redman head Coach. Studley and MacPherson had come over together from UMass.

Then three years later Conatser worked directly under MacPherson as a grad assistant--this by the way, was Conatser's only college coaching experience prior to his new position. Conatser admired the coach greatly and expressed his wish to one day coach below him. That wish was fulfilled this winter with the renovation of the football staff.

Expressing resentment over a growing trend in college football where quite a few coaches figure to produce more successful teams by getting a firmer hold on and manipulating the education of the student athlete, Conatser feels the presence of Dick MacPherson will safeguard against such one-sided football technology at UMass.

"I think he can give to college football what is needed. He can take the factory out of college football. This was one of my main concerns when I came to College football. After visiting with Dick MacPherson, he answered the questions I wanted answered, how he'd run his program on a college setting at UMass so that the student athlete would be a very intricate part of the campus and not a separate entity. I also felt the situation in working with him would make me examine myself more as a person and help me grow in many ways.

"His concern for the University, the student body, student athlete, and the team is in relative value to the game of football. We will coach and approach the game as professionals, but not dictate a player's academic life. I would be no prouder than to have one of our football players as a leader in the classroom."

The addition of Conatser to the grid staff adds plenty of color to an already interesting and enthusiastic group of men. As a Western Hills High athlete he was an All-Cincity choice, alternating his time at guard and linebacker. He also played on the hoop squad and competed in track.

As far as being close to notable sports personalities, Conatser can boast better than anyone on the staff--that is when it comes to baseball. Yep. Pete Rose (Reds), Ed Brinkman (Senators), Russ Nixon (Red Sox), Art Mahafey (Phils), and Dick Drott (Cubs) all made their breakthroughs from the play grounds of Cincinnati into the big leagues. Conatser grew up with Rose, played football with'em, and later coached his brother.

A partial scholarship aided his way to a college education in his very own locality. Starting at linebacker as a sophomore he played on the team which saw Joe Morrison (NY Giants), Jackie Lee (Kansas City-Houston), and Dave Canary (former "Bonanza celebrity) as seniors. Oscar Robertson (NBA star) lived in the same dorm as his.

Conatser started for three years, but didn't have too exciting a career. He did, however, have one rare experience that even would rattle Dick Butkis, the bully of linebackers. He recalls a game against Northern Texas in which he made his "most memorable" tackle, by bringing down Abner Haynes (a two year MVP in the old AFL).

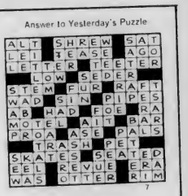
ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR



Aries can be abrupt. Individuals born under this zodiacal sign want to get to the point of any story in a hurry. It would not be wise to choose a long anecdote if trying to interest an Aries person. Make it short and sweet and you are most likely to succeed with members of this zodiacal family. ...

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Enlarge scope of current activities. Means realize that little things can add up to something of significance. Don't underestimate your own efforts. Stress versatility, imagination.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Good lunar aspect now coincides with love, creative endeavors, activity connected with children. Tendency is to speculate. Be sure you have facts, not mere rumors. Then you can succeed.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Accent on home, end on matter. You complete, decide, set mental policy. You finish concept relating to where you are going and where you will be. Family member is much involved.
CANCER (June 21-July 22): Relatives are restless. Best to entertain at home. Promote harmonious atmosphere. Appreciate assets. Pay compliment to loved one. You make significant gain through diplomatic approach.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Money looms large as considerstion: don't waste assets. See persons, situations in realistic light. A Pisces individual may be daydreaming. Realize this and plan accordingly you'll be happier.
VIRGO (Aug. 23 Sept. 22): Lunar cycle is favorable; means new contacts, projects should be encouraged. Your personality sparkles. Opposite sex is drawn to you. Stress independence, humor and originality.
LIBRA (Sept. 23 Oct. 22): Some activities are restricted. You may have feeling of confinement. Key is to keep long range view in focus. Hold off on new projects. Be considerate toward one who is handicapped.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 Nov. 21): Spark can be transformed into fire of romantic interest. You receive meaningful compliments. Social activity is emphasized. Accept invitations. Some hopes, wishes are fulfilled.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 Dec. 21): Don't stake reputation on word of one who constantly changes mind. Survey situation. Stick to standards. Compromise now would be error. Stress quality. Advancement is indicated.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 Jan. 19): Let others know that you do have plans, objectives. Spread influence through writing, advertising. Keep communication lines open. Be in touch with those at a distance.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 Feb. 18): Accent on money associated with mate or business partner. Some delay is to be expected. Plan accordingly. Be ready to make intelligent concession. Tax, insurance matters are reviewed.
PISCES (Feb. 19 march 20): Lie low. Do more listening than talking. Let competition make move. Permit mate or business partner set pace. Be a keen observer. Concetrate on public relatings. Be aware.
IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are more spiritual than many might imagine. You tend to give impression of being caretree. But, if truth be known, you are a searcher. You attempt to find your place in scheme of current events. By June, you will be on more solid ground in emotional and financial sense.

Spring Teams Look To Openers

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

While the attention of the UMass sports scene was focused on the Julius Erving-Virginia Squires story, there were many dedicated athletes who went unnoticed in their preparation for the coming spring season.

With this weekend marking the beginning of the spring schedule, the baseball, lacrosse, tennis, track, golf and crew teams have been putting in both practice and competitive hours to ready themselves for the tough road ahead.

This past winter was the most successful sports season ever at the university with the teams compiling a record in the neighborhood of 68 wins and around 20 losses with many individual and team titles and honors to go along with the impressive winning percentage.

The incentive is there for the spring athletes to shoot for this record and with the added toughness of the opponents for all the teams, to reach this mark will take some doing.

After successful trips for both the baseball and lacrosse teams, during vacation, both squads have been training at the mercy of the elements for their northern openers this weekend.

On Saturday, the diamond dusters travel to American International College in Springfield. Coach Dick Bergquist's team is deep and strong in pitching, strong in defense, but weak at the bat.

With the toughest schedule that any UMass baseball team has ever faced ahead of them, the Redmen will have to get their bats going to reach their goal of the College World Series in Omaha.

Dick Gaaber's Guerillas are small, but very quick and are good stickmen which should make them very exciting to watch this spring.

On Friday, the stickers host an International team from England in their opener. With the addition of many tough opponents to their schedule and the incentive of an NCAA bid going to the best team in New England, this should be an interesting and exciting lacross season.

Track takes a big boom this spring due to the new Olympic track that the Redman tracksters will be holding their home meets on. This is the first time in many years that the university community will be able to see in person the UMass stars who have covered the Collegian sports pages with their track heroics.

On Saturday, the tracksters open at home against Boston University and Northeastern who finished first and second in the indoor New Englands during the winter.

This should be one of the best track meets in the region this spring with many fine individuals performing.

The tennis team has alrady chalked up one victory to date over Boston College and hosts M.I.T. this afternoon. Coach Steve Kosakowski's netmen boast both depth and quality this season in their run at another in a long line of Yankee Conference tennis titles won by UMass.

Crew has been probably the most unglamourous sport on campus in the six years of its existence. Last year's crew was one of the best in the east and it appears from preseason practice that this year's team will be even better and could take the championship in its division in the easterns.

Not many teams in the east will be able to compete with this brauny and bright unit which has been training on the Connecticut River since the ice thawed a few weeks ago.

On Saturday the crewmen open their racing season on the road at Wesleyan.

And finally, the golf team opens its season next Friday josting Vermont. With just about the entire team coming back from last year's Yankee Conference champions this squad will be right up with the very best teams in New England.

These are the teams that will cover these pages during the spring. On Friday, the Collegian will have a special on the opening weekend of spring sports.

Conatser

But unfortunately for Conatser the whistle had already blown. His team was "hit" with a 15 yarder and Conatser himself, was decked unconscious by an enraged team mate of Haynes.

Conatser can look back at the incident now and chuckle, but he said it taught him a good lesson.

"When you try something like that, be quipped, you better expect to get hit. Since it affected the outcome of the game, I learned a good lesson from that. I didn't tackle Haynes with any malace, but it was a real irrational move. If you don't play fair you're gona get hurt in the long run."

One thing that Conatser was particularly proud of when graduating in '62 is that he qualified for the Dean's list four semesters. To him that means as much as football.

Starting out at Hamble Junior High the incumbative molded a 6-0 club in his first coaching chore. He then traveled to his former high school where he poleted the junior varsity to a 4-2-1 finish. Next was his year of graduate assistance under Studley and MacPherson.

Then came the head coaching assignments. At two different schools Conatser cured some pretty sickening losing streaks. In his first campaign at Harrison High he say a 47-game winless streak extended to a 57-game binge. But he capped his five years there with two successive championships–closing out his final season with a 9-1 log.

He once again returned to his former high school, this time as the skipper. A 39-game losing string awaited him and he relinquished it with a somewhat healthier 3-7 season. Now he sets himself afresh to his new chore at UMass.

Conatser's stress on education and his charm in transforming losers into winners undoubtly have great appeal to Coach MacPherson.

He epitomized what the college football player should be– a dedicated athlete, a dedicated student. He epitomezed what a high school football coach should be, a dedicated teacher, coach, and leader and character molder of young men. He is an excellent coach, technique and technical wise, an excellent recruiter, and will help make us a winner because he is a winner ," says MacPherson of his offensive line coach.

Netmen Host MIT

By SINCLAIR FOSTER
MDC Staff

If the snows don't come then the engineers will. That's the Engineers of M.I.T. who will face the UMass tennis squad in a 3 p.m. match here this afternoon.

The UMass netmen will face an M.I.T. team that routed them 8-1 last season. But M.I.T. lost four of their top five men from last year's squad, and only senior captain Steve Cross remains.

Several promising sophomores will be filling out the visitors lineup. They include Mike Schonberg, Lance Kellinger, Buff Blair, and Carol Wyman. One man who willbe exceptional trouble for the Redmen is Bill Young. Young is a freshmen from Austin, Texas who in all likelihood will be playing number one singles.

MIT will be facing UMass after their two week southern trip, where they played the likes of North Carolina, Davidson North Carolina State and Georgetown.

In facing what might well be their toughest match of the year, UMass will be going with the same six men that downed BC, 8-1l, on Sunday. Captain Alan Goldberg will be in the number one slot once again, followed by Jim Bornheim, John Bloom, Mark Brass, Steve Ferber and Bob Webman. Doubles play will find Goldberg and Ferber in the number one position, with Bloom and Coffin, and Brass and Bornheim, playing second and third respectively.

On Monday afternoon UMass sent down their second squad to face the Coast Guard Academy in New London, Conn. The unscheduled match saw a contingent of four freshmen and two sophomore Redmen defeat the varsity Coast Guard squad 5-3.

Bob Webman and Steve Ferber, the two starters on the varsity that made the trip, played first and second respectively. Webman was extended to three sets taking the match 6-4, 2-6, 6-1, while Ferber had little trouble winning 6-1, 6-1.

Freshmen Fred Braley and Mark Lundberg emerged victorious at third and fourth singles respectively as UMass took a 4-0 lead over the Coast Guard.

Sophomore Dave Bellware and freshmen Lou Kessing were not quite so fortunate and as the cold wind whipped off of the Connecticut River the home club narrowed the lead to 4-3.

But the double combination of Webman and Braley took the first doubles match in 6-4, 6-3 form to wrap up the contest.

While the freshmen-sophomore Redmen team was down in New London, the netmen's four top men were back at Amherst practicing up for this afternoon's match.

Weather permitting, the six singles matches against MIT will get underway at 3 p.m. The importance of this match is paramount as far as the Redmen are concerned. Said Coach Kosakowski, "If we win today we'll be in good shape to have a great season." I don't think that last year's 8-1 loss was a good indication of that team's ability and due to the graduation of most of their players I'd say that we have a good shot at taking them."

While Kosakowski is still juggling his singles and doubles lineups, his only regret is the practice time that his players have had. "I wish that we had had more time to practice our singles play, but nevertheless we should be more than adequately prepared," commented Kosakowski.

With a great many sophomores and freshmen on both teams the match's outcome becomes virtually unpredictable. How these new men perform should spell the difference in what looks to be an extremely tight contest.

Assures War's End

Nixon Ups Withdrawal Rate

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon, putting his second-term hopes generally on the line, announced Wednesday night an only slight increase in monthly troop withdrawals from South Vietnam for a seven-month period.

At the same time, Nixon said in an address prepared for a nationwide televiston-radio audience:

"I can assure you tonight with confidence that Ameican involvement in this war is coming to an end."

The chief executive said it is his intention to withdraw between May 1 and Dec. 1 an additional 100,000 American troops from South Vietnam-a monthly average of barely over 14,000 as compared with the average of 12,500 in effect for the past year.

This would reduce the troop level to about 184,000.

Perhaps the most remarkable aspect of Nixon's speech was the fact that, it seemed clear, he was not bowing to pressures from many sides to come up with something dramatic that would promise an early end to American involvement in the Vietnam war.

Instead, he said: "In my campaign for the presidency, I pledged to end American involvement in this war. I am keeping that pledge. You should hold me accountable if I fail."

He claimed a success for his disputed decision to invade enemy bases in Cambodia, and said the equally controversial Laotian incursion was "even more damaging to the capability of the North Vietnamese to sustain major offensives in South Vietnam."

Then he went on to make an indirect reference to the court-martial conviction of Army Lt. William Calley, Jr. on charges of mass murder at My Lai. Saying he spoke as commander in chief, Nixon said:

"I feel it is my duty to speak up for the two and a half million fine young Americans who have served in Vietnam. The atrocity charges in individual cases should not and cannot be allowed to reflect on their courage and their self-sacrifice. War is a terrible and cruel experience for a nation and particularly for those who bear the burden of fighting."

Nixon never mentioned the Calley case but spoke simply of "concerns which have been raised in this country, fanned by reports of brutalities in Vietnam."

On another subject much in the public eye, Nixon called again on Hanoi for immediate and unconditional release of all prisoners of war in Indochina.

Questions have been raised about the performance of the South Vietnamese army in Laos-sustained only by American air support and supplies. Nixon cited Laos, along with Cambodia, as "two decisions I have made which have contributed to the achievement of our goals in Vietnam."

He went on to argue that both were successful operations and, "consequently tonight-I can report that Vietnamization has succeeded."

This was when he said that "because of the success of the Cambodian operation, and because of the achievements of the South Vietnamese operation in Laos, I am announcing an increase in the rate of American withdrawals."

While the increase of roughly 1,500 men a month fell well short of much advance speculation, Nixon said:

"This will bring the total number of American troops withdrawn from South Vietnam to 365,000 -over two-thirds of the number who were there when I came into office.

After announcing the modest acceleration in troop withdrawals, the President said, "The government of South Vietnam fully supports our decision."

As he had done several times in the past, Nixon asked:

"Shall we leave Vietnam in a way that-by our own actions-consciously turns the country over to Communists? Or shall we leave in a way that gives the South Vietnamese a reasonable chance to survive as a free people? My plan will end American involvement in a way that would provide that chance."

At the same time, the President dealt with a mounting congressional chorus of suggestions and demands that a fixed date be set for total withdrawal of American forces.

Declaring this to be "a proposal which at first glance has a great deal of appeal to the American people," Nixon went on:

"The difficulty in making such an announcement to the American people is that I would also be making that announcement to the enemy. And it would serve the enemy's purpose and not our own."

After going on to say that he will get America out in a manner that will give South Vietnam a reasonable chance to exercise free choice as a people, he said of the alternative proposed by some of his critics, "The other would end it precipitately and give victory to the Communists."

Nixon said the United States faces "the choice of ending our involvement in this war on a note of despair or on a note of hope." He quoted Thomas Jefferson as saying that Americans always will choose hope over despair.

In staking his presidency on the end of American involvement in the war, Nixon said:

"But can you believe this? I understand why this question is raised by many honest, sincere people. Many times in the past in this long and difficult war, actions have been announced from Washington which were supposed to lead to a reduction of American involvement in Vietnam. Over and over these actions resulted in increasing American forces in Vietnam and higher American casualties.

"Tonight I do not ask you to take what I say on faith. Look at the record: Every action taken by this administration, every decision made has accomplished what I said it would accomplish. They have reduced American involvement. They have drastically reduced our casualties."

Nixon, almost at the outset of his address, said that when he left Washington in January 1961 after serving eight years as vice president, there were no American combat forces in Vietnam and therefore no American combat deaths. He added:

"When I returned as President eight years later, there were 540,000 American troops in Vietnam. Thirty-one thousand had died there. Three hundred Americans were being lost every week. There was no comprehensive plan to end the United States involvement in the war."

Dolf Droge points to Southeast Asia's map while explaining the history of Vietnam for the past 900 years. Droge attempted to answer all questions put to him.

Dolf Droge Speaks On Nixon At Amherst

By ANN GURNETT
MDC Staff

"I think that the most important perspective of the Vietnam war, and one that has been consistently overlooked, is the fact that it is not an American war but is an intrinsically Vietnamese struggle," said Vietnam expert Dolf Droge last night to a tumultuous crowd of students in Amherst College's Johnson Chapel.

Droge, an aide to Henry Kissinger, said "It is easiest to come to a point about the war when looking at the Vietnamese side of it."

The talk, originally to have been broadcast nationwide on WGBH, was moved from Converse Hall to Johnson Chapel without explanation shortly before the program began. Students consistently interrupted the speaker as tempers flared and discussion became heated.

Using a map of Vietnam, Droge detailed the history of Vietnam from the year 900 through to the present, both geographically and politically. He stated that the divisions which exist now between North, South and Central Vietnam have been in the makings for hundreds of years.

"North Vietnam's foundations lie chronologically around 900 AD," he said. "This is when the Vietnamese became a separate entity from the Chinese. However, they remained basically communist in attitude, as did their Chinese ancestors.

The formation of Central Vietnam was completed around 1600," he continued. "Most of your recent leaders in Southeast Asia have come from the Central area: Ho Chi Minh, for example."

"The South Vietnamese, or the 'Cailornia people' of Vietnam, began to form around 1700," he said. "Their territory has a better climate from an economic point of view; hence, they were envied by the other sectors."

"The people of one sector rarely get along with those of another," said Droge. This, plus the chronological heritage of the country as a whole, has resulted in an ideological division of Vietnam which has become a geographical actuality."

"The only time that the country has been a united nation was a period of about 80 years beginning in 1802. However, the French took over the country not long thereafter," he said. "The French thus upset the natural order of Vietnamese life, and their reign can be thought of as the beginning of modern problems in Southeast Asia."

"With the coming of the French, regional districts were reformed," he continued. "This was the beginning of the political concept of village self governance, where the villages had no control over the central government but were instead divided into several counties. With this heritage," he said, "the village has become a legal entity."

Droge said he saw South Vietnam's part in the war as "A consummation of their revolt against communism." He detailed the North Vietnamese infiltration of South Vietnam and the increasing U.S. involvement. He said that U.S. involvement came about "As an attempt to prevent South Vietnam from being overrun by Communists."

A question and answer period followed the lecture which became a heated debate session. Topics such as My Lai, Nixon's war policies, and the importance of national priorities were raised. Droge attempted to answer all questions put to him.

The meeting slowed down after Nixon's address, which was piped in, concluded. The address raised much debate and in general garnered unfavorable response. Droge answered questions pertinnet to the Nixon address and heard comments pertaining to his talk until the meeting concluded.

Krippner Discusses Psychedelics And Art

By STEVE FELD
MDC Staff

The artistic side of the psychedelic experience was explored last night as Dr. Stanley Krippner, Director of the Dream Clinic of the Maimonides Medical Center, spoke to an audience of some 150 freaks in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The first part of the evening dealt with various modern day painters who employ the psychedelic experience in their works. Needless to say, the results were visually stimulating and thought-provoking.

There are four levels of consciencness one can experience while on mind-altering drugs, according to Krippner. 1.) The sensory level where one discovers the visual excitement associated with LSD and mescaline. 2.) The recollective-analytic level where one remembers the past and it's repressed thoughts. 3.) The symbolic level where one envisions symbols and their place in his life. 4.) The spiritual or mystical level where one contemplates a god, either within himself or watching over him.

Krippner showed art which displayed the four levels. Included were both good and bad trips. All were creative and exciting.

The second part of his lecture dealt with rock music. "At no point in history has there been any such styles, instrumentation and lyrics than in the music of today. Rock music reflects political, military, international and interpersonal ideas, as well as drugs."

"There are two psysical properties of sound that distort the mind-texture and volume." To show this, Jimi Hendrix's "Purple Haze" was played. Also given as an example of this was a song by Blue Cheer, a group that uses 15 amplifiers, often playing above the pain threshold in hearing.

He spoke lowly of the FCC's newly passed rule which prohibits the playing of drug-orientated lyrics over the air. He told of the irony in the fact that stations can still play alcohol-orientated lyrics.

Included in his talk of drug songs were "Norweigian Wood", by the Beatles, which is supposedly slang for marijuana, and "Mother's Little Helper" by the Rolling Stones, "which shows the black side of man's nature. It tells of adults using drugs while putting down the kids". "Lucy in the Sky with Diamonds", by the Beatles combines mood, lyrics and texture to express a psychedelic experience. It tells of the way one sees people, images and himself."

Krippner did warn, however, as did George Peters, drug expert who spoke at UMass over a month ago, that there are many hazards in taking hallucinagians. "One must know himself and be sophisticated when dealing with drugs."

"Psychedelic drugs are potentially dangerous, but cannot be prohibited without suppression of a creative and a vital force."

Senate Examines Budget, All-University Senate

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

The Student Senate made little progress in its consideration of the Budget Act last evening as it read through only three of the 26 budgets in the Act. Discussion of budgets was then tabled to allow for examination of the proposed University Senate, with members of the commission which drew up the proposal present.

Other business included an announcement of plans for a demonstration in Providence to tell President Nixon that "he's had it", details of a referendum on campus anti-war support, and the formal announcement of candidates running for Senate offices.

A $100 reduction was the only change made in the budget of Afro-Am. This amendment eliminated the purchase of an adding machine for the organization. Attempts were made to cut funds for purchase of art objects and for honoraria, but were defeated. Major categories in the budget as accepted by the Senate are for honoraria to bring in speakers and for social functions such as dances, a Black Arts Festival, and conferences.

The two other budgets considered were both struck. One was for a recently formed Mill River Project which was planning to conduct a three-month study on pollution of the river by the Amherst sewage treatment plant. The group wanted $4490 of student funds for next year, most of it for payment of four full-time people in the study.

Senators voted to strike the entire budget, basing their vote on the arguments that student funds should not be used to study a pollution problem created largely by the University when the state would not be paying anything; and that the project's activities seemed to be a duplication of another student-funded group--the Coalition for Environmental Equality. The Senate voted 15-36-5 not to include the Budget.

Also struck was the $2680 budget of the Learning Resources Center, a group intending to collect and disseminate educational resources from around the country about living and learning experiments. The group described itself as centering around self-directed learning and wanted to print a catalog of all the information it gathered.

The Senate still must read through the rest of the Budget Act a first time and then again. By a majority vote, it can make amendments in any budget either time through. To try to complete the process by April 15, the Senate approved of calling a special meeting for next Tuesday evening. The April 15 deadline is the date set by the Administration on which it wants to see the Budget Act if there is going to be any substantial increase in the student activity fee for next year. At this time, there is a strong possibility the tax will increase from this year's $36.50 by around $5.

Early in the meeting, plans were announced for an upcoming series of activities which according to its planners will "tell President Nixon he's on his way out in '72." The activities being planned in Providence, R.I. on Sunday, April 18, were explained by a spokesman from sponsor of the event Citizens for Alternatives Now.

The group is basically trying to tell the President that people across the country "are getting things together to bring an end to the war in Southeast Asia and to tell him that "he's had it", according to the spokesman. Plans call for a number of open meetings early in the afternoon on national topics such as the war, welfare, and taxes, and then a demonstration at the state house in Providence to show that "although divided on many issues, the people of the country are all opposed to the war and want an American withdrawal by December 31.

UMass students will also have an opportunity to express their opinions on the anti-war movement next Thursday, April 15. A student referendum on four questions concerning the movement will be run that day by the Senate. Details were announced last night by the Senate's Student Government Affairs Committee, which is in charge of the vote.

After voting March 31 to endorse the People's Peace Treaty and the Spring 1971 calendar of nonviolent antiwar events, the Senate also voted to set up this referendum to test campus-wide opinion. The following questions will appear on the referendum: Do you support the People's Peace Treaty? Do you support the immediate and total withdrawal of the U.S. troops from Southeast Asia? Do you endorse the non-violent march planned in Washington for April 24, for which a permit has been issued? Do you endorse the nonviolent civil disobedience planned in Washington for the first week in May?

Seven Senators announced their candidacies for Senate offices last night, with contests developing in only two of the four positions. Now officially in the running for the Presidency are Lee Sandwen--Pierpont and Leo Clark--commuter. In the other contest, the following three Senators are candidates for the position of Executive Assistant for University Relations: Bruce Bernstein--MacKammie, Larry Ladd--Dwight, and William Abbott--commuter. John Hogan is unopposed for the Vice-Presidency and Richard Verrochi--Greenough for Treasurer. Verrochi is the only incumbent. Elections will be held at the April 21 meeting of the Senate.

The Senate had just begun to discuss the University Senate proposal at the time of this writing. The early discussion was centered around Student Senators' qualms that the suggested set-up may weaken the student voice in Senate actions to a "secondary, nearly powerless position." Discussion was expected to continue for at least an hour.

Van Der Beek Shows Experimental Films

UMass proved that it's not ready for Van Der Beek experimental filming as the fuses blew out in the Campus Center Auditorium while he was demonstrating his techniques.

Jointly sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP) and the Senior Class, MIT Professor Stan Van Der Beek spoke on the topic "Media Rap-Around" and showed his movies last night to an audience of 200.

"In a society in which there are more TV sets than bath tubs and more radios than people, the computer is playing a growing role," said Van Der Beek.

A movie consisting entirely of images made by computers was shown. This movie also was unique in that three films were shown simultaneously on different screens in the front of the auditorium.

This film was made from punch cards fed into the computer. Van Der Beek noted that the computer can complete over 100,000 decisions per second.

He then showed a movie filmed by CBS concerning the daily life of Van Der Beek in his studio. Included was an experimental film of the human body, in which he put various images in the outline shapes of the body.

Van Der Beek explained a process of Simocasting which he successfully employed at station WGBH in Boston. This process allows him to send out two different sets of waves from the same station.

He said that he used simocasting to transmit a documentary of images on the subject "violence." Van Der Beek also showed this film to the audience.

Soviets Airlift Arms To Egypt

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

An airlift of Soviet men and arms to Egypt is under way with a buildup of missile power suspected, according to Western diplomatic reports reaching London.

Word of the airlift came Wednesday from diplomats whose governments are represented in Cairo. Increased air shipments, they said, were first detected about 7 to 10 days ago. Informants gave these details:

—Soviet military manpower in Egypt has increased lately by 2,000 men. The authoritative British Institute for Strategic Studies has said about 16,000 were there last year.

—The number of surface-to-air missiles, SAM3 sites and an unspecified number of SAM2 sites. Now, a vast, new antiaircraft defense complex has been detected along the Nile Valley from Cairo to the Aswan Dam and along the Mediterranean seaboard as far west as Libya.

—The number of surface-to-air missiles, SAM2s and SAM3s, also have been increased. By how much is not certain. Last month the institute estimated Soviet forces were manning up to 80 SAM sites and an unspecified number of SAM2 sites. Now, a vast, new antiaircraft defense complex has been detected along the Nile Valley from Cairo to the Aswan Dam and along the Mediterranean seaboard as far west as Libya.

—Soviet jet fighter deliveries have been increased along with amphibious trucks and other equipment. The institute estimates Soviet pilots were manning up to 150 MIG21J jets in six controlled airfields last December.

President Anwar Sadat of Egypt has said April will be a decisive month for the Middle East. He warns fighting could be resumed if Israel refused to respond favorably to Egypt's peace proposals. The Middle East cease-fire that went into effect last August was terminated by Egypt last month.

A former U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, Arthur J. Goldberg, stopping off in London on his way home from a private visit to Israel, contended the United Nations never really considered a total Israeli withdrawal to borders that existed before the 1967 Middle East war.

Goldberg told a news conference the key Nov. 22, 1967, U.N. resolution — which he said he helped draft — makes it clear the United Nations rejected the idea of restoring the prewar status quo.

Goldberg's comments followed a rejection by Israel's ruling Labor party of proposals that the Israelis withdraw from occupied territory in Egypt, Syria and Jordan.

On the diplomatic front, a British Foreign Office spokesman reported a new formal British-Soviet dialogue on the Middle East.

This began last Friday in London, presumably at British initiative.

The unannounced one-day session brought together the two top Middle East experts from British and Soviet foreign ministries.

The foreign office sought to stress that the meeting was a routine affair even while making plain it was the first of its kind. It seemed clear the British, like the French, are unenthusiastic about leaving all the peacemaking moves to the Americans and Russians only.

In Jordan, Palestinian guerillas were leaving Amman Wednesday and engaging in indirect negotiations with the Jordanian government. Both sides indicated the present crisis was diminishing.

Aside from the sporadic firing of weapons that characterizes daily life in the desert kingdom, there were no government reports of any fighting.

A member of the guerrilla Central Committee, Abu Mutassim, confirmed the guerrillas were leaving the capital for bases in the north.

"We are doing our best to abide by the Cairo and Amman cease-fire accords of last September, even though certain persons in the government are making it difficult with provocative statements about their capacity to wipe us out in a few hours."

He said the withdrawal from Amman should be completed by Thursday night.

In Cairo, however, Arab leaders were still divided on whether to meet in person or delegate their representatives to deal with the issue of ending fighting in Jordan.

Antiwar Congressmen Ask Court To Declare Vietnam War Illegal

WASHINGTON (AP)—Three antiwar congressmen Wednesday asked the U.S. District Court here to declare the Vietnamese war illegal and to order it stopped in 60 days unless Congress approves it.

Since the Constitution gives Congress the right to declare war, they said, the Nixon administration and the Johnson administration before it violated their right as congressmen to decide whether the nation should fight.

It is the first time members of Congress have sought such a court test. The Supreme Court has consistently refused to hear other suits against the war.

Last year it refused a direct test of a Massachusetts law against sending state residents to fight undeclared wars. That case now is working its way up through lower courts.

"This is something we hope will not be just another futile gesture," said Rep. Michael Harrington, D—Mass. The suit was filed by Harrington and Reps. Warren J. Mitchell, D—Md., and Benjamin S. Rosenthal, D—N.Y.

Lawrence R. Velvel, one of five young attorneys who drew up the suit, said recent legal trends make it likely the courts will consider the suit.

The questions of whether congressmen are being denied a right to decide on the war is not political but legal, he said. Courts refuse to hear cases they consider political.

Velvel said a ruling could be expected under normal circumstances in three or four months, but he said attempts would be made to speed up the process.

Nixon Rapped, Praised On Calley

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., accused President Nixon Wednesday of playing politics with the case of Lt. William L. Calley Jr. He said Nixon should henceforth "keep his mouth shut" about the My Lai murder conviction.

Sen. Robert Taft Jr., R-Ohio, defended Nixon's intervention in the case as an act of courage, one necessary for the sake of military morale.

The White House, meanwhile, said there probably will be some response to the letter in which Capt. Aubrey M. Daniel III, who prosecuted the Calley case, criticized Nixon's actions.

The President ordered Calley's release from the stockade at Ft. Benning, Ga., in favor of a military version of house arrest. Later Nixon announced he will personally review the final military judgment of Calley.

Meany Accuses Administration Of Faulty Economic Policies

WASHINGTON (AP)-AFL-CIO President George Meany accused the administration Wednesday of pursuing what he called misguided economic games plans and trying to make labor "the scapegoat for the economic mess."

"Chairman Arthur Burns of the Federal Reserve and much of the administration leadership have been engaged in the shocking and blatant use of a double standard," Meany said.

"To cover their record of failure in economic policy, with its tragic consequences for millions of American families, they try to pin the blame on workers while providing subsidies and aid for the banks and big business," Meany said.

Testifying before a Senate banking subcommittee, the labor chieftain said wage curbs recently decreed for construction workers are unfair and unworkable.

Any restraint, he said, should be applied across the board on all segments of the economy.

Meany was appearing to endorse proposals to extend legislation providing the President with standby authority to stabilize prices, rents, wages and salaries and invoke selective credit controls.

But he used the occasion to mount a sharp and frequently sarcastic attack on Burns and the White House.

Defending the administration, Sen. John Tower, R—Tex., said the President had been conciliatory toward organized labor and "I don't think he merits this kind of thing."

Meany told the subcommittee, chaired by Sen. William Proxmire, D—Wis., that despite a "game plan" devised by Burns to curb inflation and restore economic health, everything has been going up, up, up."

"He really accomplished something," said Meany. "Almost a miracle."

"This business of making the construction worker a whipping boy is absolutely and completely unfair," said Meany.

President Nixon, in an executive order late last month, created a 12-man commission to review wage settlements in the construction industry.

Students gather in the television room of the Student Union to view President Nixon's speech on Vietnam. Reactions were mixed, but most felt that Nixon was overly emotional and "acting".

Nixon Called Emotional By Viewers Of Speech

Immediately after President Nixon's nationwide Speech on the Viet Nam war, a poll was taken in the Student Union to determine viewers reactions concerning the thirty minute talk. Students, nonstudents and Administrators attending an annual convention at the Campus Center were polled for their opinions.

The comment most prevalent concerned Nixon's acting rather than what he said. Most all of those interviewed said that he appeared to be overly acted, more emotional than anything else, and one person felt that he could use a few more tips on method acting so that he could come across more humanly to people.

A Graduate Student when asked for his opinion said that the President appeared as a father figure talking down to the nation telling them how they should think. He resented the President putting himself on a pedestal. Many of those watching the televised speech felt that the President's reference to the deceased Marine and and his family was in bad taste.

Concerning its content, there were a number of comments from those in attendance watching the 9:00 speech. Many stated that Nixon said just what they had expected him to say. The next most prevalent comment from those interviewed was that they were hoping that the President would have more to say than he did. When a School Administrator from Salem was asked his opinion he replied that he felt confused as to what else is going to be done and that he was a little perplexed about the speech.

He also added that he hopes Nixon is right and that he could understand the Chief Executive's position for not wanting to state a definite date for total troop withdrawal from Viet Nam.

Still others went on to say that Nixon didn't say much at all and that what he said was all generalities and not enough fact. One UMass coed stated that some of the statements made by the President weren't really true. She cited the part of the Speech when the President said that he followed the wishes of the people in withdrawing American troops from Laos when in fact he did it because of the typhoon season which he failed to mention. She went on to say that she felt that it was a shame that the Speech wasn't up for debate immediately following it's delivery.

The most unusual comment was from a UMass student who said that he fell asleep during the first part of the speech.

Living Preferences Subject Of Survey

By ANNE STADNICKI
MDC Staff

To determine student preferences in residential living, the Student Affairs Department will conduct a survey via computer cards tonight in dining commons throughout the University.

The survey will operate to the students' advantage because it will attempt to gather information about the life styles that students want in their dormitories, according to Dick Palumbo, spokesman for the Student Affairs. He said tonight's endeavor is the first time the department has tried to ascertain the students' interests.

Stressing the fact that students should take the questionnaire seriously, Palumbo listed several of the alternatives students will be offered in the survey. They were: co-ed dorms with various arrangements of separate male/female floors or rooms, non co-ed dorms with 24 hour visitations policies, non co-ed dorms with set visiting hours and current plans to move or remain in present dormitories for next year.

Palumbo said the survey would serve to indicate student response and aid the Administration in approval of dormitory proposals for different life styles, for example "going co-ed".

"We have to get an idea of how many students want a certain life style (co-ed), and how many are willing to move to get it, before we can approve the proposals for any of the various life styles (co-ed, "quiet" etc.) will be considered in the light of the number of students interested and the present accomodations that satisfy their desires.

Four dormitories propose to go co-ed next year and await approval, Palumbo noted. The houses are Johnson, Hamlin, Baker and Brett, he said. Thirteen dorms are presently offering co-ed living. They are Lewis, Brooks, Butterfield, Greenough, Gorman, Wheeler, Dickinson, Webster, Prince, Cance, Washington Lower, Moore and Pierpont.

Although not all students who live in dormitories eat in the dining commons, Palumbo said the Student Affairs staff felt this was the fastest place to reach residents. Time is of the essence because approval of proposals should come before spring room choosing to avoid confusion next fall, he said.

This sampling is expected to reach anywhere from 500 to 1000 people, Palumbo said. He added that it was hoped to make cards available to other dorm dwellers in the Student Union, probably Friday to get their opinions also.

Dr. Bromery's office received the power to make decisions concerning dormitories and life styles at last month's Board of Trustees meeting. Palumbo said that serious student participation in the survey would be one more step towards greater student say in the affairs that govern their lives.

State Legislators Attend Panel

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU
MDC Staff

Sen. George V. Kenneally, Jr. of Dorchester, chairman of the state legislative transportation committee; and Sen. David H. Locke of Wellesley, senate minority floor leader were guest speakers at the first panel in Practical Politics moderated by former President of The Mass. Senate, and sponsored by the Government Department.

The program began late, and two of the speakers scheduled, Rep. Robert A. Belmonte of Framingham, minority whip; and Rep. Paul Murphy of Dorchester, house majority whip, did not attend. Donahue explained the change as "a busy legislature" due to the abortion bill.

An unscheduled speaker, Neil Jerru, a State House Correspondent, and a syndicated columnist and law school student, took the floor and elaborated on "press relations with legislators."

"Legislators try to magnify what they do". Jerru stated. Senators and Representatives build up a facade for the press, he claimed. If the public knew what it takes to get legislation through, it would be appalled."

Donahue responded that "Under the rules there is no possibility of anyone sneeking anything through." He added his: "high regard for the working press. Massachusetts is fortunate to have its full-time reporters."

Shortly afterwards Sen. Kenneally began; "the leadership of the State Senate often involves personality, and ideas of individuals. The tone is set by the presiding officer. Under Maurice Donahue, we were given a job and expected to get it done."

"We have a governemt of personalities as well as a government of laws. This does not mean that we do not represent or listen to the constituency. We give our industry and best judgement."

He then elaborated on the Master Tax Bill, calling it an "essentially good bill", and "progressive". He concluded that: "Governor-shown leadership has not been able to control the Senate."

Sen. Locke opened by commenting on the abortions bill. "It will liberalize conduct among young people." Concerning the 10-30 Democratic majority in the State Senate, the Republican legislator said: "3-1, it evens up the sides. Four of the ten Republicans have leadership positions," he continued. "The role of the minority party is that of the opponent, to put a spotlight on activity." This results in having "the merits of the argument weighed."

When asked if the Republican Party has a future in Massachusetts, Locke answered: "Clearly, yes. The Republican Party will return to power when it takes a position on the issues of concern. The question is: What is the Republican Party for?" He went on to describe the Democratic Party as the "Santa Claus Party", predicting that "The bubble will break." Sen. Kenneally then commented that "the Republican Administration is ignorant of the plight of the working class. The Republican Party is not forwardthinking."

To the question of why there has not been a Democratic Governor in Mass. in several years, Donahue offered "The Democrats did not nominate the right party," while Kenneally suggested a stronger convention.

Locke was then asked about his rational on tuition. Locke admitted to having filed legislation which would raise tuition from $200 to $600, and then elaborated on his proposed loan funds, tuition-in-relation to family-income, inflation, State taxes, and the lack of adequate vocational education.

Sen. Kenneally also viewed the tuition matter stating that "Esentially, $200 is not keeping kids from coming." He proposed feasible scholarships to this school.

The Graduate Income Tax was next discussed. Kenneally said that he voted in favor, describing it was "only fair". "In order to solve the tax problem," he continued "we have to get money from those in higher-income status."

Civil Service Reforms, and the change in veteran Preferences was also brought up. Both Sen. stated that applicants will still have to pass a test. Sen. Kenneally elaborated that "Disabled veterans have preference only in getting an initial position." Promotions are not subject to this policy.

Lastly, the Shea Bill was mentioned. Can the Mass Senate legislate on national issue? The Shea Bill prohibited any Mass citizen from fighting in an undeclared war. Kenneally said: "You should find out where the fellow you elect stands. That's why we have a forum. We owe a duty to the public to take a stand on public issues." However, Sen. Locke felt differently. "The Shea Bill was a political maneuvre on Beacon Hill. There is nothing the Mass. legislators can do to end the War in Viet Nam, only the President. Three Administrations ratified and approved it. The Senate have enough to do without involving itelf in political maneuvres.

Other panels will be on Wednesdays of this month, in the Campus Center, at 7:30. Topics for discussion will be: "Administration," April 14; "The Role of Pressure Groups," April 28. Panelists will include officials of various state departments, such as Dr. Milton Greenblatt, commissioner of mental health; and of public segment, such as William L. Putnam, president of television station WWLP in Springfield, and Dean C. Cushing, executive vice president of Massachusetts Merchants, Inc.

Orchard Hill Area Students Meet To Formulate Petition

By ETHEL HARRIS
MDC Staff

Approximately sixty students attended an open area meeting in Dickinson Lounge last night to discuss the future of the Orchard Hill Residential College and to formulate a petition to be sent to the Administration of the university within the next week. Dr. Leon Baron, Master of Orchard Hill, is scheduled to meet with Chancellor Tippo and Vice Chancellors Bromery, Campion, and Gluckstern next Wednesday to discuss the question of funding for the Orchard next year in particular and the entire question of residential colleges in general.

Seven demands, which were formulated at an open area meeting Tuesday night, were discussed in individual dorm meetings preceding the area meetings.

Specific issues in question include the possibility of a multi-purpose cafeteria; autonomy in housing and admissions; and autonomy in the selection and compensation of faculty.

Complete details on the meeting will appear in Friday's MDC.

Mobe Charters Busses To Washington Protest

The UMass Student Mobilization Committee is chartering busses to bring students to a major demonstration in Washington D.C. on April 24 which will call for immediate withdrawal of all U.S. troops from Southeast Asia.

A seat in the bus costs $15 for the round trip. Checks should be made out to SMC, and mailed to; UMass SMC, Box 388, Campus Center, UMass, Amherst. Busses will leave midnight Friday, April 23, for Washington.

Those taking the bus are asked to assemble in front of the Student Union at 11:30 p.m. and to bring their own food and drink.

The return trip will be leaving Washington at 7:00 on Saturday evening.

A statement issued by the Connecticut Valley Anti-War Coalition Co-ordinators about the demonstration said;

"Almost as long as the United States' government has been fighting in Vietnam, some Americans have been fighting against the fighting. Now more and more Americans--78%, of Americans--are opposed to the War, and now are getting ready to act on their opposition," it said.

"This April 24 there will be a major demonstration in Washington, D.C., calling for an immediate withdrawal of all U.S. troops from Southeast Asia. It will be the most major demonstration ever against the war," they predicted.

"Support for this demonstration is coming from all parts of American society, from many people and groups who have been quietly opposed to the spending of millions and millions of hard-earned dollars for the purpose of brutally killing Southeast Asian people, but now are ready to go to Washington, to stand up and move on their opposition and demand of the President that he listen to the American people," they claimed.

"On April 24 we will prove that the anti-war movement is made up not only of students, but of students and working people and Black and Third World people, of G.I.'s and veterans, and women, children, and men, it said.

"On April 24 we will bring more people to the city of Washington than have ever been there together on one day before: each of us will make it clear that we will not return home and sit quietly while our so-called representative government continues to make ashes of another country, continues to escalate a war we refuse to tolerate any longer, they concluded.

Moratorium Meeting Set Next Wednesday

The Student Mobilization Steering Committee meeting decided to hold a May 5 Moratorium Meeting on Wednesday, April 14.

At this meeting all student groups will decide upon a May 5 moratorium for the students killed at Jackson and Kent State last May 5. A leafletting campaign will take place next Tuesday to gain student support for the meeting.

An offer for an auxiliary Mobe office in the Pierpont dormitory at South West was accepted unanimously. "We should have an office in South West. This is where half the students live," said Claire Morarity, SMC spokesman.

Discussion on selling tickets to the April 24 demonstration in Washington, D.C. was discussed. A full staff was set up to man the tables at the front of the Hatch to make tickets available.

Do You Have Sickle Cell?

Because this disease strikes early in life, medical research is being done to find a cure.

Do you have sickle cell anemia? How do you know if you do or not? Some of us who think we do not have this disease probably have genetic traits of it in our blood. It is a known fact that sickle cess anemia is hereditary and the sickle cell shape of the red blood cell causes multiple reactions in the body which causes a victim to become severly ill to death.

We urge your support in the fight against this dreadful disease which may be passed on to our future generations. Contribute to a worthwhile cause. Make checks payable to Sickle Cell Anemia Drive, and send to Dr. Bromery's office, 375 Whitmore Administration building, UMass, Amherst, Mass. 01002. Also, there will be a radio interview with the committee members on WMUA Thursday, and Sunday. Please listen in.

Parking Problems Elsewhere

By TONY GRANITE
MDC Staff

A PAIN IN THE DRIVER'S SEAT is the way the Indiana Daily Student has headlined a commentary on "Parking On Campus" at Bloomington.

Which reminds of the sign a frustrated student planted in the full lot at Kansas State-Pittsburg, not too long ago. It read, "God is not dead, he just can't find a parking place."

SPEAKING OF FRUSTRATION..this headline drew our eye in the UUAlabama EXPONENT, this week: "Ants in your pants."

It covered the story of a survey of the new femine hygeine deodorant sprays so commonly advertised in campus papers.

"Three women tested several products and expressed their opinions of the effectiveness of each. One of the more positive reports was the discovery that one of the sprays will also kill roaches."

$260,000 LOSSES IN DORMS due to damages and thefts are being tallied at NoIllUniv, according to a story in their Vidette.

Malicious damage of some $200,000 occurs 80 per cent of the time in the men's dorms, according to physical plant spokesmen. But damage to women's dorms is increasing, they say, since guest hours have been initiated.

Losses are made up from dorm fees, so everyone shares.

FRIENDLY PARKING SUIT at Louisiana State has been brought by the Student Government Association against the Board of Supervisors to prevent them from establishing higher penalties for parking violations than state laws permit.

And they've won the first round, according to a story in The Daily Reveille, which reports that a local judge has upheld a 1958 statute that limits fines for parking violations on a university campus to $1. The University had raised its fines to $5.

SEX ED AN ANSWER TO SMUT? That's what the chairman of the US Commission on Obscenity and Pornography told 100 students at the College of Law at Oklahoma State, recently.

The Oklahoma Daily quoted William B. Lockhart as saying that "Sex education would fulfill youth's interest in sex information and help offset distorted views from pornographic materials."

F.B.I. STORY goes on in the pages of Lex, the weekly newspaper of the John Jay College of Criminal Justice in NYC. The paper is still getting letters protesting the withdrawal last Fall of 15 special agents who had been enrolled for training there when an agent criticized a professor for allegedly refusing to permit a student to respond to "derogatory" comment about the F.B.I.

TRADITION TOPPLING on the campus? The laboratory paper, Insight, of Fresno (Calif) State has surveyed 55 campuses at random throughout the country and has decided that "Traditional activities such as homecoming have decreased over the past decade. At least 90 per cent of the colleges and universities surveyed report some traditional activities have been phased out.

"Many people believe traditional activities are nearing an end, "Reporter Joe Motto says, "but a much better term would be: they are nearing a re-direction."

CONFLICT ROOM at Middle Tennessee State has been established to help the hordes of confused students who find themselves with snarled schedules.

Volunteers rescue students who find themselves left out of closed sections or with class hour conflicts or victimized by computers.

Cantor Edits New Book

Alexander Hamilton's views of the world, his political theories, and his principles of government are outlined in a new book, "Hamilton," edited by Milton Cantor, associate professor of history at UMass.

Insights into Hamilton are provided by his writings, writings of his contemporaries, and writings of modern historians. From "The Papers of Alexander Hamilton," which were published in 1774, is reprinted this statement, "No person, that has enjoyed the sweets of liberty, can be insensible of its infinite value, or can reflect on its reverse, without horror and detestation."

Hamilton the constitutionalist, the constructionist, the economist, is shown in many facets of his character Prof Cantor writes. "Hamilton's concern in 1777 was not protection of property so much as the 'substantial happiness' of the people."

"Hamilton" is published by Prentice-Hall Inc. of Englewood Cliffs, N.J.

English Dept. Coffee Break

Guilt Feelings Over Spilt Milk

MORE LIKE SPILT DIMES...One professor who got so guilty about threatening to expose a fellow professor for not paying for coffee and even stealing dimes, felt even worse when he got back $1.80 after asking for his ten cents. (MDC photo by Tim Fagan)

(Editors note: The following two notes were found on the English Department bulletin Board; The first on March 19, the second on April 2. The MDC staff feels that it points out a curious moral issue, whatever it is.)

I bought a cup of coffee the other day, leaving my dime in the kitty box, which was empty. As I left, a faculty member entered the lounge. He looked suspicious, so I waited around the corner until he left and then entered the lounge again, discovering that not only had he not paid for his coffee but that he had taken my dime.

I want my dime back, and I am prepared to expose the faculty member involved if I do not receive it by noon of the 29th.

Frank E. Keyes, Jr.

All of this week I have not been able to sleep because of guilt feelings.

I have reconsidered my original threat to expose the faculty member involved in stealing money from the coffee kitty in the faculty lounge, and I have decided that I am not only guilty of blackmail but blanket blackmail to boot. That is, instead of receiving just one dime, my dime that was stolen, I have to date received $1.80. This extra money has been sorely troubling me all the week long. I must tree myself if I am to sleep soundly again.

Therefore, I propose that these faculty members whom I didn't see rip off the kitty box leave a stamped, self-addressed envelope in my mailbox, and I will return their dimes to them. If this does not occur, my only recourse will be to set up a scholarship fund for needy professors.

Please respond this week. I am quite desperate.

Frank E. Keyes, Jr.

G.I.'s May Obtain Legal Counsel

The American Civil Liberties Union will provide legal assistance and council to G.I.'s participating in the anti-war activities on April 24. It is the right of any G.I. to participate in a legal and constitutionally protected anti-war activity.

Melvin Wulf, national legal director of the A.C.L.U., urged secretary of defence Melvin Laird to notify military commanders "to avoid interference" with G.I.'s involved in legal anti-war activities.

Any G.I. encountering disciplinary actions as a result of his legal activities to end the war may seek help from any chapter of the A.C.L.U. or by contacting their Boston office, located at 3 Joyce St. 227-9459.

Four-Course Load Pending Approval

By LINDA A. BALICKI
MDC Staff

The desire for increased efficient use of student and instructor time has led to the investigation of the possibility of instituting a four course per semester plan. A committee formed by Deans Allen and Alfange and headed by Professor William Naff of the Asian Studies Department has been charged with formulating a proposal to be submitted for approval.

Interest in the plan has come as part of a concern by some faculty members that the students time is fragmented into too many small pieces by the present five course plan. It is their feeling that this tends to cause the student to be ill-prepared, uninterested or unwilling to respond in class discussions.

If students are allowed more time to do outside readings and preparations, the committee members feel that under the four course plan students and faculty will gain more out of classroom discussions. It will also allow them to think about or deal with basic substantial questions which will give their experience more meaning. It would also serve to give them more time to devote to other areas of university life which are also important in the University experience as well as to further cooperation among the Five Colleges who are now hindered by different vacation schedules.

The committee feels that the adoption of this proposal will be dependent upon positive response by both faculty and students. For this reason the committee is presently preparing a questionnaire to be circulated to members of the faculty in an attempt to determine what responsesuch a proposal would receive.

Objections which the committee already envision include the threat which such a change would pose for new or small programs. It has been estimated that such a proposal would if adopted decrease the number of courses by twenty per cent and would also decrease enrollment in some courses by twenty per cent.

Other objections may be raised by departments whose majors are tightly structured towards year long courses with a set number of credits for the year. It would be their possible objection that their credit ratio may be upset by the program with its inherent switch to four credits per course.

Professor Marvin Swartz a member of the committee commented that the proposal would do much to further the adjustment of the University and its students in the educational field of today. He noted that many high ranking institutions as well as Amherst, Smith and Mt. Holyoke in this area have already adopted this proposal or have been operating under this plan for many years.

He feels that it is necessary for the University to seriously consider its position. They should realize that the student of today, if he is interested in academic work, he is interested in pursuing his subjects in some depth.

Therefore he must be afforded the opportunity to do as he wishes and to pursue his own personal interests in his course work rather than be committed to a constant completion of assignments.

Have Out Of Body Experience? Then WFCR's Looking For You!

As part of an independent study project, WFCR is looking for people who have had an 'out of the body' experience.

It is estimated that 20% of a college population has had such an experience, most people now knowing what it was. What WFCR is looking for is people who have gone to sleep and found themselves conscious of either being someplace or seeing their physical bodies asleep-in either case you must be sure that it wasn't a dream.

If you have ever found yourself having such an experience, you can do a service to humanity. Contact Ed McCabe at WFCR 545-0100. If he's not in at the moment, leave your name & number & he will contact you.

Reservations Now Accepted For Hardwood Workshop

Advance reservations are being accepted now for the 12th annual Hardwood Lumber Grading and Measurement Workshop at UMass on May 17 through 21.

The co-sponsors are the National Hardwood Lumber Association, The Massachusetts Wood Producers' Association and the New England Kiln Drying Association, through the Cooperative Extension Service and the Division of Continuing Education at UMass.

Walter Jenkins, deputy inspector for the NHLA, will be the principal instructor. UMass wood science and technology faculty will assist. The workshop will stress fundmentals of grading and will include practical applications of NHLA grading rules.

The workshop is the latest in a series of continuing education activities designed to improve the economic status of the wood industries in New England. Advance information and reservation blanks can be obtained from Professor John H. Noyes, Holdsworth Natural Resources Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, 01002.

TOPPLED BILLBOARD-Working swiftly with a chainsaw, unknown persons cut down this billboard and 15 others along Interstate 94 near Ann Arbor last weekend. Since Feb. 1 about 75 billboards, almost all of which were located illegally under a 1966 law, have been cut down during the night along southern Michigan highways.

Boston University Sets Up Student Volunteer Center

Boston University has been awarded a $159,000 contract by the U.S. Office of Economic Opportunity to set up a unique center to help other colleges and universities establish or improve student volunteer activities in their communities.

Boston University was selected from nearly 30 applicants to set up the National Student Involvement Assistance Center (NSIAC), according to its director, Scott McCutcheon. He previously headed BU's student volunteer program, Urban Educational Services.

Located at 704 Commonwealth Ave., the NSIAC will maintain complete files on student volunteer programs throughout the nation, enabling colleges and universities to share their experiences with each other and with schools establishing new programs. At present about 1,200 schools have such programs, but only about 100 are run by full-time directors as is BU's Urban Educational Services.

The NSIAC also will produce eleven program kits on specialized programs such as public and mental health, drug education, family planning and legal aid. In addition, it will prepare and publish a directory of all volunteer programs conducted at institutions of higher education throughout the United States.

BU's Urban Educational Services serves basically as a clearinghouse, matching student volunteers with community agencies or groups seeking student help. Sandra Shriver, the acting director, estimates that last year her office matched up some 1500 volunteers with jobs.

Urban Educational Services currently is providing students for such projects as working with the mentally retarded in the Walter E. Fernald School in Waltham; assisting with the paraplegic swim programs for Children at the Dorchester and Cambridge YMCA's, and serving on an emergency task force that puts dwellings into habitable condition at the request of the Boston Housing Authority.

Honor Societies Initiate Freshmen

Approximately six per cent of the freshman class at the University of Massachusetts who achieved records of 3.5 or above have been honored by initiation into the national academic honor societies, Alpha Lambda Delta and Phi Eta Sigma. Marilyn Hartman, '73, president, presided at ceremonies for 148 women and Dunne Fong, president of Phi Eta Sigma, presided at ceremonies for 68 men.

The two groups joined in the Student Union Ballroom for a reception, honoring the new members; parents and faculty guests also attended.

The excitement and satisfaction of doing one's own independent research was described by three seniors: Claudia Peters in pre-med; Alan Dodd, a government major, and Glen Balcow, a history major. They encouraged the freshmen to take advantage of Senior Honors and other opportunities at the University of Massachusetts to experience individual research projects under faculty guidance.

All three plan to pursue graduate studies next year. Claudia Peters of 669 East Pleasant Street, Amherst, will study at the University of North Carolina Medical School. The Hampshire County Medical Society has selected her for financial assistance because of her high potential in the medical profession.

Dean Helen Curtis and Dr. Sarah Lawall, Advisors of Alpha Lambda Delta, noted that this is the largest number and percentage of Freshman women to be eligible for the honor society. Dr. William Ross, Faculty Advisor for Phi Eta Sigma, stated this was also true of Freshman men.

Nixon Is Nuts

President Nixon proved last night, before millions of Americans, that he has all the credibility of Thaddeus "Ted" Buczko, the Massachusetts State Auditor, who tried to supply a Collegian reporter with the questions to be asked in an interview with him, just before last Fall's elections.

The President has not learned that people don't want to hear emotional dribble about a four year old whose father was killed in a war which would have ended two years ago.

People are not interested in being told that everything is going well and that the American people can be "proud"...that we have the character of a great people."--the American people have seen too much on their own T.V.'s to believe that what is important to America and the rest of the world is our being "proud" of the actions of the United States in Southeast Asia.

By making his troop withdrawal rates for the rest of the year, the only concrete announcement in what was billed as a "major" policy speech, the President has shown that he doesn't want to face what most Americans consider the greater issues. Not once did the President mention the policies in Vietnam, which have lead to the death, through air raids etc., of hundreds of thousands of civilians; not once did he consider that even the United States Senate doesn't believe that the United States is trying to defend "self-determination" in South Vietnam. The Senate established a "special" committee to make sure the administration doesn't tamper with the elections in Vietnam.

The actions being taken by the President are contrary to the wishes of not only the majority of American people, as the opinion polls show, but against the better judgement of some normally staunch Republican supporters in Congress and around the country.

One might envision the President under the control of some diabolical group of hunched men (who are forcing him to hang on in Vietnam to reap the benefits of recently disclosed oil interests) and then what he tried to put over last night would make sense.

President Nixon looked tired and ugly during his 20 minute rebuttal to those who "were wrong" about American intentions in Vietnam. In his own unifying way, he managed to call everyone whom thinks he is deathly wrong, "They", and those mythical supporters of his "Us". He once again tried to use the nation-wide T.V. networks to make political hay through hollow emtional appeals about a war which is all to factually real.

"Can you believe this?" the President challenged last night, with his "chart" to his right.

We cry in anguish, 'No, Mr. President. You just haven't given us anything to believe.'

Harvey, Diantha, Tom & Me

Even when I was back in high school, when I thought everybody hated me, I always had the feeling that people naturally have to belong someplace. I spent the greater part of my adolescence searching for where I belonged, for the place where I could be myself and be accepted. I don't think I've found it yet. I still do a lot of looking and feeling and learning. Someday I'll find it, I'm sure.

My search has covered a lot of ground, both physically and spiritually. The physical place never matters as much as what you get out of being there. The people are the ones who count. I think I've been lucky. I've met some great people.

The first one was a girl named Diantha. She comes from a reasonably well-off family on the North Shore where she's sort of the family black sheep. I met her the night that her sister and mine graduated from the same nursing school. We exchanged the customary, almost forced, promises to look each other up at school but we never did. Finally I bumped into her on a bus coming back to school after having spent the weekend at home. She was very intriguing and I wanted to know her. I kept pestering her to go out but she always put me off for some reason or another. I don't think she couldn't stand me or anything, she just didn't like to relate to people that way. We did go to Washington together for the November moratorium and once in a while we'd drop over to Thompson for a movie, but the whole thing never amounted to anything. It dragged on until February, me worrying what was going on in her head, but never having enough sense to ask her. I was almost relieved when I got the chance to fall in love with a more conventional girl, one I could understand.

But, and it seemed unfortunate at the time it happened, that didn't last long.

This new girl also came from the North Shore, but unlike Diantha she didn't go to school here. I had to be content with spending the weekends with her. To keep busy I hung around with a couple of guys in the dorm, Micky and Tom. Now, Diantha was well acquainted with grass. While I was still eating my heart out over her, grass was about the farthest thing from my mind. I'd never smoked it, didn't even know what it looked like or smelled like. Well, Micky and Tom changed that. We consumed copius amounts of the weed over the last three months of last spring.

Grass can change a person. I give it at least a little credit for helping to open me up. It's tough to sit in a guy's room and smoke his dope without at least interacting with him and learning from him. Though I didn't regret not seeing Diantha then, because I had someone else, I began to get a glimmer of understanding about her. I knew a little bit more about what made her tick.

The three of us had a lot of fun blowing grass for a while. Finally my new love asked me to stop, the day the Strike started, and I did. But then she did me in. I was left high and dry, stuck in an apartment in Boston and doing nothing but working and sleeping.

Tom used to drop around once in a while on his way to SDS meetings. He seemed very sad, not the same guy who once ran from Brett House to Brooks House naked just for a laugh. We both needed a lot of cheering up, but we couldn't get it from each other. One night we snuck into Harvard Stadium to see The Band. It was no good. Both of us were stuck very low and I couldn't see any end to it.

When I finally got a chance, I moved back home. Almost right away I was back smoking dope again, smoking even more than before. I didn't see Tom again until the first day of school, after I had had to tell my parents all about the dope because of a scare we were going to be busted. But by this time, early September, I had begun to move a long way towards Something. I was different. I smiled. I talked to people. I no longer felt like walking through department stores aimlessly, just to look at the people.

Tom moved upstairs in Moore House and roomed with a guy named Harvey. I go up there every night, partly because I have to because Tom freeloads his breakfast off me, but also because I'm at peace when I'm up there. Harvey calls the guys that live near him "the Family." I can feel something good there. I can now see a lot more about the way things are, or because I think that this whole thing is good, it seems more the way things should be.

Tom and I have both changed. He no longer subscribes to "The Militant", no longer troops around shouting "Out Now" and all the radical jargon. You talk to Tom or Harvey and there's something honest about them. I suppose that's what had me whirling around trying to find a spot to call my own. Honesty begins at home. I'm still trying to find what comes after this first step, but I'm no longer in such a hurry. I've discovered that, trappings and situations aside, there's a lot of good in being with people you care for.

Zeyda Leyda Schiksa

This is Chasbourne Ziegfield III, from WMDC, reporting from the plush Commonwealth Room in the annex of the new 24 million dollar Campus Center Complex in Amherst, Massachusetts. I am here today for the initiation rites of the freshman women's honors society, Zeyda Layda Schiksa.

More than 150 virgins, selected for their intellectual pursuits, are filing slowly and solemnly into the room basked by the inviting red light of three candles. Surrounding the girls are parents, relatives, and boyfriends, craning their proud necks to catch a fleeting glimpse of the initiates who are clad in the latest chic gowns from Kracker Jacks.

The audience is hushed now, as the President of Zeyda Layda, brilliant Mary-Elizabeth Cohen, begins the sacred oath. Let's listen:

"On my honor, I will do my duty to God and my honors society, and to obey the Zeyda Layda laws; to help other people at all times; to keep nyself physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight."

That was the Zeyda Layda Schiksa oath being administered to 150 new members. As the applause dies down, Dean of Honor Phyllis Lactic walks to the podium to begin her keynote address.

"As you stand here today, girls, you are observing a most honored tradition. You have achieved intellectual maturity, and have demonstrated it to your teachers and parents by obtaining the largest grades and points in the University. That is no small accomplishment. But neither is it a big accomplishment, for veritably, you have just begun on your holy quest of accomplishment. Some of you, no doubt, will achieve your bachelor's degrees and graduate our School. Others of you will go on to better things and get your master's degree. Finally, the very best of you will "stick it out", as the colloquialism goes, receive your doctorates, and become pregnant. Thank you for everything."

Dean Phyllis Lactic, a real pro of a Dean, has just concluded her keynote address, and is now rising to the occasion of pinning Zeyda Layda pins on the new members. In the address, she lauded the honors girls for grade-grubbing and bullshitting, and ended with an emotional appeal for Zeyda Layda Schiksa women to get married to doctors.

WMDC special Zeyda Layda Schiksa coverage will continue with quartered cucumber sandwiches, fruit punch, giggling, and inane conversation in one minute, when the afternoon tea begins. This is Chasbourne Ziegfield III.

Thunder shrieks across the land
As dust flies boldly towards the sky.
From blue to brown
The heavens change
For monsters creep across the World.
What be these monsters roaming 'round
Of steel and strength beyond compare;
'Tis warlord's ways
To make you see
That mortal's lives are ruled by these . . .
So peace on Earth is far from real
Or doesn't show it's timid face,

For peace to be
The World must see
And rid us of these thunder steel.

Letters To The Editor

Bob Replies; Trotsky Lives; Sid Tries

To the Editor:

When I submittee my April 6 letter criticising Richard Ryan's attack on the 1,450 veterans at UMass who have chosen either by design or indifference not to become involved in the "Veterans for Peace" movement, I expected the issue to die right there. It didn't. Now I am accused of "creating a fog," "committing a sin of omission" and "in my Diarrhea of the mouth" leading much "sheer nonsense."

If Bill Staton and Dick Ryan's convictions and idealism motivated them to create a "nonpolitical veterans resistance movement to the war, their lack of vigilance in monitoring its original aims continues to be "rewarded" by a compromised position and (an understandibly) poor response from the very group it seeks to organize. The architect of the compromise, Bernie Lougee, the "Vets for Peace" co-chairman also sidelines as a MOBE chieftain and YSA lackie. Where others are "committed"; Bernie is simply "opposed" (to everything). If you would take the time to listen to him and distill his message you will have the familiar dehydrated, nihilist bullshit. His contributions to your group are legion, in the main, he is responsible for the groups lack of effectiveness.

Can you understand that because the "Veterans for Peace" has become affiliated with these leftist groups, many veterans see you and them in the same light? Can't you understand their "pig in shit" affinity for any issue that has sufficient national exposure to offer a chance to stir up more trouble. The aim of the vast majority of these groups is not to offer assistance in solving these "issues", only to aggravate and inflame then, all the while luring the gullible, the romantic idealists, and the fools into thinking the "only solution" is to trash the country. Is that your aim too?

If you are sincere when you want the ex-GI's here to join and participate in your group, then offer them a chance that doesn't compromise them.

Make a purge yourself--ask for Lougee's resignation, and the resignation of anyone else who has designs on ruining the single aim of your organization. I'm coming on April 8, at 7 p.m. to room 170-172 to listen to you. I hope every one of the other ex-GI's who is concerned, though not committed yet to a peace movement, will also join with me to listen.

To the Editor:

Many students have expressed discontentment with the impersonality of the University. They have complained about being "just a number", or coldness and superficiality among their fellow students, and even loneliness on our metropolis campus. Yet many of these same people put down the Greek way of life.

How many of these people have looked into or tried fraternal living? Inherent in this form of communal living is friendship, understanding, and acceptance for the individual that you are. Fraternal living offers so many other things too, such as personal expression and development, and even interaction with today's problems outside the campus through service. The bonds of brotherhood and sisterhood not only provide social opportunity but more importantly expansion of concern and understanding towards others.

Although I am not a Greek I have been associated in many ways with Greek living for the three years that I have been on this campus. I have experienced and taken part in all the activities and emotions which I have just mentioned and have found the experience to be much more than a few hundred typewritten words can come near to expressing.

Mary L. Hale

To the Editor:

In a letter to the Editor of April 6, Robert A. Corey stated that he and other veterans have withheld support from the "Veterans for Peace" group of this university because it "has been bastardized by the presence of an alliance with the MOBE and YSA. It's scheduling and activities are steered....by the interchangeable flunkies that control these latter two groups."

Since its publication other letters have appeared which deny YSA "control." Yet if one were to investigate the leadership of any of the four most active groups on campus he would discover some similarities. Sidney Finehursh, Claire Moriarty, Bernie Lougee and Jane Roland share among themselves leadership positions in YSA (Mr. Finehursh and Miss Moriarty), the MOBE (again Mr. Finehursh and Miss Moriarty), Veterans for Peace (Mr. Lougee) and Woman's Liberation (once more Miss Moriarty and Miss Roland in her debut).

It seems more than coincidence that Mr. Finehursh, Mr. Lougee, Miss Moriarty and Miss Roland share in common membership in the Young Socialist Alliance (YSA). There is, of course, no reason why the USA, a Trotskyite communist group, should not seek to control and steer all these organizations. It is a political group seeking to impliment its program through any means and any organization.

But for some to claim that the few YSA members in each organization disproves the charge that they are USA controlled is deceptive. My own experiences in the militant left (which included working for a group of American deserters and resisters to military service in Montreal) makes me well aware of the possibility that a dedicated group can "steer" and "control" a larger group if it can seize the leadership positions of the larger group and, therefore, make "administrative" decisions. YSA has certainly been attempting this.

The problem, then, for persons like myself (and possibly Mr. Corey) is thus: Knowing that the Trotskyite concept of party membership demands supreme loyalty to the party above all other interests, i.e. YSA above all, how can I support any group whose leadership is YSA controlled if I no longer believe in socialism and never have believed in Trotsky? If I lack organizational skill I must remain silent, or better, reinvest my faith in the system.

Finehursh, Moriarty and Company will understand if you sign me

To the Editor:

Red-baiting is the refusal to deal with the political arguments of a group or an individual and instead substitute name calling in order to conjure up false images of behind the scenes manipulation. The argument that the anti-War movement demand immediate withdrawal is answered by the red-baiter saying there are "Reds" in the movement. ("The 'Veterans for Peace' movement on this campus has been bastardized by the presence of an alliance with MOBE and YSA.") The argument that decision making in the movement should be made democratically is answered with the phoney assertion that "Reds" control the movement. ("...the interchangeable flunkies who control these latter two groups.") The argument that socialists have the right to participate in the movement and to be democratically elected to leadership positions is answered by illogically castigating the motives of socialists: they aren't really against the War; they're just against U.S. imperialism. ("Many of us would flock to a valid peace movement.")

The MOBE and Vets for Peace have no position on the question of the role of U.S. imperialism in the War. They have no position precisely so that people with different positions on this and so many other questions can still unite on the one thing they can agree: immediate and total withdrawal. YSA does have a position on U.S. imperialism and if anyone disagrees with it let them state their reasons, not imply that opposing the murder of hundreds of thousands of victims of U.S. imperialism is somehow an invalid reason to oppose the War.

Socialists did not decide that the U.S. should pay 80% of the costs of the French colonialist in Indochina in 1954. Socialists did not prompt President Eisenhower to say 80% of the Vietnamese would vote for Ho Chi Minh. Socialists did not intervene with troops in a Civil War 5,000 miles from their borders. Socialists did not decree that the only common feature of the countries in the so called Free World (South Africa, Spain, S. Vietnam...) is the right of U.S. businessmen to freely invest and reap profits. If anyone disputes these facts let them display the evidence. But no one can say they are improper motivation to oppose the bloodbath in S.E. Asia.

Red-baiting has long been a means to discredit, divide, and destroy movements for social change. It became particularly popular when it was used to galvanize public support for the post-War American foreign policy which led from Korea to Vietnam. Some politicians discovered they could build entire political careers just on the basis of red-baiting and the people who were killed, imprisoned, or had careers ruined as a result.

We socialists will not be intimidated by the tactics and arguments of Joe McCarthy. We will continue to give full and unconditional support to the anti-War movement to bring all the troops home now. And we will fight to keep the movement from being divided and destroyed by red-baiting attacks.

Editorial Points

The Amherst College administration was apparently upset about the possibility of something happening at the televised presentation of one of the Nixon administration's representatives last night at Converse Hall. They didn't even want to admit the press, which the press resents, as an unnecessary impediment to the accurate reporting of news worthy events.

If you're planning to write a letter to the Collegian, be sure to include some catchy phrases which will impress the reader. But if you can't think of any offhand, maybe some of the following multifarious floridities (I just had to get one in myself) from past particles in the MDC will give you some ideas. Self-appointed Christ figure...saviours of the status quo...great island of open-mindedness...propagandize my own brand of sexist bigotry...quasi-intelligent, semi-illiterate...our quintessential little world in the valley..self-styled radical...semi-concerned radical...white pseudo-radical...subjugation without representation...moral genocide...antediluvian mentality...confortable chauvinist sex indentity....absurdist....the vibs of tolerance, pacification, paternalism, and patronage...ragged, aspiring intellectuals...unkempt, inferior, surrogate students...faceless anonymity...Peace.

Love Me, I'm A Liberal

To the Editor:

As a firm believer in civil liberties I certainly sympathize with the problems of the Blacks, Puerto Ricans and other minority groups, however there is one group who faces more prejudice and has had less attention than even the Blacks. That group is the young i.e. those people under 21 years of age. In order to illustrate the plight of the young, let's take a typical 19 year old college student as an example. He alone, out of all the other age groups, must register for the draft. Until this year he could not register to vote which makes the young the last group to attain suffrage). He also does not have equal protection under the laws--he is too young to drink yet he can stand trial as an adult for possessing alcohol; he is barred from certain clubs, movies and other similar places because, although he has more education than the average American man, he is considered to not be "mature enough" to cope with these experiences; if he decides he would like to earn some money and applies for a job he is often told me must cut his hair, even though the length of his hair does not hinder his performance on the job. It seems as though the establishment of legislators want the young man to bear the greatest responsibility (that of defending "his" country) without sharing the "rights and privileges" he is supposedly protecting. I would like to suggest that all you dedicated liberals make the civil liberties of the young your next objective.

Disgusting Apathy

To the Editor:

South West is a big place. In an area of approximately one square mile, 5600 students are crammed into 22 story skyscrapers and a number of low rise dormitories. Among these brick giants sits a small log cabin appearing very out of place among the brick and cement of South West.

I attended a meeting at South West Tuesday night as a reporter for the Daily Collegian. There Dr. Bromery and Mr. Campion met with 25 students to talk about problems of South West. Surely, in an area such as South West there must be problems confronting those who chose or were forced to live there. Yet only 25 students out of 5,600 could find the time to attend. Are the rest of you South West students happy with the present conditions or is it that you just don't care? At the meeting, a lot of good ideas and constructive criticisms came out. At first it was slow to get the ball rolling but once people started rapping, a lot of good ideas came about fast and furiously.

I left the meeting feeling that this type of discussion was well worth it and that it was an invaluable aid in helping to restructure Student Affairs at this University. On my way back to the Collegian office through a suprise April snow storm, I passed the log cabin, it's broken door creaking in the wind, with swirls of snow blowing into it. Last Spring this cabin was built by many students in an attempt to make South West more human. It was to be a place that students could call their own. Yet Tuesday night when people had a real chance to change South West only about 25 people seemed to really care.

Dwight MacDonald Talks On Art And America

By BOB NESTI
MDC Staff

"The Collegian's not very good," Dwight MacDonald said sardonically as he moved his revolving chair back into the middle of his narrow Bartlett office. Something physically of a cross between Kris Kringle and Burl Ives, he relaxed his large body and gave an exasperating little laugh. "I rarely see much in the paper worth reading," he explained.

DWIGHT MACDONALD

Dwight MacDonald has always been vocal with his opinions. Since the 1930's he has been one of the leading critics of American culture, from politics to films. He now teaches both here and at Yale while residing here in Amherst.

MacDonald said he liked teaching at UMass and found, except for the Collegian, the campus most "exciting". "There's always an awful lot in the way of cultural events in the five college area."

For six years MacDonald was film critic for Esquire Magazine and a book of his criticism was recently published in a paperback edition. He called the quality of films today "terrible" saying the last "great period" of films "ran from 'Wild Strawberries' up to '8 1/2'."

"These films," he said, "were on the same level as those in the great Silent Film period beginning with Griffith's 'Birth of a Nation' and continuing through the Twenties."

His interest in films has led him to help program a number of silent Surrealist films for the Dada Art Festival, April 20-May 8, (see related article below).

Long a critic on American culture, MacDonald finds the reaction Americans have had to the Calley case "disturbing." He cited a television program which showed a burly Southerner speaking in defense of Calley and thought it "really weird." "It was as if he was saying 'Free Bobby Seale'", he said.

MacDonald thought the reasons behind the 'Free Calley' movement probably lie with the mechanics of the mass media. "It must have news, he said, it must have heroes" and Calley has become one "do to the mechanics."

MacDonald reflected on the Student Strike last spring calling it "rather successful", despite the general lack of Student participation in politics this past year.

"Nixon did get out of Cambodia," he said. "There has been a change of tone towards student dissent and it managed to muzzle Agnew a little bit."

"Students," MacDonald maintained, "have short attention span. They were very excited for a week or two" until they either "relapsed into apathy or became radicalized and unwilling to work within the system."

MacDonald thought it interesting that the "elections did do well through no fault of the students."

"The Middle Class," he said, "has a rudimentary sense of survival" and the election results reflected this. "It is apparent that getting out of Vietnam immediately is becoming the majority opinion."

As we left, MacDonald mused on just how the interview would be written. His only previous encounter with the paper was when he spoke at an anti-war rally in Amherst and this paper's reporter went home early because it was cold, and so he was wary. He thought about this until he was down in front of Bartlett Hall and realized he was walking in the wrong direction.

Capitalism Gets Shafted

Major Barbara-a dramatized discussion or debate attacking the problem of organized charity-will be presented by the UMass Theatre on April 14, 15, 16, 17, at 8:30 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium.

Major Barbara, a comedy by George Bernard Shaw, is the story of Barbara Undershaft, who, joins the Salvation Army and becomes anti-capitalistic. She is opposed by her father, Undershaft, a munitions king and armament manufacturer who encourages the development of a capitalistic society indifferent to spiritual values.

Barbara, advocates refusing money offered to the Salvation Army by her father and Bodger, a liquor magnate. Later in the play, however, she is forced to observe:

> I was happy in the Salvation Army for a moment. I escaped from the world into a paradise of enthusiasm and prayer and soul saving, but the moment our money ran short, it all came back to Bodger: it was he who saved our people: he, and the Prince of Darkness, my Papa. Undershaft and Bodger: their hands stretch everywhere: when we feed a starving fellow creature, it is with their bread, because there is no other bread; when we tend the sick, it is in the hospitals they endow; if we turn from the churches they build, we must kneel on the stones of the streets they pave. Turning our backs on Bodger and Undershaft is turning our backs on life.

Director Doris Abramson has high praise for the kind of ensemble playing that has developed during rehearsals. "This is my favorite of all Shaw's plays," she recently said. "It is a lively, at times maddening debate about money, power, ideals, and public and private values. Relevant? I should say. Shaw may not really have had any more answers than we do, but he sure shares a lot of out questions."

Setting is by Jeff Fiala; costumes by Liz Weiss; lighting by Paul Wonsek; and technical direction by Nicholas Scott.

Tickets for Major Barbara can be purchased at the Bartlett Auditorium Box Office, or by calling the box office, 545-2579. Admission is $1.75.

Dada Arts Festival

A Rare Golden Age

The curator of one of America's three top film collections will be visiting the University campus May 5th, bringing two rare films under his arm. James Card, curator of Eastman House in Rochester, N.Y., will bring with him what is probably the only print in this country of Luis Bunuel's The Golden Age ("Age d'Or, 1930) and the Futurist film Thais (1916) by Anton Giulio Bragalia.

Mr. Card's visit was arranged as part of the Five-College Dada-Surrealist Festival (Apr. 20-May 8) by Dwight MacDonald, eminent film critic and visiting professor, who will introduce the films. On May 6th, Mr. Card will visit Smith College.

The Golden Age, perhaps Bunuel's finest film, is generally unavailable in this country, according to the Museum of Modern Art, because Bunuel has withdrawn all copies of it he could get his hands on under threat of excommunication.

On the same program is expected to be shown the Watson-Webber "Fall of the House of Usher", the same producers' "Lot and Sodom", and the second half of Buster Keaton's "Sherlock, Jr.", which Mr. MacDonald calls an example of "folk surrealism."

Anyone who would like to do projects/demonstrations, receive guest artists, do publicity, translate from French and German, put up exhibitions, act, do research, etc., etc. for the Dada-Surrealist Festival is invited to a meeting this Friday at 3:30 in the Nantucket room of the Student Union.
